SATURDAY - JANUARY 5 - 1918

The New Year

IT is only in the mood of thankfulness for the good things of the past which we have wasted but which, in God's goodness, we know to be ours still for the asking, that men and women can see in each coming year new hope. We cannot say over too often upon our knees what the Gospel of Christ has brought to us individually, to our homes and to the world. At the close of every old year it chastens our pride to tell over these lavish bestowals of goodness, and at the opening of another year to be reminded of them cleanses our desires.

It has been good to be alive while we have known that Christ, too, lives in the world. Those who have borne most of suffering and self-denial that they might do what He wishes have the right first to speak their words of thankfulness. They understand Him best. God never parts with His finest gifts to men on easy terms. Would we wish Him to do so? Those who have journeyed far over the roughest roads to come near Him have said without faltering that they would not have it otherwise. He has never let brave men think that hardship is a tragedy and pain a total loss.

But nothing, perhaps, so fills the heart with gratitude to Christ as does the thought of the precious truths He gave us to teach our children—His children, for we gave them back to Him, and they are ours only with a sacred debt and obligation. However pitifully we ourselves have failed, we are always at our best when we ask for gifts with which to bless the children of the world. In the prayers we make for them we discover what we ought to be. How easy it is to say over the graces that make men and women lovable and the world a livable place, kindness and truth, purity and reverence; these are the gifts that discover to us the uses of all that we possess. Without them we are slaves of our abundance.

And we know ourselves too well not to know that sin will spoil many a day this coming year as it did last. God and our fellow-men will have much to forgive in us; but we can resolve that the sins we blindly, hastily or wilfully do will be the lesser sins of those who, even in their error, hold fast the hand of Christ. It isn't the sin that separates us from the love of God, let us be sure of that! It is our self-sufficiency. So as we go forward into this mysterious and fateful year of the world's life, let us ask Him to cleanse the thoughts of our hearts, that we may perfectly love Him and worthily magnify His Holy Name.

The Fear of Living

WE commend to our readers Mr. John J. Chapman's article in the present number of THE CHURCHMAN. Its emphasis should recall thoughtful Christians to a view of life that is fundamental to our religion. For in no way does the weakening of the Christian instinct more unmistakably manifest itself than in men's attitude toward pain and death. The test of materialism is not the energy with which people throw themselves into industrial pursuits and the amassing of fortunes; it is whether they have in their spiritual make-up the stuff of which martyrs are made. Are they afraid of hardship, pain and death? Do the prolongation of life, the avoidance of suffering become the passionate aims of their existence?

The shock of the War brought millions of Christians the world over face to face with the elemental fact of death. In an instant, families living sheltered lives and guarded from harsh things as effectually as an assiduous medical science could guard them were compelled to react, either as Christians or as materialists, upon the fact of suffering and death. The issue, so suddenly forced, brought a revelation of which no country need to feel ashamed. How gloriously those who sent their sons, one, two, three, sometimes four, made their choice! Never an instant did they pause when the decision lay between ease and honor. So we knew that the timidity and spiritual languor of the past two generations was but a surface thing. It hadn't tainted the blood and corrupted the Christian fibre of family life. What we saw in England, France and in our own country was an enheartening revelation of a life sound at the core.

But some people, and many of them of pacifist mould, while appropriating the words of the Christ to defend their convictions, talked as if sufferings and death were the worst extremity to which civilized Christian men and women could be brought by hateful circumstance. In a sense this is an unfair portrayal of the pacifist's mood; for, of course, what the true pacifists bemoaned was the hate, the waste and the moral wreckage of war as well as its toll of suffering inflicted upon the innocent. But their phraseology, one must confess, was too often the language of materialism. Mothers, they said, ought not to be called upon to give their sons. Sons ought not to be required to endure the torture of the trenches. The world ought not to be subjected to this scourge of pain. Some of us shuddered a year ago when we heard a great political party here in America use as an election shibboleth the fact that America had not been compelled to give the life of one of its sons to war. But we know that the soul of the Nation was not so base as that shibboleth implied. Within six months of the election the country said: "Death does not matter. To die for what is right, to give our all is the most precious privilege of freemen." America had come to her own again.

But the proof of our materialism was not, as we said, in our energetic pursuit of wealth. It lay in our fear of living. "I do not want to see illness or death. Spare me the sight of everything ugly,"* Hedda Gabler remarks to her husband. What a symbol of the decay of religion and of the softening of moral fibre! But Hedda's tired wish expresses the materialism of our life before the War. What fears filled men's hearts, fear of living, fear of dying! How we quaked to hear the verdict of the specialist, while medical science and quackery battened on our fears! People were numbering their days by their pulse and blood pressure and consulting their diet lists as men used to consult an oracle. Longevity at any price was made to appear as man's highest good.

The pathos and tragedy of this attitude is its baneful effect upon the young. Christians have no right to speak as if the fine, heroic spirit that flashes into a white flame for an instant and then dies has met a tragic fate. Longevity is not the essence of eternal life. The man who goes chivalrously to battle—any battle that is a gift of self—is forever gloriously alive. Only the coward holds parlance with longevity. The deadest men we know will probably live on to a ripe old age. But what a life!

This Christian doctrine has higher implications than merely the making of reckless patriots. It impinges upon every hour of daily life. The curse of the generations before the war, as every doctor knows, was worry, timidity and morbid fears. Fear of what? Fear of living, fear of dying. Our precious bodies were altogether too precious to us. We lost our health in our anxiety to be well. We died prematurely in our anxious pursuit of a long life. Pitiable, disgraceful state for a Christian! Nothing of the martyr's zest for sacrifice there! Nothing of St. Paul's ecstatic will to lose himself in Christ, so that whether he died or lived, it was all gain!

*Quoted by Henri Bordeaux in the preface to The Fear of Living.

If the War cures us of this fear of living, it will have added immeasurably to the sum of human happiness; for fear, as St. John reminds us, brings only torment to life. "The great human cries in art are cries of strength and courage." Our sermons, let us be sure of this, touch most nearly the heart of life when they bring us fearlessness and courage. Churchmen ought not to be asking for comforting sermons only. We must not, like Hedda Gabbler, resent the knowledge of ugliness and death. Let us bravely ask what Christ would have us know and do. Nothing that is too cruel to happen in God's world is too cruel for a Christian to know.

Perhaps some of our congregations need this warning. The tired business man has made his needs and wishes known to the theatre. The result is the extinction of art upon the stage. He has indicated what he desires in fiction and the magazine. He has sometimes informed the preacher what sort of religion soothes and rests after a hard week of business care. But none of these men would really desire that worship should abdicate its purpose merely to become a relaxation after brain fatigue. None of us is so base a materialist as that. We have merely temporarily lost our hold upon the Christian view of life. This may be the fault of those whose business it was to teach religion. There never, we are sure, has been a sincere soul so tortured with life's cares and labors as not to respond to Christ's doctrine of the Cross. The Beatitudes were addressed to tired anxious people. But they were not spoken to soothe people. They were spoken to enlist men in a Kingdom that defies pain and death with the conviction that whether we live or die we are the Lord's.

An Epiphany If

JUST suppose, I only say suppose because obviously it is one of those friends of our school days, a contrary to fact condition, but just suppose the Church failed, during this year of our Lord 1918, to make a real step forward in the mission field, what could it say to the onward advancing world? That is the question which confronts those who are most concerned, and perhaps it would be helpful to consider for a moment the significance of the said supposititious question.

Here we are in the midst of a Winter of constructive discontent. No ordinary Pyrrhonism surrounds us. Men and women are not growling for the sake of hearing their gutturals. They are thinking out loud, and the noise that we hear across the world is the honest discontent of honest complainers who have suddenly been awakened to the superiority of spiritual over material values. Thus Russia's chaos is an exhibition, however distorted, of the truth that lay within Tolstoi's writings; the Orient's complaining is the coming to the surface of the verities that are concealed beneath the wordy analects of Confucius; Europe's and America's disturbances are the inevitable result of men's having been forced to choose between the creed of material efficiency as demonstrated in Germany and that of spiritual values as taught by Christ and His Church. Never before had the inevitable results of non-moral, non-Christian progress been laid bare. Today the whole philosophy of materialism has been stripped naked and humanity, seeing its logical implications, is quite as much up in spiritual as in military arms.

That is the situation which faces the Board of Missions. Spanish-American millions are awakening to the meaning of Democracy; hundreds of thousands of Chinese and Hindoos employed at the front are being introduced to ideas that will make more than revolutionaries out of them; rich men are recasting their system of values; poor men are perceiving that wealth as such brings no joy; colored peoples are enjoying the predicament into which their white brethren's scientific acumen has thrust them—all the world is mentally awake, all the world is rushing forward, all the world is unconsciously seeking what the Church alone can give.

Shall the Church stand still or shall it go forward—go forward not only in America but everywhere? In China, for example, where the spiritual awakening is perhaps most unsettling; in Japan, where the creed of Naturalism, on which they had been endeavoring to base their state, has been shown in its true colors; in Latin-America, where after one hundred years of indifference they have at last been shocked into a perception of the significance of Democracy.

Of course, the Church must advance and keep place with the world. The only possible excuse for its not doing so is, God forgive us, money! Aye, but to hold back and save our resources for that reason would bring us to the pass of that old King of Epirus, who proclaimed that his victory had been too costly.

Yes, we must go forward since everything above the earth and under the earth and on the earth favor and demand spiritual progress. The very elements are fighting for us! Let us not then be like timid navigators who fear to shake out their top gallant sails when they reach the favoring trades, or better, let us not be like blundering soldiers who refuse to press forward when they learn that the enemy's munition factory has blown up. It will cost in lives and money, but what did we begin God's war for? Of course, the Board of Missions must sound the advance.

Announcement

DURING the coming month, a staff correspondent of THE CHURCHMAN will spend a few days a week in Camp Devens, Camp Dix and the Camp at Allentown, severally, to study the moral and religious problems of these camps and to report to our readers in a series of special articles what our chaplains are doing for the spiritual welfare and comfort of the soldiers and the needs which the War Commission of our Church are attempting to supply. It is hoped, through this personal survey of the camps, that THE CHURCHMAN may be of service to the Church in the problem that just now is uppermost in the minds and hearts of church people. The first of this series of articles will appear in the issue of January 19.

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

The Coal Famine and Church Unity

POOR people in New York City and throughout the country are suffering severely from want of fuel. Conditions promise to grow worse as the Winter advances. Not only the poor but those who have money with which to buy coal are likely to endure hardship in the coming months. There are a good many partially filled churches in our large cities. Nearly every small town has several more churches than it can well support. Why not use the present emergency as a means of drawing our churches together into closer harmony and cooperation? Churches could combine, two or three in every neighborhood, either by holding union services or by using the same church building at different hours. A little inconvenience might be experienced, but that would be a negligible consideration in comparison with the dire discomfort and suffering of the poor. The cellars of some of our churches are filled with coal. The poor are begging for baskets of fuel and paying sometimes extortionate prices.

Here is an opportunity for effectively showing our patriotism. It is also an opportunity for the churches to draw more closely together.

Why might not several of the churches in New York City in the neighborhood of The Cathedral Heights worship in one church building? What a splendid object lesson in Christian brotherhood and Church Unity it would be, could various Protestant congregations be induced to worship together in the Cathedral, or be permitted to use the Cathedral at different hours on Sunday. Episcopalians who have regular church homes and who now frequent the Cathedral could worship in their own churches and make room for the members of churches that might be closed.

If some such plan of doubling up were carried out throughout the country, thousands of tons of coal could be used for the assistance of the poor. The plan is worthy, we think, of immediate and thoughtful consideration.

An Epiphany Retrospect

IF a thousand years in God's sight are but as yesterday, it is only by surveying many yesterdays that we can adequately compute what permanent spiritual gains have been made by the race during the centuries. In Mr. W. J. Clennell's instructive little volume The Historical Development of Religion in China (E. P. Dutton Company) he describes the burial of the great conqueror Ts'in Shih Huang-ti. "It was in 209 B. C., a relatively modern time, full in the light of authentic history, that the mighty warrior was laid to rest under a gigantic tumulus—the largest artificial hill in the world, I suppose, 500 feet high and about two miles in circuit—in a labyrinth of underground passages, beside what is described as a 'sea' of quicksilver, intended to preserve the body for all time against decay, with many hundreds of the women and slaves of his court and a fabulous mass of treasure. And when the work was completed, lest after-ages should ever know the clue of that labyrinth, all the workmen, ten thousand in number, who had been employed in its construction, were driven into the underground passages and the openings closed for ever. That tumulus is there to this day, a few miles from Hsian in Shensi, for whoever shall care to explore its recesses, and whilst its construction is, as I said, the supreme and crowning instance on record of this sort of barbarity, it is only the greatest example among many."

Africa

MANY of the mission study classes this year have chosen Africa for their subject. This is not strictly orthodox, for the Educational Department of the Board of Missions has decreed that in the 1917-1918 classes we study the Bible as a missionary book, and we usually find that it is wise to follow the suggestions that emanate from that source. However, the fact remains that some, influenced partly by the fact that the subject assigned does not altogether fit in with their scheme of things and partly by the compelling interest of missions in the dark continent, have elected to study Africa. Doubtless Bishop Lloyd's departure for Liberia has been the determining factor in many cases. Those who choose the path of unorthodoxy usually find some difficulties. In this case it is a lack of suitable material. THE CHURCHMAN, therefore, even at the risk of an indictment for non-concurrence with the program laid down by the powers that be, announces that it will publish, beginning in this issue, a series of ten stories by Miss Ada M. Skinner, to be known as the Heart of the Jungle Tales. Suggestions for those who wish to use them in the classroom will be found in the Contributors' Column at the end of the paper.

Provincial Co-operation

AT the recent meeting of the New England Synod a report from the General Board of Religious Education was presented. "The time has now come", Dr. Gardner wrote, "when we should develop a common purpose, a unity of effort and reciprocal service between the General Board and the Provincial Board, and it would be a great happiness to me if this movement could be helped by New England." Accordingly he suggested that each year the Provincial Board at the meeting of the Synod receive a statement of the year's work of the General Board, and that in turn a similar statement of the year's work in the Province be sent to the General Board. Such an exchange of reports would knit the two bodies more closely together than has heretofore been the case.

Provinces were created in the American Church for the purpose of relieving General Convention of discussion and legislation that has to do with purely local conditions, and of providing bodies whose function should be to deal effectively with problems which because of their local character were often slighted in the rush of a triennial convention. It is no less important, however, that the local application of principles committed to such boards as the G. B. R. E., the Social Service Commission and the Board of Missions should be related immediately to those boards by the Synod. Dr. Gardner's suggestion is one which should receive careful attention. Among other things, provincial action might help to solve the vexed apportionment question.

Making for Unity

"WHEN in the history of the world", says a correspondent of the Y. M. C. A., "could there be seen the Roman Catholics holding mass, the Hebrews conducting their Day of Atonement Feast, the Episcopalians celebrating Holy Communion and the Protestants a union communion service under the roof of the Young Men's Christian Association on one day with never a jar of dogma, and each taking its followers into the presence of God by the route sanctified by its own faith? Never have we witnessed a more reverential, worshipful body of men as were celebrating the mass in an Association building on Sunday morning, at which a ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church had been the active usher and knelt in worship—a Scotch covenanter commended him for it. Douay Testaments for the Romanists, the Proverbs for Hebrews and the whole Testament for Protestants are distributed by thousands. And all met together in weekly conference on the morals and religion of the camp."

The Feast of Lights

IN many places the Epiphany is still celebrated as the Feast of Lights. Perhaps no such celebration is more significant than that at St. Augustine's School, Raleigh, North Carolina. The beautiful little chapel is lighted by the tapers which the worshipers, the students, the neighbors and one or two groups of visitors from other colored schools carry. Three of the students robed as the Magi enter during the singing of the carols, bearing the traditional gifts. Afterwards there is a procession with flickering tapers around the campus. To those who know the school and its half century of splendid work this Feast of Lights typifies not only the manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles on the first Epiphany but His continued manifestation through the lives of Christian men and women such as those who make up St. Augustine's jubilee honor roll in this their anniversary year.

Freely Giving

IF a need is known the American public generally responds with stimulating generosity. Amidst the many discouragements that beset us it is enheartening to note an incident which is typical of the way our newspapers frequently play the Good Samaritan. In 1912, The New York Times issued a list of the hundred neediest cases in the city. This list was furnished by the Charity Organization Society, the State Charities' Aid, the A. I. C. P., and the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities. $3,500 was received. Every Christmas since then a similar list has been published, and this war-year the response was something like $59,000. Instead of relieving one hundred cases, over two hundred individuals and families were put on their feet by a gift from their fellow-citizens which did more than merely tide them over temporary difficulty.

Spiritual Ownership

By THE REV. R. J. CAMPBELL

THERE are certain fundamental errors into which human nature is only too apt to fall, and one of these is the passion to possess. From one point of view, it is this passion to possess which is the inspiration of the present war; the nations are striving against each other to gain or keep respectively as much as they possibly can of the earth's surface and the sources of material wealth. Of course, this is not a complete account of the matter; the War is also a clash of ideals, a conflict of spiritual forces; but the passion to possess began it. Germany is the principal predatory power in this struggle of vast organized communities for a clearly defined end. Here was an empire born out of due time: the other great imperial peoples, and particularly Great Britain, had staked out the most desirable portions of the earth among themselves long before Germany arrived on the scene; there were very few pickings left. We in this country, having done most of our brigandage generations ago, and had our possession of the spoils sanctioned by time, have become quite virtuous about the matter and are horror-stricken at the wickedness of those who cynically lay violent hands upon other people's property. At the commencement of the War, Germany hardly made any secret of her intentions, and her publicists had been thrusting them upon the notice of the world for many years in advance of the catastrophe itself; she was frankly out for plunder. If she has moderated her objects now it is because she sees she cannot gain them by force. Nothing was ever more clearly avowed since history began than her reason for provoking hostilities; it was that she wanted a place in the sun, as she put it—or, in other words, a full share of the booty that had been seized by other hands. She felt herself strong enough to secure this. She believed herself to be the most materially efficient nation on the face of the globe and the worthiest to rule. England she despised as effete, decadent, unequal to the task of holding the sceptre of dominion over nearly a fourth of the globe and a fifth of the human race; she would wrench it from us. Probably she has discovered her mistake by now, but there was good ground for the assumption in the first instance. Russia she believed to be corrupt and France feeble; America she recognized as energetic but unorganized, and therefore to be easily dealt with when her turn came.

So the epic goes on. The invader determined to reduce Belgium to subjection for the sake of her ports; France was to be robbed of her rich mining and industrial districts which her conqueror had coveted ever since 1870; we were to be deprived of our Colonial Empire. Now that secret treaties are coming to light the world learns that the Allies have had their little ambitions too, most of them very natural and the outcome of the situation created by Germany's aggressiveness. Africa, the Persian Gulf, Mesopotamia, Syria—not to speak of Constantinople and the Adriatic shores—are to be parcelled out amongst the Governments leagued against the Central Empires and their satellites. There is one notable exception to these arrangements. America appears to be quite disinterested—notwithstanding M. Trotzky's accusation that she is fighting not for international democracy, but for commercial gains—and to be in the war simply and solely for an ideal.

What does all this betoken but that the modern man has the conviction firmly ingrained in his mind and heart that the main thing in life is to possess? To be happy one must possess; to be successful one must possess; to keep a footing of consideration or power among one's fellows one must possess. The newest communities believe this as intensely as the old. Australia and Canada tend to measure well-being in terms of material good just as we do. In time of peace war is continually being waged between man and man and class and class because of it, just as really as now, only not so bloodily. Competition in business, strikes, lock-outs, the perennial conflict of interests between employer and employed, the systematic restriction of output, and the like are all of the nature of war, and all spring from the desire to possess and the fixed belief that one can only possess at someone else's expense.

If we carry the same idea into higher regions it is no less insistent. We are exclusive in our loves, which is a different thing from being particularistic in the exercise of love; a mother's love for her children, for instance, may have aspects which are intensely selfish; our zeal for the welfare of those to whom we are attached may lead us to be unjust to others. We can be jealous, and mean, and spiteful just because on this plane also we too readily identify happiness with possession. When we lose a dear one by death or otherwise, it seems to us as though the loss were irremediable; something has gone from us and left us poorer, sadder than before. Heaven itself will not be heaven to us unless somehow that loss can be made good—we still long to possess, as indeed we shall, but on terms.

For here emerges a great principle in which the religion of Jesus is rooted, though we find it hard to learn and the world at large cannot as yet be induced to believe it. The holy Apostle St. Paul speaks of "having nothing and yet possessing all things". It is easy to grasp his meaning. On the plane of sense he had nothing that he could call his own, but he could not be prevented from discerning and appropriating the spiritual value of every mode of being with which he was brought into relations. Which really owns a landscape—the man who holds the title-deeds and has no soul above property, or the artist who can seize nature in her choicest moods and give to others something of his own vision? Which really owns a library—the parvenu who accumulates works in costly bindings to satisfy his own vanity, or the scholar who cannot afford to buy them but is familiar with their contents on public shelves? One step higher and we have learned the great secret. To forsake all is to acquire all; to ask nothing for oneself is to win the freehold of all that is. "All things are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." Be you never so willing to fling yourself away in the service of what is right and good, life is all the more yours.

And the final realization that awaits us is that being and having imply each other. If we can only get up to what Christ is, we possess all that Christ has. Not one ingredient of our joy will be missing, nothing wanting to our perfect felicity in Him. Our own awaits us, but we have to ascend to it and cannot claim it on any lower level than the highest. Nothing in the wide universe can then bar it from us.

YOUNG men of seventeen to twenty will soon be filling the workers' places vacated by those who have gone to the war. Even they will not fill the vacancy, for there is more work, not merely workers. Business will soon be calling for every lad of sixteen. They will find themselves out in the world-life unexpectedly soon. Even schools and colleges will not be able to hold them back. When they go, will they take firm-set character with them? If not, there is peril ahead.

Both psychology and experience teach us that sixteen is not ordinarily a settled age. What can we do to meet the emergency? For there lies in this situation a very real emergency to be met. Parents at least will realize it, if teachers do not. Clergy and the teachers and leaders of boys must take time to strengthen their influence over those who are now the younger lads. For, in general, the religious work of the Church with boys is weak.

Let us begin at once to plan and to upbuild. Who are the boys of thirteen to sixteen in this parish? Are their homes effective in character training? Is there some one who will devote himself to this special task? Cannot the parish leaders and teachers of boy-life at this period be drawn together in council on the matter? Investigate and act!—The Leader.

Faith and the War

By JOHN JAY CHAPMAN

THE world is in the grip of two cyclonic forces, the ambition of Prussia being the motive power of one, and the instinct of self-preservation in the rest of humanity the motive power of the other. Ever since the invasion of Belgium the area of the conflict has steadily enlarged, till what seemed a war has become an era of war. We are perhaps entering upon an epoch which will last for twenty-five years, during which the mental state and social condition of every man, woman and child in the civilized world will suffer a radical change. It is very fortunate that the aims and methods of the Germans leave no doubt as to the nature of their project. This project places their own will above every human sanction, and would banish God,—except the God of the Huns,—from human life. They challenge every man in the world, whether he be within or without their Empire, and bid him surrender his soul. It is this metaphysical claim which is the power behind their line of battle, and the force which opposes them is equally invisible and supersensual. The combatants who die in the struggle, and the property destroyed by it, are a visible fringe which betrays the gigantic and invisible conflict.

The Nineteenth Century has been the age of comfort and of scientific appliance, and upon these things men wreaked their religious impulse, little knowing from what source flowed the power which they felt welling within them. A spirit which dissolved all classes into a new brotherhood had descended upon us. The laborers were as plentiful as the harvest was great. All this activity was religious in its nature, though most of it was concerned with material things. The passing age has been steeped in materialism, and thus it comes about that the new religious fervor born of the war knows no language except the familiar cries of peace, progress, and prosperity. Our piety is preoccupied with the welfare of the troops, the care of the wounded, the succour given to depopulated provinces, etc. It is the activity of Martha. That this should be so is most natural. The deeper spiritual issues of the war are as yet imperfectly apprehended, and the churches do not seem to be aware that these matters cannot be expressed in terms of social betterment. Our churches are tuned to the old materialism, and are not yet vocal with the new war-music. The danger is lest the churches, by clinging to the phrases and formulas of the nineteenth century, lose the key to the future. It may be that the greater age which is now opening will be accompanied by a destruction of much that the nineteenth century regarded as the foundation of society. Unless religion discards the language of materialism, the churches may be left in darkness and despair even while the great spiritual light of the world is burning before them. When the war began many of us thought of it as a distant and transient thing. We adjusted our lives to it as to an emergency. As time wore on, however, the persistent influence of the dark onmoving cloud began to penetrate and to obsess every mind. And now each of us has come to feel that he has an inner relation to the tragedy which overshadows and swallows up his external relations to it. We are overcome by a feeling of awe and of helplessness, which, could we but know it, is the very elixir and antidote that nature distills in us,—the cure for the plague, the road to salvation.

In ordinary times men's spiritual knowledge generally comes to them through sickness or through grief. These things shut out the buzz and clamor of passing events, and open people's ears to the silent forces which really control their being. Now this great sickness of the war converts thousands daily, and one can hardly find a man who does not show signs of illumination. The young men, as of old, shine as the natural heroes of the race. Their readiness to die restores our faith in human nature. It reminds us that the sacrificial part is what counts in the spread of truth. This much we know, and we know little else, about morality and religion. To count the cost and dwell upon the life and property sacrificed in heroic action is to doubt the value of truth. To what better use could these young heroes and all this amassed wealth have been put? It was for this that they existed. As for the pain involved in their engulfing, as for the agony of the experience, this is a part of the regeneration. People seem to desire the power of Christ, and the benevolence of Christ, without the Passion. The thing cannot be done; and nothing but an age of materialism could have so softened the fibre of moralists as to lead men to think it possible. There is a species of tenderness towards human suffering which, if exhibited in the midst of an heroic crisis, turns into a morbid element. The best of men sometimes preach about the horrors of war as if they thought we suspected them of delighting in war. Having bathed all the mothers of the drafted men in tears, they think to lift the question to a higher plane by talking of the need to win the war. But it is too late. They have muddled the issue by commiseration, and no amount of reasoning will restore the temper of instinctive heroism to their words. Once dwell upon horror and indulge in analysis,—as Macbeth did,—and you confuse the conscience. Pathos is the enemy of courage. As for winning the war, the war is already won for those who died in it, and we do not need to wait for a Congress of Vienna to appraise the value of their service.

All these preliminary obeisances to peace which good patriots put into their war-discourses are done in the name of Christianity and on the theory that Christ valued peace above all things. The spiritual peace to which Christ refers, however, is a state of mind, not of politics. The error of Christian pacificism consists in this, that it attempts to define what is indefinable. Under what circumstances may I use force to protect the oppressed or to prevent some profanation? God knows; but there are times when I must. If this be not Christian doctrine then Christianity, or its interpreters, are in favor of suppressing a divine impulse. And the suppressing of this impulse leads to a sentimental attitude towards the value of life and property which is at odds with Christ's whole conduct. I cannot see that He valued His own life or that of others except as a means of spreading the truth which He taught. For this reason He heals the sick, for this reason He advises men to lose their lives that they may save them. For this reason His example has always made men disregard death. Death is a trifle.

As the War proceeds men will come more and more to accept it as a mysterious reality, a thing for which they are not responsible, except vicariously and by reason of the Bond of Evil that runs through human nature, uniting all men, even as the Bond of Good unites them. The bond of evil is the thing of which the doctrine of original sin was at one time the symbol. It is the consciousness that each one of us forms a part of the very evil which he would combat. And the rest of the old doctrines as to grace and redemption refer to the fact that in truth we do not know how to combat evil, whether in ourselves or in others. The very essence of evil we never quite reach with our understanding or heal with our remedies. But the effort to do so teaches us much. The very helplessness with which we are overcome proves to be a period of transition. Being helpless, we grow attentive to new vision. Being baffled, we grow wise. At last we come to see that our very desire to combat evil is in itself a part of that opposing element which alone overcomes evil. Our will must be dissolved in that opposing force. This discovery is conversion. The experience is common to every age, and has been expressed in many creeds and mythologies. Only God is good. To him we bring our ills, to him leave that problem of Evil of which those ills are a portion. What was once benevolence has turned into prayer.

The oppressive and terrible weight with which the atmosphere of the world is now charged is a measure of physical danger, not of moral calamity. The German peril, as it appears to our eyes, is a focus of egoism and self-will which is intensified to the point of diabolism. It is a knot too hard for us to untie. But in things of the spirit there is neither great nor small. The knot is not too hard for God.

In its inmost aspect the War is a vision,—a continuous and consuming apparition which burns with familiar truth. Men have only to look up in order to see it. They have only to repeat the Lord's Prayer in order to find the response to it.

The Octave of Prayer for Unity

By ROBERT H. GARDINER

THE movement for the visible reunion of Christendom progresses in almost every part of the world by efforts sometimes to reunite parts of one communion, sometimes to bring together entire communions not greatly dissimilar, and generally by a gentle, but somewhat skeptical, interest in the World Conference on Faith and Order. Seeing how deeply cleft our divisions are, dimly recognizing how ingrained in us are partisanship and sectarianism, pride of self-opinion and confidence in the powers of human wisdom, our interest in the World Conference is superficial and academic, because we cannot see any possibility of its accomplishing results. Few have taken the trouble to find out just what the aim of the World Conference is. Most people, if they think about it at all, imagine that it looks to some sort of diplomatic concordat, more or less widely successful human efforts to bring about one concession here, another there, to work at compromises which shall cover up, without removing, our differences. A compromise of any sort is seldom permanent, and differences which are merely ignored or covered up almost always break out again in a more aggravated form, for the only way to remove them is to face them squarely in Christian love and humility.

The World Conference movement is an effort to bring Christians of every communion throughout the world together in an earnest effort to understand and appreciate each other, and to give themselves to earnest prayer for power to see the essential value of the truths which the several communions think are held by themselves alone and on account of which they feel justified in standing apart from their brethren, and so, instead of lifting up the one Christ, presenting to the world His Church as seeming to be racked and torn by internal dissension. If Christians of every name will give themselves to real prayer for the vision of the unity which God desires, is it not to doubt the power of God the Holy Spirit to think that such a conference will be useless?

But we will not, we can not, give ourselves to prayer that is worth while, unless we believe that the object of our prayers is vital, and we have not yet seen that life, love, unity, all centre in and spring from the fact of the Incarnation, which is the foundation and hope of the World Conference movement. Invitations to co-operate in that movement are issued only to those Communions which accept the fact of the Incarnation, because such Communions can take literally our Lord's prayer for unity:—"That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me and I in thee, that they also may be one in us," and "that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me." So the unity we are to seek is the unity in and as of the Blessed Trinity. It would help greatly if we could understand that clearly, for then perhaps we could see that we can never reach unity by negotiation or any mere intellectual agreement, but only by losing our lives of self-opinion, of pride and prejudice, in the infinite life of God Who is Love.

And if it be true that God was Incarnate, in the Person of His Son, in Jesus, born of Blessed Mary, Christian unity has infinite depth and meaning. It is not merely an aggregation of separate units, bound together by considerations of expediency or human efficiency or similarity in taste or opinion, but of men glad to surrender themselves wholly to the infinite Life of God "that they may be made perfect in one", perfect to do His will, not their own. For love is the complete surrender of self, the effort to enter wholly into the life of another, as God in Christ entered into the life of men, that they might have power and freedom to be taken up into His Life through the Church which is His Body. And as love, if it be complete, is boundless, lifting the finite lover, freed from all taint of self, up to the realm of the infinite and eternal, where the true lover finds the true depths and infinite diversity of life, so the Holy Spirit of Love, sent by the Incarnate Son of God to dwell, if we will only open them, in the hearts of us His brothers, will teach us that in love, and only in love, can we find unity, the unity of life which is infinite diversity. So in membership in Christ, the Son of God Incarnate, the revelation of the supreme and perfect Love, we find the perfect unity of the Church, the Body filled, in all the diversity of its members, with the one Life.

The Christmas season should be given to deep meditation on the fact of the Incarnation that we may be filled with our Lord's desire for our oneness in Him as the potent evidence necessary to convince and convert the world. So filled, we shall be ready to join with Christians of every name and in every part of the world in observing the Octave January 18-25, 1918, as a season of special prayer for the visible manifestation of the unity of all the members of the one Christ.

There is so much to remember, and our memories are so short, that it may not be inopportune to say again that the Commission on the World Conference on Faith and Order has invited the Christian world to observe that period. Cordial promises of co-operation have been received from every part of the world from which mail can reach us and from members of every communion which comes within the scope of the conference.

The Sign in the Sky

By FRANCES BEERS

THE star of Bethlehem no longer gleams,
Nor can the wisest of the Magi tell
From whence shall flash again its golden beams
Across the night, to signal all is well.

But ever in the Western sky there glows,
As earth draws near the hallowed Christmas hour,
A lifted cross whose silver radiance shows
White as the heart of some celestial flower.

And eyes grown weary watching for the star
To lead them to the Christ, with vision dim
May follow that high symbol from afar,
So lifted up to draw men unto Him.

Peace may delay her promised reign benign,
No song of angels thrill the midnight skies,
But still in heaven there glows His star-wrought sign,
And man may find the Christ through sacrifice.

A New England Ministry

By THE REV. GEORGE HODGES, D.D.

IN A New England Boyhood, and in Memories of a Hundred Years, Edward Everett Hale anticipated his biographer. In the *Life and Letters there is a lack of background. The Boston of Dr. Hale's youth, the Puritan town, whose citizens, as he says, "lived and moved as if they were people of the most important city of the world", appears but dimly in these pages. And the men whose names are written in shining letters in our political and literary history, with whom Dr. Hale lived his long and useful life, do not come into these records so often as we might have expected. But this is because he had painted the background himself, with his own hand. The wise reader, who wishes to know Dr. Hale as he was in his family and among his friends and in the streets of Boston, will consult not only this biography but the autobiographical writings which the biographer takes for granted, full of light, and warmth, and color.

In view of the uncommonly active life of Dr. Hale, crowded with concrete and practical ministration, filled with the pioneer enterprises of Christian social service, it is interesting to find that he was first attracted to the ministry as a convenient profession for a man of letters. It seemed to him to afford abundant opportunity to read and write. "One prime reason," he said, "for my choice of my profession was my desire to be in a walk where I might press my general literature." And his son adds that at the beginning he "felt of the ministry that it afforded an excellent opportunity for a man of intelligence to lead an interesting life of literary occupation and social enjoyment, while being at the same time useful and helpful to all kinds of persons who were not so fortunately placed as himself". As a student in college he recorded in his diary his approval of a sermon in which the preacher criticised the clergymen who seemed to be more interested in slavery than they were in salvation, and to be better acquainted with Texas than with Judea. The preacher wished that Dr. Channing and other brethren would mind their own business.

Out of this unpromising beginning came a ministry in which the literary ambition was so supplanted by a consuming desire to set forward the kingdom of God that Dr. Hale's writings may be searched in vain for any paragraph which is literary rather than didactic. He exemplified the story that Coleridge once asked Lamb, "Did you ever hear me preach?" and Lamb answered, "I never heard you do anything else".

Dr. Hale might have been an eminent man of letters: he had the spirit and the ability. But he wrote not for the joy of writing, nor for the love of the truth, but for the purpose of bringing the truth to the service of life. Somebody asked him once what piece of writing he had then on hand. He said, "My sermons". Here again, he might have been a notable preacher, remembered as Beecher and Brooks are remembered. He had a style of expression so simple, concrete and direct, he had so rich a treasury of illustration, and the things in which he was interested were so large and vital, that his sermons, when he prepared them carefully, were great sermons. But he did not always prepare them carefully. Partly because of a natural facility of speech, but much more because of a continual occupation of his time in doing rather than in reading or writing, he preached unevenly—sometimes well, but sometimes not so well.

Dr. Huntington, afterwards Bishop of Central New York, whom Dr. Hale succeeded as minister of the South Congregational Society, wrote to him about the parish: "They like to see proofs that the minister is engaged in what he is about, takes pains with his preparation, studies his sermons, puts both mind and spirit into them, does his best. They like a good deal of pastoral attention." This advice rather dismayed the young parson, who had already begun at Worcester to take the whole community for his parish. He did not follow it. He attended to the needs of his people, and also to the needs of all the other people who laid claim to his sympathy and strength. He filled his engagement-book with promises to speak on all sorts of occasions, and on all kinds of subjects. He hated to say "no". It was not he who remarked that we are told to love our neighbor as ourself,—not better than ourself. He loved his neighbor better than himself. And this he did, so his critics said, at the expense of thoroughness, of accuracy, and of an abiding fame. Perhaps so. On the other hand, as this biography abundantly testifies, he influenced his own generation widely and profoundly. On the moral and social side he was the most useful man in New England. And he had a rich reward of gratitude and affection of which his biographer might have said more. People who knew him well, and people who knew him only as readers of his books or as hearers of his speeches, loved him.

Dr. Hale considered In His Name his best book. It troubled him a little to be known chiefly as the author of The Man Without a Country, as it troubled Mr. Aldrich much to be known chiefly as the author of The Story of a Bad Boy. But In His Name was a sermon in the form of a story. So was Ten Times One Is Ten. These books won not only readers but disciples. They stirred in the souls of thousands of young people a new desire to "look up and not down, to look forward and not back, and to lend a hand".

"Until 1861," says Dr. Hale, "I was only known in Boston as the energetic minister of an active church. I didn't want anything else. I believe now, as then, that if anything is going to be done, it must be done through that agency. Then the War came along." The War came, and gave the parish minister a new vision of the world in which he lived. It took him out of the service of the parish only, into the purpose to lead the parish to the better service of the whole community. In the experience of many young and earnest ministers the present war must be working the same way.

It is a curious fact that in all these letters Phillips Brooks is mentioned only once, and Mrs. Julia Ward Howe only once. They both appear,—or fail to appear,—on the same occasion. Dr. Hale invited them both to dinner to meet some Zuni Indian chiefs, and neither of them could come. Nobody would have any idea from the reading of this considerable correspondence that these names stood for any religious or literary values in Dr. Hale's generation. It shows how little importance is to be attached to the "argument from silence", as applied, for example, to the letters of St. Paul.

A Prayer In Camp

By AMELIA JOSEPHINE BURR

THEY are America's woman to me—
Mother and sister and friend;
The last it may be that I ever shall see
If France should mean—the end.
Send with my heart to the firing line
A memory holy, pure and fine,
Worth all that is mine to spend!
The blood of that heart shall stand between
Our women and all that is false and mean—
Guard me, O God, lest I leave unclean
Those I would die to defend!

Thou Hast No Time, Bright Day

By ELIZABETH CRANSTOUN

'TIS even so. Our bright day of Epiphany, our Feast of Light, does not belong to time, but to eternity, because the manifestation of God in Christ as the Saviour of the world is an eternal event, foreordained in the council of the Godhead before the foundation of the world, in full process today and destined to be enacted as long as there is a human soul to be led across the dreary desert of commonplaces to see Jesus and worship Him.

This is the glory and beauty of the Christian Year. It deals with eternal events which never lose their freshness or power because they are immortal and cannot be confined to a day or hour. But we have to grow in apprehension of the nature of these events until we reach the idea of the Church, and was there ever such a wise educator or such a patient trainer as this same Mother Church? When we were children she gathered us about her at the great festivals and told us the exquisite Gospel stories while we sang joyous carols in response. As we grew older the stories became visualized in beautiful living pictures and the long gallery from the majestic approach of Advent to the Ascension of our Lord and the Coming of the Holy Ghost became not Stations of the Cross only, but Stations of the Life of our Lord on earth, and we learned to worship in the spirit of each event. Lastly we came to see, so gradually that we hardly know when, that we ourselves are part of each picture or event just as truly as were St. Peter or St. John, just as really as were Mary of Bethany or Mary of Magdala.

We verily and indeed kneel at the manger and see the little Lamb of God. Perchance the baby hand touches us and a miracle is wrought. We join the groups of those who hear Him preach or listen to His parables, we too ask Him questions and are answered. When the shadows deepen we journey up to Jerusalem with Him, we are present at the first Communion of His Body and Blood. Our penitence deepens in the weighty moments under the dark olives of Gethsemane. We prostrate ourselves at the very foot of the Cross and are made clean from actual sins of lives lived here in New York today.

Ah, we have no need to envy the Wise Men, except for their obedience to the call of God. There is not a single one of us who has not his God-sent star to guide him to where the young child is. There is not one who may not, if he will, alight before the house in Bethlehem this Epiphany and entering behold and worship, for though some of us feel this year that we have only myrrh to offer, and others that they have only the gold of active service, yet in truth each one, the busiest and the saddest, will find when in the presence of Jesus that his treasure sack contains some sweet grains of frankincense.

All this is not a flight of poetic fancy, it is fact and common experience. "Fermes les yeux et tu veras".

Central New York's Campaign for Missions

By THE RT. REV. CHARLES FISKE, D.D.

IT is possible to raise money for missions in war-time. This was demonstrated beyond question by the missionary campaign conducted in the diocese of Central New York by the Rev. R. W. Patton, D.D., and the Rev. L. G. Wood during the last week in November. The complete returns are now nearly all in, and it is possible to give some account of the enterprise. Returns are not altogether complete, but with fifteen parishes in Syracuse, Utica and Rome directly participating and fifteen other smaller parishes and missions joining so far as feasible in the effort the total increase for missions and parish support will be over $40,000 in annual envelope pledges. Some parishes had not used the duplex envelope and it is, therefore, impossible to figure accurately the relative increase, but approximately the seven parishes of Syracuse gained $11,040.00 for church support and $5,194.00 for missions, and seven parishes in Utica gained for parochial expense $9,955.00 and for missions $4,747.00. The remarkable record of one parish in Rome, with an increase of 473 per cent. in missionary offerings, stands out as the banner record of the campaign. This at a time when in all three cities there had been numerous "drives" for the Red Cross, the army work of the Y. M. C. A., etc. The campaign has showed that Churchmen are acquiring the habit of giving and only need information about the Church's work to quicken in them a desire to give as generously for its support as they give to other things.

The campaign aimed at being diocesan-wide, and it had been my intention to have a Church educational week in five centres, one for each of the convocational districts; but this plan had to be modified because in several districts the men who had been relied upon to carry it through were engaged in war work and in their absence the others thought it best to postpone action. While, however, the plan for a diocesan canvass was not actually carried out, work was centered in three cities and from these it may be carried later into the rest of the diocese. Already the clergy of the Fifth District are planning to take up the matter at their January meeting.

The three cities which entered the campaign were Rome, Utica and Syracuse. In Utica and Syracuse there was opportunity to include nearby towns and villages in the educational week and, although distance made attendance impossible for all, delegations were present at week-day meetings and at the men's dinners. In Utica the parishes at New Hartford, Deerfield, New York Mills, and Whitesboro, and All Saints Mission, New Hartford, were so represented and at Syracuse delegations attended (and caught some of the enthusiasm) from Skaneateles, Fayetteville, Baldwinsville, Manlius, Memphis, Warner, East Syracuse, East Onondaga and Marcellus. This made a total of thirty parishes and missions, of which fifteen were actually making the whole campaign, one in Rome and seven each in Utica and Syracuse.

The war did, of course, affect the canvass to some extent. In Syracuse, for example, the chairman of the central committee, Mr. S. H. Cook, had hardly organized the work of preparation when he was called to Washington. He had able assistants, however, and in his absence the work moved smoothly under the vice-chairman, Mr. Whitwell. The secretary-treasurer was Mr. W. P. Baker, editor of the Syracuse Post-Standard. In Utica the Rev. Dr. Applegate was chairman, the Rev. F. C. Smith, secretary; Mr. W. F. Roberts, chairman of the men canvassers, and Mrs. J. M. Ross and Mrs. J. B. Murray in charge of the women. So efficient was the preparation that in one Utica parish, Calvary church, there was practically a double parochial campaign, the first a house-to-house visitation to extend personal invitations to the meetings and the second the regular every-member canvass. In this parish there was a total gain of over $4,000 in pledges, and as a result the vestry have voted to engage a curate. Zion church, Rome, will also have a curate for proposed advance work, so (Continued on page 33)

Democracy and the War

By R. FULTON CUTTING

WE have entered upon a great war to make "the world safe for democracy". But why should we make the world safe for democracy? How is it superior to autocracy? Is not the German government intelligent, honest and efficient? Has not the country enjoyed in the past twenty years extraordinary prosperity, have not its commerce and its industries increased by leaps and bounds? The question of unemployment has disappeared and emigration ceased. Its cities are well administered, their streets clean, law and order successfully maintained, public institutions admirably managed. Then why not autocracy?

We have awakened with a sudden shock to the realization of the actual significance of this apotheosis of efficiency. We have discovered its crass materialism and the fatal ambition to the gratification of which it has been intended to minister.

The German Emperor has insisted that he was a man of peace and that it has been due wholly to his efforts that European states have been prevented from flying at each other's throats for the past two decades. Perhaps he has been dreaming that he might be the instrumental factor in the resurrection of that epoch that Gibbon called the golden age of humanity, the period which elapsed between the accession of Trajan and the death of Marcus Aurelius.

For ninety years, as you remember, four great men successively wore the imperial purple and superimposed peace throughout the Roman Empire, then practically coterminous with the known world. The Roman Empire was the growth of generations; states and peoples had been added one by one. Many of these semi-barbarians speedily learned to welcome the advantages of Roman law and order and of authoritative government. But the Hohenzollern has been determined in his own lifetime to superimpose German authority and German arrogance upon nations more civilized and inspired with nobler ideals than his own. To this end his spies have infested every state throughout the world. His agents were found in the British Parliament, in the French Chambers and the Congress of the United States. German settlers in foreign countries were organized for military service, and then, with these preparations far advanced, the curtain rose on the climacteric on July 29, 1914. How close his arrow flew to the centre of the target we know, and how narrowly Europe and eventually ourselves have escaped from a bloody inoculation with the virus of German materialism. In naked hideousness autocracy has thus revealed itself.

But what of democracy? Is not the passion for democracy somewhat sentimental? Are not its qualities too transcendental to adapt themselves to so practical an age as that in which we live? We scrutinize our institutions too microscopically. We travel in the plain with a vision circumscribed by surrounding heights. We must ascend the mountain if we would get a comprehensive view of the meaning of our institutions. The local administrator or legislator engrosses our attention. We do not see the people as a whole. It was a favorite theory of Plato that the individual soul was too delicate and subtle to reveal itself to human investigation, but, said he, in the state we see that same soul magnified in proportions so colossal that we can readily discern its characteristics. It is thus that we must apprehend the American people. Democracy in actual operation is measurably inefficient, unscientific, its machinery is crude, its methods ill adapted to secure the desired end but—democracy has a soul.

Do we realize how our country has illustrated this fact during the past twenty years? In that period we have achieved in three acts a national altruism practically unparalleled in history.

First, the liberation of Cuba. When we had rescued the Cuban people from Spanish misrule we gave the island a hygienic scrubbing, delivering the people from the curse of endemic yellow fever. We advised them in the formation of their government, started them on the highway to prosperity by a rebate on sugar imported into the United States, saved them from an early menace of anarchic uprising and introduced the new state into the comity of civilized nations firmly established, independent and prosperous. Was there a statesman in Europe who believed that when we had dispossessed the Spaniard we would actually keep our own hands off the pearl of the Antilles? No doubt one and all expected to see it fall like a ripe plum into the lap of the American Commonwealth.

Second, the restoration to China, to be used for the education of Chinese youth, of a large part of the indemnity awarded us for the destruction of property occasioned by the Boxer outrage, and contemporaneously the successful protest made by our Government against the dismemberment of that ancient monarchy. You remember the deep feeling with which Li Hung Chang in his memoirs expresses his gratitude to the American Nation for the deliverance of his country when preservation seemed impossible, by its decisive interposition.

Third, the service we have rendered to the Filipinos. We have given to these people a splendid system of primary, secondary, industrial and agricultural education; we have built railroads and highways to develop the resources of the country; we have made Manila one of the most interesting and beautiful capitals in the world. We purchased the great estates of the Spanish friars to create a peasant proprietorship, which is one of the best foundations of a well-ordered society, and we have promised them an independence they are very soon to enjoy. Now we are placing the capital upon this pillar of achievement by entering into the world war, not for territorial aggrandizement, not for economic advantage, not for national supremacy, but to assure to the world the maintenance of the democratic institution the beneficence of which we have thus nobly illustrated. Is there a man here who can criticise our Government for failure to take advantage for materialistic ends of the opportunities of these two decades, or who regrets the self-sacrifice that has accompanied the national fraternalism which the American people have expressed in the incidents which I have recited?

But what is the personal significance of all of these events? How do they come home to the individual? This picture of the national soul that the incidents of the past twenty years have thrown in such glowing colors upon the canvas of American history, is it the picture of your soul and mine? Is the self-sacrifice, the fraternization, the generosity and courage the reflection of virtues which we exhibit in domestic, social and business life? We are a part of this composite soul; are the lines we contribute to its spiritual physiognomy those of dignity and beauty? Can a man be a democrat in public life and an autocrat in his own home? Can he be a purist in political science and a spoilsman in party practice? Can he impugn the honesty of the official and the legislator and descend to misrepresent his taxable income? My friends, the soul of democracy summons us to live for righteousness, truth and justice that we may be entitled to claim citizenship in this Republic of God.

To the extremities of the earth America is regarded as an Eldorado. The oppressed, the toiler, the unfranchised yearn to reach our hospitable shores. They have dreamed of a land of opportunity and find it also a land of fraternity.

A friend of mine, spending the Summer in California, was running his motor toward Los Angeles. He passed a man trudging along in the same direction. He stopped and offered him a ride and the invitation was accepted. The traveler had recently arrived in this country and could not speak in English. He was an Austrian. My friend's familiarity with German enabled him to learn much of this new American's (Continued on page 33)

The Liberty of Prophesying—II

By THE RT. REV. WILLIAM ALEXANDER GUERRY, D.D.

BUT if we are to set free the gift of prophecy within the Church, not only must we provide for the calling and preparation of our laymen to preach, but something needs to be done out of the ordinary to release the spirit of prophecy in many an earnest priest who is now held down by conventionality and custom, whose spirit is stifled within him by the length of the service, the necessity of making the sermon part of Morning or Evening Prayer and of compressing it within the traditional twenty minutes. The conflict between the claims of a dignified and reverent service and the sermon has often seemed irreconcilable. Either we must shorten the service in the interest of the sermon, or we must clip the wings of prophecy and curtail the liberty of the pulpit for the sake of those who come to church to worship God rather than to hear a sermon.

Our denominational brethren do not hesitate to say on Sunday morning, "We are going to church to hear preaching". They at least are consistent. They know what they are going to church for. The preacher also knows what the people expect, and as a consequence exerts himself to the utmost to meet the intellectual and spiritual demands of his congregation.

With us, however, there is no such clear-cut objective in the minds of the people. It is usually a mixture of motives which takes us to church on Sunday morning. Some go to take part in a reverent and beautiful service; while others go to hear the sermon. The problem, therefore, which constantly faces any man in our pulpit today who feels that he has a message to deliver is how to hold an even balance between these two perfectly legitimate motives which influence men in going to church: viz., the desire to worship God and the desire to hear the word of God preached.

There are in all of our churches many devout souls who go to church for the service, to whom the sermon is often a bore and a tax upon their patience and intelligence. On the other hand there is an ever-increasing number of people who will go to hear a strong, inspiring preacher, but to whom the service is often an embarrassment and a hindrance. We must never forget that the original and primary object of preaching is to convert men, to arouse the indifferent, to convince the unbelieving, and to bring the sinner to repentance. When the preacher, therefore, faces a congregation on Sunday morning, the majority of whom have already been confirmed and are communicants of the Church, and who would probably attend the service whether he preached or not, he is often at a loss as to what to preach about. There is no clear objective in his own mind. No compelling challenge; no overpowering human need, which rises up out of the heart of the congregation to greet him as he stands up to preach. Cannot something be done to improve this condition?

There seems to be no alternative other than to separate more frequently than we do now the service and the sermon. Take for example the celebration of the Holy Communion, in which the central and controlling motive is worship. Why should it be thought necessary to introduce into such a glorious service a sermon? On the other hand, why could we not have a service of preaching, in which the preacher would be given time and opportunity in which to deliver his message, and in which men's minds would not be divided between the often conflicting claims of worship and the equally compelling need of exhortation and instruction in the word of God? The logical and natural division is to have services for worship and services for preaching.

Could we not begin by making the distinction in the service itself between the priestly and the prophetic office? A generation or more ago that distinction was made in every church throughout the land. The priest at the altar when beginning the Communion Office would always retire to the vestry room before the sermon and taking off his stole and priestly vestments would put on the preaching gown. Can we not go one step farther and permit the sermon to be delivered at the conclusion of the service? Where a man is a gifted preacher and has a message to deliver, let him conclude his service of praise and worship; let the choir retire and the congregation be dismissed; after a brief interval let him enter his pulpit. At once how changed would be the whole attitude of the congregation which is there to hear him! The preacher would realize as he looked into the faces of his congregation "these people are not here through courtesy or because the sermon is a part of the service which they cannot escape. They have remained in their seats, or have entered the church at this hour to hear the word of God preached." "Woe is me," he would say with St. Paul, "if I preach not the Gospel". Instead of the sermon's becoming, as it too often is, a purely perfunctory exercise, it would be a joy and an inspiration.

Such an opportunity would call forth the best that is in the preacher. It would also bring into the Church many who do not now ordinarily attend her services. The floating unattached multitude who crowd our hotels and boarding houses, and who are accustomed to sleep late on Sunday morning, would come out at a later hour to hear some prophet of God with a message and the time given him in which to deliver it, when they would not come to hear the same man if the sermon were made a part of the regular service. If such a division of service and sermon is not feasible in all cases, yet in certain of our larger churches, where the service can be properly rendered with all the dignity and beauty of which it is capable, we might make a beginning along the lines indicated and thus inaugurate a movement which would do much to revive the spirit of prophecy among us.

We are so bound down by precedent, so enslaved to custom and tradition, that it is hard for us to adapt ourselves as a Church to the new conditions which confront us; and yet we must do so if we are to meet the spiritual needs of the age in which we live.

Everyone is saying that after this war is over the world is going to see another great revival of religion; that there will be a spiritual awakening among the nations of the earth, a shaking in the valley of dry bones; but the world is not going to be won to Christ by a declaration of principles. The Kingdom of God will not come with power unless we do something to make it come. We must have a program of work, a definite plan, some method by which we hope to arouse men and to win them to Christ. Our fear is that all this talk about a new heaven and a new earth after the war will, like so many other dreams and visions, end in pious hopes and empty words. However the map of Europe may be altered and changed by this war, there is one thing we may be sure of that will not change and that is human nature. Men and women will still remain essentially the same, and selfishness and lust and greed will still flourish, and men will still need to repent and to be saved from the power and curse of sin. The Church must be ready to stand like some ancient Gibraltar amid the waves of this troubled and disordered world and proclaim the gospel of salvation with new power and understanding of its meaning, and at the same time adopt new methods to bring Christ home to the lives of men and of nations as the one Saviour of the World.

Heart of the Jungle Tales—I

By ADA M. SKINNER

The African Boy and Girl at Home

THE traveler in the forests of Africa often comes to a clearing where he sees a group of bark huts. He knows he has reached an African village and he stops to enjoy a few hours with the people who live in these simple little homes.

These rude houses are sometimes arranged so as to form a circle; sometimes they thread the clearing in a line on each side of a street-like passage. At the end of the two rows is the palaver—a large hut where the men of the village gather to talk, and eat, and rest. Life here is very interesting. If the traveler learns something about the happenings in any one of these groups of bark huts, he knows the story of African home life; for each village is in itself a little world, and life in one is very much like life in all the others. Let us pay a visit to a group of bark huts and live for a little while with the merry-hearted black children.

The African hut is either round or oblong. It has no windows, and the door is so low that when you enter you must get in as the owners do,—on your hands and knees. But once inside you can stand upright for the rafters are high above the floor.

As there are no windows, all the light in the hut comes in through the small door space. It is very dark inside and it is some time before your eyes can make out even the simple furnishings of this rude home. To make matters worse, the place may be filled with smoke. Such things as stoves and chimneys are unknown and the smoke from the wood fire in the center of the floor must get out as best it can through the dense thatch roof which is often several feet thick. But as soon as your eyes are accustomed to smoke and darkness you find everything inside to be of the color of the earth. The walls are made of wattle and daub, and the floor is of clay so carefully prepared that it is conveniently hard and dry and smooth.

These people use little furniture in their homes. A few stools, some earthenware pots for cooking, calabashes for carrying water, wooden bowls and ladles, wicker and grass baskets, meet the everyday needs. Often a tiny calf or a few goats are tied to one of the poles which support the thatch and a number of hens and dogs prowl around in search of any bits of food they may chance to pick up.

A glance at the African children makes you quite sure that clothing is of as little use in their everyday life as furniture. The little boy wears,—"but why exaggerate"? as some one says. A string around his waist or a belt of bells for ornament makes up his dress until he is many years older. The little girl wears a tuft of a tail "for all the world like the tail of Br'er Rabbit", but when she is old enough to run about the little tuft is replaced by one much more decorative—a bob-tail generally made of grass or bark and highly colored. This is her bark dress and proud indeed she is of it when the time has come for her to wear it.

If it is evening meal-time in the hut the African mother and daughter are watching a big clay pot full of greens and corn, or plantain, well tucked in under some banana leaves, boiling over a big wood fire. At the right time the mother finds a wooden bowl and fills it with the best food from the kettle. This the little girl takes to the palaver house at the end of the village street and sets it at the feet of the men who are there. Then she runs back to the hut and eats her share of the meal with her mother.

All of the vegetables for the supper have been brought by the African mother and her daughters from their garden, for gardening is the special work of the women in Africa. They rise at daylight and spend the day at the farm hoeing, sowing, weeding, or reaping. At about two o'clock in the afternoon they return in a long single file, each one carrying a basket on her head. The basket is perhaps full of potatoes or cassava roots from which they will beat out their flour, or the basket may be filled with maize, peanuts, pineapples, or other garden produce, on the top of which is a bundle of firewood and above that a hoe. Sometimes a baby is slung at the mother's side in a deerskin. Before the sun is down they reach their home and begin immediately to prepare the big evening meal. But gardening is only one of the many tasks the little black girl is born to. As soon as it is light she must fetch water for the kraal, she must mud the hut and help in the never-ending task of grinding the meal.

Mothers train their daughters from their earliest days to carry everything on their heads. It is a fine sight to see a number of these young girls balancing large calabashes of water on erect heads as they tread the narrow trails which are the only paths to and from the spring. When returning from the garden the little one follows her mother and sometimes carries on her head a small basket with perhaps one potato or a few bananas in it.

The boy, too, has his tasks. As soon as a boy is old enough to do any work he goes with his father into the forest to help cut down the trees and make a clearing for the garden. At other times he goes down to the river where he sets his fish traps between the rocks. House building is another part of his work. And every boy must learn also how to hunt. Boys set bird traps and must be off to visit them. They must run upon errands for their father. Among some tribes the boy is a faithful nurse. He passes long days caring for the little children whose fathers are away in the forest and whose mothers are in the gardens.

These children are of great help to the African mother in the never-ending task of watching the brown heaps of peanuts and gourd seeds drying in the sun, and the shelling and grinding of these seeds into meal. The little girl sits on either side of a flat smooth stone, grasps the upper rolling stone in her little hands and moves her body to and fro to the rhythm of the woman grinding meal. A reed rug is placed upon the floor to catch the meal as it falls from the stone. "Her brother watches the seeds drying in the sun, but he does not help her at the task of shelling them, nor will he help to grind the meal or tie it up in a plantain leaf, or carry the kettle to the fire. This is the woman's and the little girl's part. Neither will he cook the manioc nor soak it in the stream nor lend a hand to the pounding of it into meal. This work the little girl does straddling the trough opposite her mother. With her wooden pestle in her hand her body rises and falls regularly and her blows are timed to alternate with her mother's."

But it is not all work and no play for African children. They go to school when they can get permission from their parents to do so, and there is a wealth of games which these merry-hearted children can play. Indeed, the missionaries tell us that if one of these little foreigners were set suddenly in the midst of our children here he would be able to join them in most of their games. They love, too, "to swim in the brown river, to fish from little canoes, to set little traps in the green forest and visit them, to drum and dance to the drumming!" Here is indeed a sum of joy for any child.

The Day of the Common Man

By AN EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENT

WHILE the great people of the world, rulers and war lords and the statesmen, so-called, have brought on this terrible catastrophe of the War with its unmeasured loss and suffering, it may be that it is bringing in the day when throughout a world ruled and ruined by great folks the people who bear the heavy burdens and do the hard work, such as are left of them, and their children after them, may come into their own. It is an awful price to pay for a new world in which dwelleth righteousness and more of justice and brotherly kindness, but it may be that it was the price which had to be paid. If the judgment of the great company of people who earn their daily bread by their daily work had been obtained there would have been no war. It was not so long before the War that 250,000 Socialists and working people quietly went out into the great park on the west side of Berlin to protest against war. The Socialists, the working people, those who must do the fighting, suffer most, provide most of the widows and orphans, were against war despite all provocations. The rulers and those whom they gathered about them prepared for it and precipitated it and the government of no great nation was free from fault, while the world's judgment for all time will doubtless hold Germany responsible for deliberately bringing on the War and destroying the hope of peace. A peace-loving world has been made the victim of ambitious rulers, selfish or stupid statesmen, secret and unprincipled diplomacy.

It is no wonder that from the Socialists and working people there should rise an increasing protest against the War, the demand that any proposition concerning peace should have consideration, that they who have least to say and most to suffer should be heard. The world has always been accustomed to wait until rulers and statesmen have seen fit to negotiate terms of peace, but it may be that in this new stage of the world's life the demand for peace will come from those who have in former times not been made much account of. The collapse of Russia at a critical time is a great disappointment to us who hoped that Prussian militarism was soon to be crushed, never to be a menace to the world's peace again. But who can blame that great company of Russian peasants who have been abused so long by Russian tyrants and who have been betrayed and slaughtered so unmercifully in this War for the course they have taken? Conferences at Stockholm or in our own country of Socialists and Pacifists may be managed by those who are working in the interest of the Central Powers, but they demand consideration beyond indiscriminate denunciation. The longing for peace among the peasants of the Old World and the plain people of the New World must be reckoned with. There is truth in the statement that the great folks in the world are having more than their share of talking and influence. The great company of plain people who must simply do what they are told must have consideration for they are going to tell the world the way it must go and determine its future course. If the War might have been deferred for a few years there had been no war, if such an expression may be permitted. It is the everlasting reproach of the German Government and of its Emperor that they would not wait to let their just complaints and needs be met in peaceful ways.

In his latest book H. G. Wells, who has perhaps the largest hearing of any living writer, has said some striking things concerning the common people which suggested the title of this article and what has been written:

"One of the larger singularities of the great War is its failure to produce great and imposing personalities, mighty leaders, Napoleons, Caesars. I would indeed make that the essential thing in my reckoning up of the War. It is a drama without a hero; with countless incidental heroes no doubt, but no star part. Even the Germans, with a national predisposition for hero-cults and living still in an atmosphere of Victorian humbug, can produce nothing better than that timber image, Hindenburg.

"It is not that the War has failed to produce heroes so much as that it has produced heroism in a torrent. The great man of this War is the common man. It becomes ridiculous to pick out particular names. There are too many true stories of splendid acts in the past two years ever to be properly set down. The V. C.'s and the palms do but indicate samples. One would need an encyclopedia, a row of volumes, of the gloriousness of human impulses. The acts of the small men in this War dwarf all the pretensions of the Great Man. Imperatively these multitudinous heroes forbid the setting up of effigies. When I was a young man I imitated Swift and posed for cynicism; I will confess that now at fifty and greatly helped by this War, I have fallen in love with mankind.

"And it is the peculiarity of this War, it is the most reassuring evidence that a great increase in general ability and critical ability has been going on throughout the last century, that no isolated great personages have emerged. Never has there been so much ability, invention, inspiration, leadership; but the very abundance of good qualities has prevented our focusing upon those of any one individual. We all play our part in the realization of God's sanity in the world, but, as the strange, dramatic end of Lord Kitchener has served to remind us, there is no single individual of all the Allied Nations whose death can materially affect the great destinies of this War.

"In the last few years I have developed a religious belief that has become now to me as real as any commonplace fact. I think that mankind is still, as it were, collectively dreaming and hardly more awakened to reality than a very young child. It has these dreams that we express by the flags of nationalities and by strange loyalties and by irrational creeds and ceremonies, and its dreams at times become such nightmares as this War. But the time draws near when mankind will awake and the dreams will fade away, and then there will be no nationality in all the world but humanity, and no king, no emperor, nor leader but the one God of mankind. This is my faith. I am as certain of this as I was in 1900 that men would presently fly. To me it is as if it must be so."

Mr. Wells also notes in his striking way the passing of the man on horseback and ridicules the British officers behind the battle line wearing spurs. Only a great industrial nation able to make machines and munitions can ever make war again. The men in the factories, grimy at their machines, and the men at the front who can aim machine guns or great cannon and dig trenches are determining the course of the War and of the world's destiny, not those who have come through long drill and practice of the old military tactics. The discovery of gunpowder made the common man on foot superior to the great man in armor on horseback and made him helpless in his castle and ended the feudal system. Now a new stage has been reached before our eyes in the War which we hope will end all wars, and the common man who can make a machine or use it is in the master's place. In wars as in everything else the old order changeth and the common man is coming into his own. He must be trusted to save the world from the control of war lords and he is quite sure to rule the world in the generations to come. Let him have the respect which he deserves.

O Father of the world, Who hast revealed through the life and death of Thy Son our Lord Jesus Christ that love is the only power by which evil can be overcome; Send, we beseech Thee, Thy Holy Spirit into our hearts that we may show forth this love in our lives, and that Thy Kingdom of Righteousness and Peace may come and Thy Will be done on earth as it is in heaven; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

How We Help Armenia and Syria

By BETTY T. WHITE

"THERE are many more whom we cannot help than the number helped by us. They come pleading for work until it seems sometimes as though we must go crazy from being constantly compelled to refuse them. It is one constant stream of ragged, forlorn women with drawn faces, begging with tears, and even demanding work. It is impossible for the people to return to their old homes; conditions are too uncertain. Local farmers and merchants feel the stress of the times too much to employ help, so the refugees are dependent almost wholly on charity. It is pitiful to see people once well-to-do now begging. When opportunity presents itself most of them swallow their pride and gladly become servants."

This is part of a report recently received in New York from a relief worker in the Russian Caucasus. The conditions it describes are applicable not only to this one region—unfortunately they are prevalent throughout the entire war-stricken areas of Western Asia, and daily the need grows greater.

HUNGRY

To mitigate such distress the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief is conducting a special drive for funds throughout the entire country. New York City's campaign produced splendid results, more than $160,000 being raised in less than one week from mass meetings, donations, collections on the streets, and special collections taken in churches and Sunday schools.

Readers' Contributions

This sum of money, to which the readers of THE CHURCHMAN have contributed generously, will be sent abroad almost at once to help meet the refugees' most pressing needs and the bitter hardships of the coming Winter. The great question which ever presents itself to the Committee is how best to distribute the funds at its disposal. In spite of the breaking off of diplomatic relations with Turkey and the withdrawing of all American officials there still remain in the country more than one hundred missionaries and relief agents who are permitted by the Turkish Government to continue their work. These brave men and women are scattered throughout the Empire, so that their headquarters form convenient relief distribution points. Outside of the Turkish Empire—in the Russian Caucasus, Egypt and other nearby countries—are gathered almost as many Armenians and Syrians equally in need of help, and here too have been established centres of aid.

Funds are sent to these agents through a system of drafts approved by the State Department. A special representative of the American Relief Committee is now in Switzerland, others in Constantinople, whose special mission is to attend to the financial end of the work. From Constantinople drafts on local banks are sent to the different distribution points. In order to make sure that money actually reaches and benefits those for whom it is intended, the money is spent wherever possible for actual supplies which are then given out to those in need. This system, which has proved most effective, is that which was organized originally by Ambassadors Elkus and Morgenthau, before they left Turkey. Ambassador Elkus recently wrote to the American Committee the following letter:

"When I left Constantinople, owing to the breaking of diplomatic relations with Turkey, the work of relief carried on by the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief was so thoroughly organized that arrangements were easily made for continuing that work in every department, even in the absence of the Embassy and United States consuls at different points in the country. The work is now being carried on effectively at all of the centres under increasing friendliness on the part of the Turkish officials, and with a need that is constantly growing greater as Winter approaches. A letter from the American representative now in Constantinople, dated August 17, 1917, which has just reached me, confirms this. (Signed) ABRAM I. ELKUS."

The relief workers, especially the Americans, must be all things to all men, for the refugees have no other sources of help. It is impossible to describe in brief the work of all the different stations, scattered from the mountains of Russia to Egypt. Perhaps some instances which are typical will give an idea of the magnitude of the task, and of its value to humanity.

"American Consulate. One responsibility of the women workers at Alexandropol is to find mothers of new-born babes. There are many little ones who have only a manger to lie in and the mother sometimes has to tear up her own clothing for swaddling clothes. To these mothers the young women give $5 and a blanket for the little one. Another work for which they are responsible is that of listing fatherless children to whom we make a monthly grant of $2."

At Erivan, in the Russian Caucasus, the work has dealt largely with orphan children, and also with supplying work to the older refugees. If it were not for the meagre aid which the American Committee agents have been able to give, these little children would have died by the hundred. As it is, the Committee has been able to supply them simply with one meal a day, not a "supplementary meal" as was done for the Belgian little ones.

The same state of affairs is to be met practically throughout Asia Minor. From a relief station there comes this story:

"The number of orphans under our care is steadily increasing, but what can we do? A pretty little girl about twelve years old with a baby in her arms, both children orphans, appeared at our door, the girl saying that the family which has been keeping her refuse to do so any longer unless she accepts Islam. She refuses, and is driven out with execrations; and meanwhile the one-year-old in the little girl's arms is sobbing with hunger, so we can hardly refuse it a drink of milk—at six times the normal cost."

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

SERMON FOR ALLIED DEAD, EMBASSY CHURCH, PARIS

Dean of Bethlehem Preaches at Great Memorial Service

PARIS.—On the Sunday following All Saints' Day, the Dean of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, the Very Rev. Frederick W. Beekman, preached the memorial sermon for the Allied dead in the British Embassy church, Paris. After a sermon in which the Dean spoke of the spiritual issues of the War, he concluded quite simply and with marked effect as follows:

"Whosoever will be great among you shall be your minister and whosoever of you will be the chiefest shall be servant of all. . . . For even the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto but to minister and to give His life a ransom for many.

"This Sunday following All Saints' Day our thoughts turn instinctively and with infinite tenderness to those heroes fallen in the cause of world righteousness which is God's. And in this church this morning do they especially turn to those of Britain and her dominions. It is, I assure you, a wonderful privilege to be permitted, as an American, to stand in this pulpit on this day and have a share with you in the sacred thoughts of this sacred hour. And yet, do you know I dare not trust myself to speak as I would wish of those men and boys from that land which in my boyhood days in New England we sometimes called 'the Mother Country'? But we can see them now as they marched out of every city and village of that proud land! We are with them at Mons, at Ypres, at the Marne, at Gallipoli, in Palestine. We are with them in the trenches, in the charge, in the onrush of the air, in the sleepless watches of the deep, in the skeleton clutch of the prison stockade and 'in some corner of a foreign field which is forever England.'

"And we here and now in His house pay our humble tribute to them in their unhesitating sacrifice—that sacrifice which forever unites them with their Master, for even as they, the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto but to minister and to give His life a ransom for many.

"Blow out, you bugles, over the rich Dead!
There's none of these so lonely and poor of old,
But dying, has made us rarer gifts than gold.
These laid the world away; poured out the red
Sweet wine of youth; gave up the years to be
Of work and joy, and that unhoped serene
That men call age; and those who would have been,
Their sons, they gave, their immortality.

"Let us pray: O Eternal Father and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, incline Thine ear to our prayers, and of Thy mercy bring Thy servants who have died in this Thy war of defence against the powers of evil into Thy place of peace and light and admit them to the fellowship of the blessed ones who have laid down their lives for their friends and the Right through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

BISHOP LAWRENCE PLEADS FOR CHAPLAIN'S EQUIPMENT

Chaplain Has Only His Commission and His Skin

NEW YORK CITY.—Bishop Lawrence preached Sunday morning in Grace church at the eleven o'clock service, presenting the work of the War Commission. He spoke of the lavish generosity of the people of Grace church in the Pension Fund and expressed his confidence in their support of the War Commission.

After the Bishop's sermon the Rev. Dr. Charles L. Slattery, rector, asked his parishioners to begin to send him contributions at once, saying $200,000 was expected from the Diocese of New York. Bishop Lawrence will make an appeal in the large churches of the city next month.

Bishop Lawrence said that during a recent audience with the Secretary of War he remarked: "Mr. Baker, as I see things, you provide the surgeon with his instruments and accessories, the paymaster with his table and equipment, the quartermaster with wagons, materials and means to handle them, but you give the chaplain his commission and his skin—and that is all."

The prelate said Mr. Baker answered: "You are right, Bishop."

Bishop Lawrence announced that part of the equipment now being sent to France for Episcopal chaplains consists of automobiles and motorcycles. "Think of a chaplain whose regiment covers a line of from five to fifteen miles trying to keep in touch with his men," remarked the Bishop.

The Bishop said New York City without her churches and clergymen would be like a military camp without chaplains. He said the Y. M. C. A. was doing a splendid work, but that it was the duty of the Episcopal Church to go with the "boys" and provide them with the sacraments and other spiritual equipment.

COAL SHORTAGE AFFECTS NEW YORK CHURCHES

NEW YORK CITY.—Sunday afternoon the beautiful carol service which usually crowds the Cathedral to the doors found the Cathedral furnace cold and no coal in the cellar. This, however, did not interfere with the carols. The Dean telephoned the superintendent of St. Faith's Sunday school to warn the children to keep on their coats, and except for the fact that the crowd was not as large as usual the service was as impressive and as lovely as ever.

At the Church Missions House, for the first time since the building was erected in 1892, it was impossible to hold noonday prayers in the chapel so icy was the atmosphere there.

BISHOP JONES RESIGNS FROM DISTRICT OF UTAH

Sends Letter to Presiding Bishop Resigning on January First

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—The following letter of resignation has been received from Bishop Jones by the Presiding Bishop:

BISHOP'S HOUSE
444 EAST FIRST SOUTH STREET
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
December 20, 1917.

74 Vandeventer Place, St. Louis, Mo.

RIGHT REVEREND AND DEAR SIR:

Having received the report of the Commission authorized by the House of Bishops to inquire into the whole subject of my loyalty and my usefulness as Bishop of Utah, in which report the Commission unanimously advises me to resign, I, therefore, acting on that advice, hereby tender you my resignation as Missionary Bishop of Utah to take effect whenever it is accepted. This action is taken with the distinct understanding that there are no charges standing against me touching my good character or integrity, for if there be any such I insist upon a trial of them.

My reason for submitting this resignation is not merely to comply with the advice of the Commission to which I had previously pledged myself.

The Commission, speaking, I take it, for the House of Bishops, maintains (1st) that war is not an unchristian thing and that no bishop may preach that this war is unchristian, and (2nd) that a bishop should not express the opinion that peace can be secured otherwise than by the prosecution of the war when the Government and the preponderance of the membership of the Church believe otherwise.

Those conclusions I cannot accept; for I believe that the methods of modern international war are quite incompatible with the Christian principles of reconciliation and brotherhood, and that it is the duty of a bishop of the Church, from his study of the Word of God, to express himself on questions of righteousness, no matter what opinion may stand in the way.

I had hoped that, notwithstanding the "excited condition of public opinion" referred to by the Commission, there might be room in the Church for a difference of opinion on the Christianity of warfare and ways of attaining peace, and that, if so, it was pre-eminently the duty of one supposed to be a leader of the Church to voice his convictions on those subjects. But the Commission makes it perfectly clear in its report that a Bishop should resign before venturing to differ from others on such a Christian problem, or to express opinions at variance with the Government. To me that seems evidently to mean that the bishops of the Church should be followers and not leaders, and I have no desire to remain in such an anomalous position.

I have, therefore, authorized the Council of Advice of the District to act as Ecclesiastical Authority of the same with full responsibility for the maintenance and conduct of the work from the first of January, 1918, until my resignation shall be acted upon, and I have for the same period offered myself to the General Board of Missions for any work they may wish to delegate to me.

Faithfully yours,
PAUL JONES,
Bishop of Utah.

MAJORITY OF BISHOPS IN FAVOR OF PROHIBITION

Letters Show Support of Amendment to Constitution

NEW YORK CITY.—The Church Temperance Society has been taking an elaborate plebiscite of the leaders of thought of the Nation with the object of finding out how people who live in dry States regard the Prohibition Amendment to the Federal Constitution to make prohibition national. The canvass not only included every Episcopal clergyman of the American Church, but also many business and professional men and the Governors of the States now under prohibition. The replies, almost without exception, have favored prohibition. The letters from the Bishops and Governors will, in due course, appear in Temperance. Extracts from some of the letters follow:

Bishop Winchester of Arkansas says: "Prohibition in Arkansas has been a great blessing to the State. . . . I can therefore but express myself as a warm advocate of prohibition regarding all intoxicating beverages, and I cordially favor the amendment regarding the manufacture and sale of intoxicants in the United States."

Bishop Darlington of Harrisburg says: "I am much pleased that 98 per cent. of our clergy who have answered your inquiry are for Prohibition, and that both Houses of Congress have passed the Prohibition Bill at last. This will give States which have in the past refused to permit citizens to vote upon the question the first opportunity they have had to abolish the liquor evil and save their boys and girls from temptation."

Bishop Brewster of Maine says: "I would favor such an amendment. The saloon is an unmitigated evil, and many of the drinking habits in all classes are socially destructive. But, in our just desire to eradicate these evils, I think we must be very careful to safeguard legitimate uses of wine."

Bishop Thurston of Eastern Oklahoma says: "I am in favor of the submission of the National Constitutional Prohibition Amendment to the various States and desire to so go on record."

BISHOP BROOKE COMPLETES 25 YEARS' EPISCOPATE

Epiphany Marks Twenty-fifth Anniversary of Consecration

At its last quarterly meeting the Board of Missions learned that on the Feast of the Epiphany Bishop Brooke of Oklahoma would observe the twenty-fifth anniversary of his consecration. It placed the enclosed minute upon its records.

"The Board of Missions congratulates the Right Reverend Francis Key Brooke, D.D., upon the completion of twenty-five years as Missionary Bishop of Oklahoma. Going to his field at the Church's call in the pioneer days, Bishop Brooke has seen Oklahoma grow into one of the greatest States of the Union, embracing two missionary districts. His devotion to duty, his forgetfulness of self, his readiness to serve the humblest of God's children—these and many other qualities have endeared him to the people of the Church and of the State. The Board of Missions sends greetings to Bishop Brooke, his clergy and his people, and wishes them Godspeed as they go on in their work together for the upbuilding of the Church in their great commonwealth."

CHICAGO CAMPAIGN FOR SLACKER EPISCOPALIANS

Many Young Men Interested in Activities of Epiphany Church

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—As the campaign for "Slacker Episcopalians" waged by the Church of the Epiphany, Chicago, attracted a good deal of attention in the Church press, it may be of interest to know what results have been achieved since the beginning of this effort two months ago.

The scheme of the rector, the Rev. Herbert W. Prince, was a weekly booklet of twelve pages, attractively printed and arranged, mailed and distributed to a large number of Episcopalians on the West Side of the city, whose names were secured by a group of young men and women distributors.

All these plans have borne excellent results. First of all, they have added forty-five names to the regular mailing list. Included in this number are fifteen Episcopalians who have been brought back to church and churchgoing. Still more significant is the fact of twelve people who are not Episcopalians at all being drawn to the Church of the Epiphany by the personal message of the little book and afterwards by the message of the service and the sermon.

It was stated in the earlier days of this campaign that the group of young men workers were not going to bother with chronic kickers, but were going after the lapsed and the forgetful and those who had just slipped out of all church directories. One of the indirect, yet powerful, results is to have put back into action and cheerful service a group of young men who themselves were gradually slipping away for want of a "big job".

This same group has now broadened its activities in the form of working up special Sunday evening services. They secure well-known speakers, clerical and lay, on any Sunday evening such speakers are able to come, and they arrange with the organist and choirmaster some special music along patriotic and popular lines.

Little has been said of the group of young women distributors, only because this group has always been ready for such service.

Summing up, it is sufficient to say that such direct and personal results have been achieved by the campaign and the Weekly as to abundantly justify the continuance of this scheme and work. But more than that: As all advertising men know, this kind of publicity secures its greatest results by continuity, steadiness—a never-failing message getting into the home every week.

BISHOP McCORMICK ASKS FOR JIG-SAW PUZZLES

C. P. C. Wants Heartier Support for Chaplains in France

NEW YORK CITY.—The Church Periodical Club has received an interesting letter from Bishop McCormick, written at his office at Trinity church, Paris, in which he especially emphasizes the need for picture puzzles to help the soldiers in their convalescence in the hospitals. A jig-saw has recently been given to the C. P. C., and they are eager to have volunteers come to the Church Missions House and make use of it for the sake of the boys over there.

This is what Bishop McCormick says:

"Bishop Israel has handed me your letter, and I beg to say that I am arranging to send out from my office here any supplies which may be intended for the use of our chaplains. They nearly all request books and games and I should add picture puzzles, which are a great help to men in the hospitals. I should like four copies of the Priests' Prayer Book (for men who have applied for them)—[these were sent at once]—and there is a demand for hymnals with the music. I have had conferences already with most of the chaplains and shall try to meet their needs as they develop. Anything the Church Peridiocal Club can do will be much appreciated."

What the C. P. C. can do depends on the Church people of the country. The response to the Christmas appeal was quite inadequate, although much of value was sent in, even a package of "war fudge" done up in separate boxes so that each chaplain could have a little. There is no limit to the number of magazines that can be used. "If only our people will take the trouble to send them directly to us instead of mailing them under the 1c-stamp rule," says Miss Thomas, "they will be so much more wisely distributed. Some of the camps in this country have more magazines than they need, while our men in France have not nearly enough. The great need is for magazines that will be regularly forwarded to chaplains whose names we can supply. We want current magazines, no more old attic stuff."

Chaplain Wood, whose letters have been appearing in THE CHURCHMAN, wrote that he distributed his Christmas cards to his men before Christmas so that they might have the pleasure of sending home a greeting to their families. A number of the chaplains would like birthday cards to give to their men for similar use.

Recently the C. P. C. in response to the request of the Navy Department for the loan of equipment, sent two binoculars which for some time had been in the offices, and received the following letter in response:

"Gentlemen: Your prompt and patriotic response to the Navy's call for binoculars is most appreciated. The glasses will be very useful in the prosecution of naval operations until victory is won.

"At the termination of the war, if possible, every effort will be made to return them to you, when it is hoped that you will feel compensated for any evidence of wear, by the knowledge that you have supplied 'Eyes for the Navy' during a very trying period.

"On behalf of the Navy, I wish to thank you most heartily."

CROMWELL ISSUED BIBLE FOR MEN OF HIS ARMY

Interesting Sketch of Old Volume Found in Book Shop

ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA.—From some hidden corner of a second-hand book store there has just come to light an interesting sketch of the Bible issued by Cromwell for his soldiers in 1643. So far as is known there are only two copies of this unique volume, which has a peculiar significance at this time, in existence. One is in the British Museum, the other in America. This description was picked up by Mrs. N. L. Dugas, of St. Paul. The sketch reads as follows:

'The
Pocket Bible:

Containing the most (if not all) those places contained in holy Scripture, which doe shew the qualifications of his inner man, that is a fit Souldier to fight the Lords Battels, both before he fight, in the fight, and after the fight; Which Scriptures are reduced to severall heads, and fitly applyed to the Souldiers severall occassions, and so may supply the want of the whole Bible, which a Souldier cannot conveniently carry about him: And may bee also usefull for any Christian to meditate upon, now in this miserable time of Warre.

Imprimatur, Edw. Calamy, Jos. 18. This Book of the Law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to doe according to all that is written therein, for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and have good successe. Printed at London by G. B. and R. W. for G. C. 1643.'

"The selections of Scripture are divided into eighteen heads. A few samples show their general character.

"'1. A Souldier must not doe wickedly. 2. A Souldier must be valiant for God's cause. 3. A Souldier must pray before he go to fight.'

"One chronicler says, 'the success of Cromwell's army commenced immediately on the publication of The Souldiers Pocket Bible; and they never after lost a battle.'

"Another interesting point is that the selections from Scripture are in almost every instance taken from the Genevan Version; in a very few instances is the King James Version used.

"The book is printed in a pamphlet form, on a single sheet folded in 16 mo, and making sixteen pages. It was generally buttoned between the coat and the vest, next the heart. It was prepared by Cromwell's order for the men of his army."

ARCHDEACON STUCK TELLS ABOUT DR. WOOD'S TRIP

In the January issue of The Spirit of Missions appears a most interesting account by Archdeacon Stuck of Dr. Wood's trip to Alaska and of the journey from mission to mission he made in company with Archdeacon Stuck.

"It is seldom that one of the secretaries of the Board of Missions pays an extended visit to the mission field," says one of the editorials. "When he does, the matter is one of importance and interest to the whole Church. Dr. Wood's journey through Alaska last Summer with Archdeacon Stuck was followed with keen interest by many who have been eagerly waiting for the archdeacon's account of it. As the distance is great and mail is necessarily slow, it is only now that we have the privilege of publishing the long-looked-for account, written by the Archdeacon of the Yukon. Of necessity much detail has had to be omitted and only the general and outstanding facts and places noticed. An almost constantly cloudy and wet Summer precluded the possibility of taking many pictures. Enough were secured, however, to give some idea of the varied topography on the long journey down the Yukon, and what is lacking in the form of usual illustrations is fully made up by the archdeacon's account. One outstanding fact is emphasized in every point—the bigness of the task which the Church has asked of the Bishop of Alaska."

It is time to order the Lenten number of The Spirit of Missions for the Sunday school children to sell throughout the parish. Last year 100,000 copies were sold by the boys and girls.

ARMY NURSES IN NEW YORK HAVE DANCE AND CONCERT

Old St. Paul's the Scene of Inspiring Festivities

NEW YORK CITY.—On the evening of St. Stephen's Day the parish hall of St. Paul's Chapel was dignified by the presence of more than a hundred Army nurses from the mobilization camp on Ellis Island who presented an inspiring picture in their unique and becoming uniforms of blue, bearing the insignia of the Army Medical Service.

The number was constituted largely of the free classes in Military French which St. Paul's has been conducting for the past six months for the benefit of soldiers, sailors, doctors and nurses, under the leadership of Professor Jacques Bars of Paris.

Much of the program was supplied by the nurses themselves, which included, among other offerings, a piano solo by Miss Hope of New Orleans, readings by the Misses Dew and Beale of Nashville, and Negro dialect selections by Miss Schaefer of Memphis. An orchestra furnished music for the dancing which followed.

G. F. S. CARES FOR GIRLS STRANDED IN CAPITAL

WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—"I'm not boarding, I am living,—at the Girls' Friendly Lodge." This is one of the many encouraging remarks the members of the Washington G. F. S. have overheard recently. The lodge here is new, a war emergency. It is not only full to overflowing, but it is chaperoning girls in neighboring rooming houses and working with all its might to relieve the difficulties of the housing situation with which the war employes of the Government are faced on their arrival at the capital. The soldiers are learning the value of the lodge, and bringing to it their stranded womenfolks. On Sunday afternoon open house is kept at the lodge, "as little like an early Victorian Sunday as you can imagine", someone remarked the other day. Coffee and cakes are served, and jollity reigns supreme.

Clergyman Becomes Roman Catholic

NEWPORT, RHODE ISLAND.—The Rev. John B. Diman, until a year ago head master of St. George's School and now on duty with the naval force of the Second Naval District, has become a Roman Catholic and joined St. Joseph's church, the pastor of which, the Rev. Edward A. Higney, officiated at his confirmation recently.

The Rev. Mr. Diman is a graduate of Harvard and Brown Universities.

SOLDIERS MADE HAPPY BY CHURCH IN HONOLULU

Army Days in Mid-Pacific Enlivened by Stirring Entertainments

HONOLULU.—The Church in Hawaii early took the initiative in providing wholesome recreation and amusement for the young recruits who began to come to the Islands after the United States entered into the great war.

Because of contagious diseases on the transports the men were quarantined for some weeks, but when they came out in July, Church women began with a chowder supper at the Parish House for a group from Ames Agricultural College, Iowa. Advance information about these boys had been received by letter from an old school friend of the writer living at Ames.

Gradually other Iowa boys were added and soon there were fifty whom we were reaching from that state alone. At first Churchwomen provided one entertainment each week either at the Cathedral Parish House or at private homes. In addition to this two women of the congregation regularly greeted all soldiers at the cathedral door, taking them to dinner or to one of the cathedral buildings after service for friendly conversation, which was much appreciated by the young men, who felt lonely in a strange land.

The last entertainment for them was given by the Cathedral Guild at the Parish House on Hallowe'en. It began at five o'clock with an organ recital, followed at six-thirty by a supper conducted in this manner:

The heads of fourteen prominent cathedral families presided over fourteen family tables, four soldiers being given to each host and hostess, each family providing its own supper. Thus fifty boys were entertained.

With the Bishop as chairman, four speakers were introduced during the supper, the subjects being "Our President", "Our Army", "Our Allies", and "Our Boys". Between the speeches patriotic songs were sung, all standing, and ringing cheers with individual waving of flags roused patriotism to the highest pitch of enthusiasm.

In introducing Judge Stanley, who spoke to "Our Allies", the Bishop stood in the centre of the stage holding an American flag, two men on either side of him supporting the British and French flags respectively. The Bishop said, "These three flags represent the three greatest democracies, who are fighting to make democracy safe for the world". At this moment Miss Tweed, dressed in the colors of Belgium, and wearing a liberty cap, tripped in, exclaiming, "Am not I, too, one of the Allies?" whereupon three ringing cheers resounded for Belgium. At the conclusion of the supper evening guests began to arrive and a musical program ended the happy evening.

As time passed with this group of Iowa boys as a nucleus the State Club idea began to take shape, the civilian Iowa Club being persuaded to invite all Iowa soldiers into its membership until now there are about 200 soldiers enrolled besides the 100 civilians. This club provides monthly entertainments which the men enjoy immensely. The idea is spreading rapidly and other states have organized.

The Army and Navy Y. M. C. A., of which a Churchman is president, is situated in the heart of the city, near the cathedral in what was formerly the historic Royal Hawaiian Hotel. This organization has rendered valuable service in tabulating the names of the men from the different states, a register being arranged for this purpose.

It is wonderful what this club idea has contributed in expression of that love of state which the Literary Digest says "has come to be an aspect of our national patriotism".

ALASKAN DANIEL WEBSTER MAKES GIFT TO C. P. C.

His Gold Nugget to Be President's Badge of Office

How Daniel Webster of Alaska expressed his gratitude to the Church Periodical Club by the gift of a gold nugget, and how that nugget has become a badge of office for the president of the C. P. C., was recently learned at the offices of the society in the Church Missions House, New York.

Daniel Webster was a friend of Archdeacon Stuck's. For a long time the archdeacon used to supply him with reading matter. Then his name was turned into the C. P. C., and he received magazines and books from a certain Churchwoman who became interested in his literary career. The other day he sent a gift of money to her to be divided between the Red Cross and the C. P. C. and a gold nugget as a personal present. This nugget has not great intrinsic value, but it has been mounted as a very pretty pendant, and is to be the property of whoever is president of the C. P. C. during her tenure of office.

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY AT ST. AUGUSTINE'S, RALEIGH

RALEIGH, NORTH CAROLINA.—January 1, 1918, marked the fiftieth anniversary of the beginning of St. Augustine's School. The Rev. J. Brinton Smith, D.D. (who had been secretary of the Freedman's Bureau of the Board of Missions), in co-operation with Bishop Atkinson of North Carolina, inaugurated the work in 1868.

In 1865 97 per cent. of the Negro race were illiterate. In fifty years the illiteracy has been reduced to 30 per cent., a marvelous growth, perhaps unexampled in the history of the education of the world.

The work of the Church among the colored people of the South waits on the growing spirit of co-operation among the people of the whole country. The people of the South are gradually awakening to their great responsibility. Mission studies of this problem are being made by young men in the Southern colleges; studies in social service and in missionary extension are showing the people of the fourth province the tremendous problems that lie at their door. When they awake to the necessity of action their work will be supported by the Church people of the whole country and the bishops of the South, the leaders of the work, will have the whole Church back of them. "A Record of Fifty Years," an interesting pamphlet showing the work of the school's graduates, has recently been published and will be sent by the school to anyone interested.

CHINA IS ON VERGE OF SPLITTING INTO HALVES

No Peace Until Oligarchy is Driven Out, Says Letter

NEW YORK CITY.—A Chinese Christian educated in this country and now practicing law in Shanghai sends the following interesting information to a friend in the United States with regard to the present situation in China:

"China's policies are still complicated. The dissolution of Parliament and the extrusion of the de jure President showed on the part of Chinese militarists now in power at Pekin that they have neither idea of nor respect for constitutional government and have ridden roughshod over the liberties of the people. Consequently the country is again on the verge of splitting into halves and each making grimaces against the other and fighting mountain pass battles in the interior, while famine, flood and pestilence run riot in the land. The country has entered into the War and the entry was made an excuse to plunge the country into civil commotion, first by the attempt to restore the monarchy and then by restoring the republic with the militarists entrenched in arbitrary power. The government of China today is nothing but an oligarchy very much like the military clique in Berlin or Potsdam and until it is dissolved or driven out and exterminated there will be no peace in this fair land just as there is none in Europe. The problem of China is the same as that of the West: Militarism versus Democracy. Both sides or regions of the world problem must be met and faced and fought out and one faction must win. I am hopeful that the cause of democracy will prevail in the West, so that the moral victory and the moral forces that that victory will release and strengthen will help defeat the forces of evil in this land.

"Some of our best public men have been prescribed by the militarists by the methods of Czarism, Sultanism and Manchuism and Kaiserism. All these isms are blood brothers in spite of racial and climatic differences. The worst is the revived Manchuism in China, for in its path is nothing but destruction with no redeeming feature; it is degrading to China and morally bankrupt and is but hastening the country to absolute ruin. I can liken the system and condition of this country to nothing in history. It is even worse than the gradual decay, the vices, the utter rottenness of Rome in its lowest depths of degradation. Such is China in politics and in big business and in society, both of which latter are sucked dry and demoralized by the relentless vampires masquerading under the cloak of officialdom. The country will need your prayers and American assistance if it is going to survive."

G. F. S. Committees Meet

The standing committees of the Girls' Friendly Society, together with the special war service committee and the extension committee, will meet at the Church Missions House, New York, January 16 and 17, to gather up the work of the Winter, and plan for its furtherance.

DYING SOLDIER'S VISION OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

Would Gladly Give His Life for That Cause

(The following is taken from a letter to Mr. Robert Holmes, author of "My Police Court Friends", printed originally in the "Canadian Churchman".—The Editors.)

"Lying here in hospital helpless three months from shrapnel wounds which refuse to heal, and just waiting," writes a gallant soldier of Kitchener's Army a month before he died. "I have been thinking.

"You know I have been all over the world. It would seem that I should have plenty to think about. Strange, isn't it, that my thoughts always go back to the one theme of Foreign Missions—especially as I never thought of them before but in derision; yes, and that notwithstanding help cheerfully given me at mission hospitals in Amritsar, Jaffa and Uganda when I was sick.

"I do not remember giving a single penny to Foreign Missions in my life. It was easy to prate about their uselessness—all so cheap and popular, too. Even as I traveled in distant lands, sometimes well knowing that but for the work of missionaries there had been no road for me, I still refused to own the blessings their work conferred both on the natives they set out to convert and the country which gave the heroes birth. I think that stranger even than my ingratitude for help generously given me in mission hospitals. For gold was my god. My whole energies were set on trade. I might in common fairness have recognized who prepared the way for markets which I found so profitable. But I did not.

THE CALL TO ARMS

"When the call to arms came, as you will remember I told you in an earlier letter, I was in London, home on furlough. I joined Lord Kitchener's men. You sent me a New Testament. I have it now.

"Reading at random for want of something better to do one night, I was struck by the words of John 17:3: 'And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent'. I could not forget those words.

"As I think of the loyalty of subject races, so gloriously exhibited in this day of stress, as I picture those splendid Indians seen in France, my mind still refuses to absorb any but the great central fact—we have here the fruition of the work of British missionaries and of the prayers of missionary-hearted men.

"It is sweet to die for England—I do not regret it—sweet to see the devotion of tender nurses about our beds—a few vagrant thoughts flutter for a moment over these consolations, to die in the flood of glory bursting in contemplation of what it is to minister and to die for the sake and in the service of the King of kings. That will never be my part. I do not complain. I am not worthy the high honor involved. But perhaps I might have been, had somebody taken me in hand early enough. Why does our Church keep Foreign Missions so much in the background? How is it that I was left so long a scoffer?

"I do not blame any mortal. I am saying that something is wrong with a scheme of things which fails to put the whole world for Christ in the forefront as the battle-cry of the Christian Church. I do not know your own inmost feelings. I do not know how keen you are. It is because you gave me the Testament wherein I found the words of life that I tell you something of my rambling thoughts and of the great central regret that fills my whole soul. My little money will presently be found devoted to the cause. But what is that? We can carry nothing out whither I go. My message is that all who are wise should work in the great service while it is day, remembering the coming night."

ECONOMIC ARGUMENTS AGAINST LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Advertising Copy Being Prepared by Federal Council

NEW YORK CITY.—Over one hundred arguments in the form of separate pieces of advertising copy against the saloon and the liquor business are being prepared by Charles Stelzle for the Strengthen America Campaign. This material may be had without expense by interested individuals or by local committees who will see to it that they are inserted in their local newspapers.

The basis of this material was obtained through a world-wide study of the economic aspects of the liquor problem covering a period of two years, and has stood the test of many open forum discussions.

These advertisements, gotten out by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, may be secured by writing to the Strengthen America Campaign, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York.

Prisoners Aid in the Capital

WASHINGTON, D. C.—At a recent meeting of the Prisoners' Aid Association Mrs. Myles Standish told of her very personal work in the prisons of New York City. It has been very successful and distinctly spiritual.

In Washington, the Prisoners' Aid work, which is done under the direction of Mrs. David Ransom Covell, has covered the physical as well as the spiritual. During the past year over 800 men and women have been aided in some way. Superintendent Zinkham of the Washington jails and Chief Probation Officer Heany were present and told of the hard and efficient services that the Prisoners' Aid have rendered in Washington.

G. F. S. FESTIVAL WEEK CELEBRATED IN JANUARY

Special Program Reflecting War Service Activities Prepared

During the third week in January the various branches of the G. F. S. are planning to hold their Festival Week. The chief feature is a special program consisting of songs and recitations woven together into a little pageant of G. F. S. work. The program for 1918 is very patriotic and reflects the good war service work the society is doing. In the course of her annual letter to the members of the G. F. S. which is read during Festival Week as part of the program, Miss Frances W. Sibley, the national president, says:

"When the War broke out I had the privilege of writing to the head of the Red Cross Society offering the services of 50,000 women and girls in sixty-four dioceses, who were so thoroughly organized that every one could be speedily and easily reached. I was indeed proud to do so. Many and valuable have been the services rendered by you to our country in the gift of ambulances, making of surgical dressings, preparing yourselves for nursing and other service, securing Red Cross memberships, subscribing for Liberty Bonds, promoting patriotic leagues, etc., as well as I hope by the constant use of our war prayer, and I am sure that when our War Emergency Committee comes to gather up all the reports, they will form a total of which we shall not be ashamed.

MISSIONARY GIFTS

"To the cause of missions you contributed last year $14,247.31, and I beg you not to let this year's gifts show any decrease,—remembering that this is our chance to play a part in making the Kingdoms of this world become the Kingdom of our God. To read that our total gifts last year to objects outside the society amounted to $52,-307.17, makes us realize our resources, our possibilities and our responsibilities."

Parish House Dedicated

BRIDGEPORT, CONNECTICUT.—Bishop Brewster recently dedicated the new parish house of St. John's, Bridgeport. Between 700 and 800 people were present. After the dedication luncheon was served, where speeches were made commending the splendid step forward which the parish house indicated in the life of the parish.

ORDINATIONS

On St. Thomas' Day in St. Paul's church, Springfield, Illinois, Bishop Sherwood ordained to the priesthood the Rev. Messrs. Henry Herbert Firth and Egbert Adolphus Craig (colored). The candidates were presented by Archdeacon Edward Haughton, rector of the parish. The sermon was preached by Archdeacon John C. White; the Litany was said by the Rev. W. F. Dawson of St. Peter's, Chesterfield. These presbyters and the Rev. Arthur Wilson of St. Barnabas', Havana, united with the Bishop in the laying on of hands. The Rev. Mr. Firth will continue his work as rector of St. Paul's, Carlinville, and Mr. Craig will continue to be priest-in-charge of St. Luke's, Springfield.

For Country

"You have done your bit; you must now do your utmost!"

THE STUDENT FRIENDSHIP War Fund is already oversubscribed. From the first the campaign efforts have been for a gift, not a collection. By the first of December the entire country was practically covered. About fifty outstanding colored institutions reached by this time had done better than any other group in the prompt way in which they handled the campaign and in the way in which they have been remitting their pledges.

The average gift per student is far above any giving that the student movement has ever known.

THOUGH THEY ARE far from the din of warfare and its consequent hardships and dangers, Japanese women are alive to their responsibility in the great war. The Yokohama Y. W. C. A. started out on its second year with a meeting called to discuss the part that Yokohama women could take in the work which women the round world over have to do. As a result ten or a dozen Japanese women undertook the entire care of some French orphans and a gift of warm coats and money was sent to Russian babies.

GRACE CHURCH, Grand Rapids, the Rev. G. P. T. Sargent, rector, now has seventy-three men on her roll of honor. As the entire roll of the church membership amounts to 1,000 communicants, the members of Grace church feel that they are doing their bit when it comes to sending out men to fight for her country. The parish is not a rich one, but the women of Grace church contributed over one thousand dollars toward the recent appeal for money to carry on the women's war work of the Y. M. C. A. Between three and four hundred was also given to the cause of the Armenians, who are suffering so greatly at the hands of the Turks and Germans. Fifty dollars of this was a free-will offering from the church school. About $800 was raised by the members of the church to buy the Winter's coal supply, and besides these various contributions other appeals—such as the Y. M. C. A., etc., have been met. The last record of the Red Cross Auxiliary in Grace church shows a total of 16,380 articles made, which shows that the women are showing enthusiasm in this much needed form of patriotic endeavor.

At the time of the midnight service the church was well filled on Christmas Eve and almost every soldier and sailor who was able to be back for Christmas was in his place of worship. Many of the boys will not be back again before they leave for France and the front.

ACCORDING TO THE incomplete records available through the mailing list of The Spirit of Missions, at least 217 of our clergy have entered the Federal service as chaplains, Y. M. C. A. workers, members of hospital and ambulance corps, and as students of officers' training camps. In the last three weeks thirty-one changes have come in from clergy who have temporarily left their posts to enter the Federal service in some capacity.

SEVERAL GRADUATES OF St. Augustine's School, Raleigh, North Carolina, who received commissions in the United States Army at the close of the recent Training Camp for colored officers, at Fort Des Moines, Iowa, have visited the school and addressed the students.

AN INTERESTING CEREMONY took place on the Third Sunday in Advent at La Jolla, California, when two flags were presented, one to the parish church of St. James-by-the Sea, and the other to St. Mary's Chapel of the Bishop's School for Girls.

The rector of the church, the Rev. William Bedford-Jones, who is also chaplain of the school, blessed the flags at the morning and evening services respectively, and placed them in the proper position at the epistle side of the choir.

The flags are of silk, surmounted by the conventional Army eagle, ornamented with gold cord and tassels. They are three feet by five. The church flag was given by several members of the congregation, and the school flag by the Class of 1917.

FIVE OF THE six Churchmen who have enlisted from Trinity church, Shelburne, Vermont, have received the rank of commissioned officers. The names of these men are as follows: Major W. Hayes Mitchell, Captain J. Watson Webb, Sergeant-Major Vanderbilt Webb, Ensign W. Seward Webb, Second Lieutenant Allen B. MacMurphy.

AN INCIDENT, WHICH one of our chaplains stationed with an English base hospital relates, gives some idea of one aspect of his work. It was after "one of the most terrible engagements of the war", and the hospital was so overcrowded that cots were set up in the chapel. In the course of the night the chaplain wrote thirty letters dictated by dying men, their last word to mother, wife, sister, fiancee. There was no place for the chaplain to sit while he wrote the letters; instead he bent over the cot, very low, for the voice of the wounded Tommy was often faint.

ON CHRISTMAS DAY in St. Luke's parish, Haverstraw, New York, the acting rector blessed and used a ciborium of silver, the gift of the Girls' Friendly Society. A chalice veil and burse, presented by the members of the Altar Society, were also blessed and used.

ABOUT 83,000 NEGROES are now in the National Army, with many Hampton and Tuskegee men among the commissioned officers. The full quota will be more than 1,000,000 of Negro troops.

ON THE THIRD Sunday in Advent the Rev. Henry Davies, rector of Christ church, Easton, dedicated a service flag with thirty-four stars. The flag is hung over the entrance to the church and compares favorably with other service flags in the town in the number of stars. Recently Dr. Davies visited the camps where his boys were in training.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH, Centreville, the Rev. J. Dirickson Cummins, rector, will dedicate a service flag with nineteen stars at a special service to be held soon. The parish has remembered the boys at this season with "Boxes from Home".

Personals

A FAREWELL service for several members of our mission staff in China was held in the chapel of the Church Missions House on the Feast of the Holy Innocents. These missionaries who are about to return to their stations are: Hankow, the Rev. and Mrs. Walworth Tying, Mr. and Mrs. Everard P. Miller; Shanghai, Miss Annie Brown, Miss Mary A. Bremer.

BISHOP BURLESON expects to spend January and February in the East in the interest of his work.

MISS LOUISE FREELAND, formerly branch secretary of the Girls' Friendly Society, St. George's, New York, has been made president of the diocesan branch in Arizona.

BISHOP LLOYD'S first letters have been received at the Church Missions House. He writes cheerily. "Cold but no discomfort, rough but no sickness", is his description of the voyage to England. On December 22 he sailed from England for Liberia.

THE REV. KARL G. HEYNE has assumed his duties as curate to the Rev. E. S. Pearce, rector of Zion church, Rome, New York.

THE REV. HUNTER DAVIDSON of Bristol, Virginia, has accepted a call to the rectorship of Christ church, Stevensville, Maryland, and began his duties January 1.

THE REV. CHARLES DAVID FAIRMAN has accepted the rectorship of St. Mary's church, Northfield, Vermont. He comes from the diocese of Wisconsin.

Clergyman Laborer in Copper Plant

One of our missionaries in Utah has been working for three weeks as a laborer in one of the large copper plants to get to know the men and their point of view—and incidentally to earn three dollars a day for Armenian and Syrian relief. He says: "It has been a wonderful experience and one a missionary should go through at an industrial centre before trying to preach to the men".

Nurses for Chinese Hospitals

Writing from China, one of our missionaries has this to say: "It is not so hard to get hold of Chinese girls who want to be nurses. The difficulty is to get American women who are willing to come out to China to train them. One of our St. Luke's nurses has to leave on account of her health; others will soon have to go home on a much-needed furlough. And we must have new ones to take their places. Who will come out to help us?"

$3,000 in Christmas Offering

The Christmas offering amounted to more than $3,000 at the Episcopal Church of the Beloved Disciple, Eighty-ninth Street, near Madison Avenue, of which the Rev. Dr. Henry M. Barbour is rector.

New Year's Eve at the Cathedral

A watch night service was held at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, beginning at a quarter to eleven o'clock, on New Year's Eve, with an organ recital by Dr. Miles Farrow. There were hymns, prayers and an address by the Very Rev. Howard Chandler Robbins.

Our Weekly News Letters

WASHINGTON

A Notable Service—The clergy and people of the Church in Washington had the privilege of participating in a notable and moving service on the afternoon of the Fourth Sunday in Advent. By appointment of the Bishop of Washington a special service of thanksgiving for the deliverance of Jerusalem was held in the Bethlehem chapel of the cathedral, and was attended by the British Ambassador, his staff, including several officers in uniform, and his family, by representatives of the French and other embassies and legations of the Allies, by men prominent in our own Government and in the city, as well as by a great company of Church people. Jerusalem was the central thought of the entire service.

In the great procession, led by the cathedral cross, and punctuated by the U. S. flag and the cathedral banner, the choir sang Hymn 493, "O 'twas a joyful sound to hear," to Horatio Parker's tune, Mount Sion. The processional was Jerusalem the golden, and before the sermon the choir and congregation with tremendous effect sang "O God our help in Ages past", and "O mother dear, Jerusalem" was very moving as a benediction hymn. The Psalms were 122 and 48, the Lessons, Jeremiah 33, 1 to 17 (the restoration of Jerusalem) and Revelation 21 (the new Jerusalem). The following special thanksgiving, set forth by the Bishop for the occasion, was offered by him before the benediction:

"O Lord God of Israel, Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who in the olden time didst cast out thine enemies, and didst bring thy chosen people again into the land of their fathers; We bless and magnify thy glorious Name that thou hast given unto us in our time to recover Jerusalem, to fulfil the patient prayers of the saints, and to crown the faithful labors of thy servants, the soldiers of the Cross. Blessed be thou, O Lord, because thou hast vouchsafed unto us again to possess the places made holy by the ancient prophets, priests and kings, thy stewards and messengers, and by the birth, the earthly labors, and the death of thine Incarnate Son, our Saviour and Lord. Blessed be thou likewise, O Lord, because that thou hast permitted men of our race to restore Jerusalem to Christendom, and to place the Cross triumphant on Mount Sion. Reward them, O Lord, for their faith and courage; give them victory over every foe; and bless them with the fulness of thy peace and of thy joy. And, O Lord God of hosts, look down in mercy, we beseech thee, upon our brethren, the children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and so fetch them home to thy flock, that they may be saved among the remnant of the true Israelites, and be made one fold under one shepherd, Jesus Christ our Lord. Remember us all in mercy, O Father, and grant that we may forsake our sins, and own and serve and worship thee so perfectly, that we may lead all the nations to seek only thy kingdom, thy power, and thy glory. All these things we ask for the love of thy Son, our Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen."

The Bishop was assisted in the service by the Dean, Canon Talbot, Canon DeVries, and the Rev. W. C. Hicks, and about thirty of the diocesan clergy participated in their vestments.

The sermon, by Professor Rollins of the Virginia Seminary, was one of rare power, strong both in its assertions and reserves, and dealt with the place of Jerusalem in the life of humanity. The preacher showed that the holy city had never been great, as great capitals go, in a military or political way, but as the City of God had taken the foremost place in the spiritual development of man from the time of David. Sketching its history rapidly and stressing the major crises in its history, paying a noble tribute to Great Britain, General Allenby and his soldiers, not forgetting the gallantry of France in this War when mentioning her large part in the Crusade, nor yet overlooking a scathing condemnation of the unspeakable Turk and the still more unspeakable Prussians, Professor Rollins passed on to some fine passages on the new Jerusalem, the ideal State, and the reign of God on earth, which it is the Christian's prayer this War will usher in. Thus both the service and the sermon led the worshipers from the earthly Jerusalem to the heavenly, and the climax was reached in the anthem, "Behold the days come", by H. H. Woodward.

The congregation was plainly deeply touched by emotion again and again, and great was the joy that in our day we have been permitted to witness the fulfilment of the patient prayers of the Saints, the faithful labors of the Crusaders, and release the holy city from the oppressions of long centuries.

BALTIMORE

Canon McComb Wins Prize—It has just been announced that the prize offered by the University of St. Andrew, Scotland, for the best essay on Prayer has been awarded to the Rev. Dr. Samuel McComb, canon of the Cathedral of Baltimore. The prize, amounting to one hundred pounds, was offered by the university under a trust established for the purpose last year and was thrown open to the whole world. Some seventeen hundred essays were sent in from many nations in all sections of the globe and in many languages. Canon McComb is peculiarly well qualified to write such an essay, as he has been one of the most earnest advocates of the value of prayer and one of the best exponents of its power. As one of the originators of the Emmanuel Movement in Boston, he has for many years been engaged in bringing religious faith and prayer to the help of medical science and skill in the treatment of special forms of disease and has accomplished many remarkable cures. He has written a very helpful book upon prayer and has just concluded a series of special sermons at the Cathedral in Baltimore upon "Prayer and the Great War". He is building up in Baltimore a clinical work of the same sort as has been done at Emmanuel church, Boston.

Christmas in Baltimore—Christmas Day was inclement, with both rain and snow, but the attendance in the various churches was quite up to the usual level. The absence of many men in the service of their country was compensated for by the presence of numerous soldiers in uniforms from the neighboring training camps. At St. Michael and All Angels' there was a most beautiful Christmas Eve service of mediaeval carols. The church was lighted by candles and the choir carried candles in procession. The effect was decidedly devotional and impressive. Midnight eucharists were celebrated at St. David's, St. Mary's and other churches. Some very generous offerings were made. There was a chastened seriousness suited to these trying times.

CHICAGO

Bishop Anderson at Orchestra Hall—Bishop Anderson was the speaker at the Christmas service of the Sunday Evening Club at Orchestra Hall on December 23. His subject was "The Victory of a Clear Conscience—A Christmas Message". In speaking of Chicago's needs the Bishop said: "Chicago needs, first of all, our love. Chicago needs our loyalty. Chicago needs to be humanized. Chicago needs to be idealized. That is, that you and I shall always fix our gaze on what it is capable of becoming, and not merely on what it is. Chicago may never abolish poverty and vice and sexuality, but this one thing we can do—we can contribute our share toward such a healthy public conscience and such benevolent legislation as will always tend to encourage virtue and to discourage vice. Chicago needs to be spiritualized. It needs that its reservoirs of undeveloped capacity shall be utilized for the public good, and that men of large temporal affairs shall also become so skilful in spiritual concerns that gathering this great city into their bosoms with all its potentialities and possibilities for good shall dedicate it to the service of humanity and God."

Christmas Graduation at Moody Institute—The Christmas Graduation exercises of the Moody Bible Institute were held at Moody church. Diplomas were awarded to forty-five men and women who had completed the two years' course of study. The Rev. Ladd Thomas, D.D., pastor of the Austin Methodist Episcopal church, was the Commencement speaker. His subject was "The Call of the Hour". "One word characterizes the need that is felt in all departments of life today, and that word is 'Efficiency'. The course at the institution must not be regarded as sufficient. Day by day the graduates must scale farther heights in the realm of knowledge. In the realm of religion they must become acquainted with the great economic problems of the hour and thus be enabled to help by counsel and sympathetic interest."

Suburban Parish Reports Progress—A year ago the Church of the Atonement, through its rector, the Rev. Frederic S. Fleming, S.T.B., and its vestry, determined to offer its privileges to all persons of Edgewater who should wish to avail themselves of such privileges. The first step was the abolition of the "Pew renting system", the church being placed on a free and open basis. At the same time the budget was increased largely so that the parish might be provided with such equipment as is essential to progressive work in a rapidly growing city community. The rector reports that the result of the year's work under the new system has more than justified the effort. The services are so largely attended as to cause the parish officials seriously to consider enlargement of the parish church, and the church school has become one of the largest in the diocese. The Rev. Kenneth O. Crosby, S.T.B., has become associate priest, and Deaconess Anne Waite Lovell has recently taken up her work in the parish.

The Advent Ordirations—On the Last Sunday in Advent, December 23, at St. Peter's church, Chicago, Bishop Anderson advanced to the priesthood the Rev. Messrs. Garth E. W. Sibbald, William A. Simms, Reese F. Thornton and the Rev. Malcolm J. Van Zandt. Mr. Sibbald has been appointed priest-in-charge of Trinity church, Belvidere; Mr. Simms as priest-in-charge of St. Paul's church, La Salle, and Mr. Thornton as assistant on the Cathedral and City Mission staff; while Mr. Van Zandt has accepted an election as curate at St. Peter's church, Chicago.

Memorial to Veteran Priest—There has been erected in St. Paul's church, Kankakee, a beautiful bronze memorial tablet with the inscription:

"In Memoriam, Duane Seneca Phillips, Priest and Doctor. Born September 18, 1834. Died May 23, 1917. Rector of this Parish 1867-1903. Rector Emeritus, 1903-1917."

In italics under the above inscription are the words from the tomb of Sir Christopher Wren, architect of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, "Si monumentum requiris, circumspice".

The tablet was presented by the parishioners and old friends of the late Dean Phillips, and was placed just above his stall in the sanctuary. The present rector of St. Paul's church, the Rev. Richard Rowley, officiated at the service of dedication.

Personal Mention—The Rev. Edward Sidney White, S.T.B., who has had charge for some years of St. Lawrence's church, Libertyville, as lay reader, deacon and priest, has accepted an appointment as priest-in-charge of the Church of the Holy Apostles, Chicago, the newest mission in the diocese.

The Rev. Charles E. Taylor, formerly rector of St. Michael and All Angels' church, Berwyn, has become associate at St. James' church, Brooklyn, and been transferred to the Diocese of Lond Island.

ALBERT EDWARD SELCER.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Archdeacon Appointed—The Rev. A. R. B. Hegeman, D.D., who has been rector of Trinity church, Binghamton, for the past fourteen years, having had a very successful rectorship, has resigned that position to accept his appointment by the Bishop to become Archdeacon of the Diocese. The vestry of Trinity church did everything in their power to induce their rector to stay with them, but he felt it to be his duty to take up the new work.

Before coming to Binghamton Dr. Hegeman had been rector of parishes in Philadelphia and in Albany, New York. While rector of Trinity church he was instrumental in removing a debt of $18,000 on the parish. Under his leadership a new parish house was built at an expense of $16,000 and a residence adjoining the church was secured for a rectory. The new archdeacon will bring great enthusiasm to his new work. For the past few months Dr. Hegeman has been working in Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, South Carolina.

Gifts From Indians—Recently at the Church of the Good Shepherd on the Indian Reservation near Syracuse a beautiful set of altar linens was received and blessed at a celebration of the Holy Communion by the priest in charge, the Rev. Henry Gibbs. All the needlework was done by the members of the class of Indian women on the reservation. The set was the gift of the president and the assistant treasurer of the Sybil Carter Indian Lace Association.

Gifts for Syracuse Parish—On Christmas Day Trinity church, Syracuse, formally became the recipient of several valuable gifts. Among them and the most important liturgically is a handsome stone altar and reredos with marble platform supporting the same and steps leading thereto. All of these are the gifts of Miss Mary Kelly and her sister, Mrs. Charles H. Miller, and they are given in memory of their brother, William Edward Kelly. The altar and reredos are built of caen stone and were designed by Brazer and Robb, architects, of New York, who also designed the church. The windows above the altar, which are to be furnished by the Gorham Company immediately, are the gift of Mr. Charles H. Miller. The subjects of these windows are the three principal events in our Lord's life.

The donors of these gifts have been faithful and devoted members of Trinity church for many years.

Paddock Lectures—The Paddock Lecturer at the General Theological Seminary this year will be one of the faculty, the Rev. Loring Woart Batten, Ph.D. The subject is "Good and Evil, A Study in Biblical Theology". The lectures will be at Evensong in the Chapel of the Good Shepherd in January as follows: 1. Monday, January 7, "The Source of Good and Evil"; 2. Wednesday, January 9, "The Governing Principle"; 3. Friday, January 11, "The Pragmatic Test"; 4. Monday, January 14, "A Rift Between Pain and Sin"; 5. Wednesday, January 16, "A Tendency Towards Dualism"; 6. Friday, January 18, "Deferred Rewards and Punishments".

War Relief at Grace Church—The first parish organization for war relief began its work last Easter Monday immediately after the declaration of war. The first work was for the Navy. Two thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight garments have been forwarded to the sailors. Two hundred and forty-five knitters are now at work making helmets, mufflers, sweaters and socks. Many of the parishioners come regularly to Grace House to make surgical dressings. This work goes on every Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. It is all directly or indirectly under the Red Cross.

Choirs at Children's Fete—A carnival for the children of soldiers and sailors now in the service of the country was held at Christmas time in the Grand Central Palace. Three thousand eight hundred little ones came the first day, thrilled over the Santa Claus that met them at the door, rode in the Ferris-wheel and merry-go-round, danced around the Christmas tree, and watched with wondering eyes the distribution of presents until the blissful moment arrived when a bag filled with presents (the very things for which they had asked when they wrote to Santa Claus, care of the Grand Central Palace), as well as nuts and apples and pop-corn balls and some other things, was handed to each patient mite. One of the features of the fete was the singing of Christmas carols by the choirs of the New York churches. Trinity choir under the leadership of Dr. Victor Baier sang on the opening day, and on each succeeding day other choristers volunteered their services.

New Year's Services—The closing of the old year and the opening of the new have always associated with them an unusual interest in the Church of the Holy Communion. Perhaps the earliest service in commemoration of the departed held in this city, outside the Roman Catholic Communion, was instituted by Dr. Muhlenberg, in 1847. On the last day of the year, at 8 p. m., the congregation took part in a deeply impressive service at which were read the names of all those called home in the twelvemonth past.

Then at 11.30 p. m. followed the Watch Service, ending just at midnight. With the beginning of the New Year the whole congregation received the Holy Communion.

A dozen or more years have proved the essential value of the unusual service which was held on New Year's morning at 11 o'clock. It is a celebration of the Holy Communion, with a specially adapted collect, epistle and gospel. The music is just as jubilant and uplifting as it is Christmas and Easter; and the sermon is specially prepared for the day. Every year this service attracts a steadily increasing number drawn from far and wide. There are some—relatively they are the minority—who begin the year in revelry. There are thousands who would begin it in the heavenly Father's house. Conscious of their dependence on Him, they would submit themselves to His direction, consecrate themselves to His service, and meet and commune with their Elder Brother at His Holy Table, asking for His constant companionship all along the road. The day must come when every God's house will see and recognize this impressive yearning and this divine aspiration.

Watch Night services were held in many of the city churches, among others at St. George's, Trinity, the Chapel of Intercession, Ascension, and the Cathedral.

Cathedral Anniversary—It was at one time the intention of the Bishop of New York and of the Trustees of the Cathedral to make St. John's Day, 1917, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the laying of the cathedral cornerstone, the occasion of a grand rally of the Church people of the diocese, and to attempt at that time to raise enough money to finish the building of the nave. It seemed, however, in this war year far better to wait until after peace has been declared before furthering the building of the cathedral. The usual St. John's Day festal services were held in the cathedral, and the members of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Cathedral League had their annual meeting at Synod House immediately afterwards. Both the Bishop and the Dean made addresses which were received with enthusiasm by the women who filled the hall. In the afternoon the Trustees of the cathedral met. Mr. Robert G. Hone, president of the Cathedral League since its inception and grandson of the Mayor of New York, who was present at the meeting with Bishop Horatio Potter when the building of the cathedral was first decided upon, has been elected secretary of the Board of Trustees to succeed Mr. George MacCullough Miller. Mr. Miller was the last member of the original Board. His death, which occurred in November, is a great loss to the whole diocese.

The work under the present contract on the foundations for the cathedral nave will soon be completed. It is planned then to surround the nave with a wall eight feet high and to cover the present work with a waterproof covering. The entrance to the cathedral will then be from Amsterdam Avenue by a broad footpath leading through the nave-to-be.

St. George's War Relief—The St. George's Club War Relief Committee publishes a monthly magazine called The Servitor in order to keep the boys at home and the boys in France and in camp in touch with each other. Christmas kits were sent to fifty members in the service, after the committee, by communicating with the parents of the boys, had found out what each fellow needed. A tobacco fund has also been organized. News is given in regard to the men on the roll of honor which is printed each month and includes the addresses of all the men on it.

MISSOURI

Patriotic Giving—It is wonderful how the money keeps coming in for all sorts of patriotic and benevolent purposes. The Rev. John Howard Lever, in charge of the Church's work in the city institutions of St. Louis, sent out an appeal shortly before Christmas for enough funds to give Christmas cheer to 5,000 men and women and children, the sick and the forgotten and the prisoners. He gave 6,200 oranges and 6,200 apples; 3,500 Christmas pins; 700 cigars; an entertainment for the workhouse; movies for the industrial school; toys to the little children in the city hospital. A splendid quartet was engaged to go out again this year to sing Christmas carols in all the institutions early in the morning of Christmas Day. All this cost about $500 and the money has been generously and gladly given. Mr. Lever sent word that this year he would give no candy; not because it costs too much, but because Mr. Hoover has told us that the United States candy bill would pay the sugar bill of England or France.

Church News Treasurer Resigns—The diocese regrets that Mr. A. J. Barrett has found it necessary to resign as treasurer of The Church News. Mr. Barrett has been most efficient in this office for many years. He is now removing to New York. The Church News is now in its forty-eighth volume. We think that it has been published without break for a longer number of years than any other diocesan paper in the Church.

New Epiphany Chapel—The Church in the diocese has just made a splendid addition to its efficiency by opening the new Epiphany Chapel in St. Louis. The building was dedicated by Bishop Coadjutor Johnson, Sunday evening, December 23. Addresses were made by the Bishop Coadjutor, by the Rev. Dr. Z. B. Phillips, rector of St. Peter's, and by the Rev. W. L. Essex, the vicar of Epiphany. The building is of brick and is architecturally most attractive. The chapel proper has seating capacity for 300 persons. There are rooms for all sorts of purposes connected with the work of a vigorous spiritual power house in the midst of a thickly populated district, where rare opportunities are afforded for pouring in wine and oil and where there are also a splendid corps of men and women waiting to be brought into the Church's life and given work to do for God and humanity. The cost of the building is $25,000. Generous members of St. Peter's have done much to make the completion possible. And the congregation of Epiphany has given liberally according to its means.

Campaign by Dr. Patton—The Church in St. Louis counts herself fortunate in that she has secured the services of the Rev. Dr. R. W. Patton to carry on a missionary campaign, February 24 to March 3, 1918. Committees on organizing for the campaign are vigorously at work and a great spiritual blessing is sure to result. In every place to which Dr. Patton has been the Lord has surely seemed to work with him, confirming the Word by signs following, both in the work of the parishes and in the lives of the Church folk.

Work in University Town—Seldom does it happen that a minister of the Church is permitted in one year to make such an impression on a community as that which has been made upon the university town of Columbia by the Rev. James Hardin George. His last service with the congregation of Calvary church was on Christmas Day in the morning. That night he left for New York to get his boat for France, where he is appointed to war work in connection with the Young Men's Christian Association. The vestry of Calvary regretfully accepted Mr. George's resignation as rector, and with real sorrow not unmixed with pride the community bade him good-bye. Columbia is the seat of the Missouri State University. Mingling freely in its life and in the life of the city, upon the foundation of Jesus Christ, Mr. George built gold, silver, costly stones. Mr. George was formerly instructor in St. John's College, Shanghai. Before coming to Columbia he was rector for six years of St. Alban's, Danielson, Connecticut.

Clergyman Appointed—The Bishop Coadjutor has announced the appointment of the Rev. Douglas H. Atwill to be minister of St. Augustine's, St. Louis. Mr. Atwill is the son of the late Bishop of West Missouri, a graduate of Yale in the class '03 and of the Episcopal Theological Scho in the class of '07. He was seven yea rector of the important parish of Calvar Sedalia, Diocese of West Missouri, and at present rector of St. Paul's, Santa Pau Diocese of Los Angeles. Mr. Atwill assume charge of St. Augustine's on t first of February. This mission is in part of the city where unusual opportuniti for forward movements of the Church a just now presented.

Cornerstone Laid at Houston—In spi of the cold, drizzling rain and the gloo that overspread the city the ceremoni attending the cornerstone laying of the ne Trinity church were carried out fully ar a large crowd braved the elements to wi ness the beautiful service. Bishop Ki solving officiated, assisted by the rector the church, the Rev. Clinton S. Quin. unique and interesting feature of the servi was the procession by the choir. The sin ers started in the old church buildi across the street, marched across the stre singing, and onto the platform built arou the cornerstone and upon which the cer mony was performed. The regular servi for this occasion was carried out, the Bisho leading the prayers and leading in the r sponsive readings, while the Scripture le son was read by the rector. The ceremor took place on the Third Sunday in Adven There was a brief address by the Bishop, i which he said that the laying of a corne stone of a church partook somewhat of th nature of a sacrament, and that it wa very different in spirit from the laying the cornerstone of a secular building. church, he declared, is an expression faith, indicating that men recognize tha they themselves are temples for the i dwelling of the Holy Spirit, and that the believe they are the immortal children an immortal Father.

The foundations of the new church hav been laid and the walls of the parish hous adjoining it are going up. When com pleted the church and parish house will o cupy a quarter of a block at the corn of Main Street and Holman Avenue an will be one of the most beautiful structure in the city. Its cost is estimated at abo $80,000, of which sum over $50,000 has bee secured in pledges and cash by the buildin committee, and it is the hope of the recto and committee to have the church out o debt by the time it is completed.

Daughters of the King Organize—Em manuel Chapter of the Daughters of th King was organized with an impressiv ceremony at Christ church, Eagle Lake (th Rev. A. J. Gayner Banks, rector), on th Third Sunday in Advent. After the investi ture the rector addressed the nine charte members in the chancel and pointed ou the happy coincidence that the ceremon was taking place on Red Cross Sunda and that the silver crosses they wore an the red cross of the humanitarian Re Cross movement were synonymous in thei meaning. Both indicated the carrying o the Christ spirit into a waiting world, bot involved sacrifice and service and bot earned a wonderful reward in this worl and the next.

A Remarkable Record—The annual report for St. Paul's church, Centreville, the Rev. J. Dirickson Cummins, rector, which the rector is compiling, shows a remarkable growth and development along all lines. St. Paul's parish is one of the oldest in the diocese and the original records which are still intact date back to 1692 containing the "Oath of Abjuration" and "The Test" signed by each vestryman. The chalice and patent presented to the parish by Colonel John Hawkins in 1716 are still in use.

The report as compiled relates the experience of the every member canvass made in January, when the offerings were increased more than 100 per cent. and the missionary apportionment was quadrupled. The Church property, consisting of the church, parish house and rectory, has been greatly improved at much expense. The Woman's Auxiliary has given more than $500 during the year.

The parish house is used as a community centre and the headquarters of all the war organizations of the community, six in all, in addition to the regular parish organizations.

During the year a large number of memorials have been placed, including a silver bread box, silk bourse and veil, a large stained glass window, a very handsome marble reredos, including four beautiful statues of the Evangelists, in memory of the Rev. James A. Mitchell, rector of the parish for thirty-seven years; a mosaic inlaid wainscoting for the sanctuary in memory of General and Mrs. William McKenney, who has for nearly half a century senior warden of the parish; a large clergy desk and stall and a silk flag given by the families of the volunteers from the parish. A pipe organ costing over $3,000 will be installed by Epiphany. The communicant list has increased nearly 50 per cent. and the Sunday school has an exceptionally large enrolment.

Anniversary Celebration—The tenth anniversary of the rectorship of the Rev. F. G. Hoyt as rector of St. Paul's church, Columbia, was celebrated on Wednesday evening, December 19. About three hundred parishioners and friends of the parish gathered to do honor to the occasion. The Bishop was present and made an address of congratulation. He was followed by a Russian artist, Dimitri Romanoffsky, who spoke on conditions in Russia. Congratulatory addresses were also made by neighboring clergy and various ministers of the town. Mr. H. M. North, a vestryman, introduced Mrs. Harsh, who presented Mrs. Hoyt a gold pin set with jewels on behalf of the women of the parish. Mr. North presented Mr. Hoyt with a purse well filled with gold on behalf of the members of the congregation. The Bishop in his address read a letter from the Board of Missions of the diocese which referred to the spirit shown by this congregation toward its work. The Sunday school here has held the banner, which the Board awards annually to the school that contributes most per capita to Diocesan missions, for three years in succession.

English Church News

Mr. Temple's Impatience—The Rev. W. Temple and his friends of the "Life and Liberty" movement exhibit a natural impatience with the result of the recent meeting of the Representative Council. Mr. Temple has sent a letter to the press, which the Church papers have printed in full, but which has apparently been severely truncated in the Times. He consoles himself by claiming that the fact that a "Grand Committee" was decided on is at least a defeat for the reactionaries. But the Life and Liberty Council were hoping for a straight vote on the broad issue, and an advance made in the light of it. The "Grand Committee" is indeed empowered, if it thinks fit, to draft a scheme, but this means delay, and the reformers are in a hurry to get something done. So Mr. Temple puts it right up to the leaders of the Church to express themselves, and give a lead. He stigmatizes the conception of our leaders that their function is primarily to "keep us all together" as disastrous. The bishops are believed to be in advance of the general body of the Church: "why then do not they test their power to rally Churchmen to the support of their forward policy?" We seem, he adds, to be involved in a vicious circle. The leaders wait till the Church as a whole desires to follow: but the Church as a whole gives little heed to the matter because no call to advance has been given. As to the objection that no forward movement should be made during the war, he replies that no other section of society is acting on this principle. The Labor party, National Education, and many other movements are in process of reconstruction, notwithstanding the absence of the men in the trenches: is the Church to be the only body which is to wait for peace before setting its house in order?

The C. M. S. Will Not Split—It is good news to hear that the memorialists who are pressing for a widening of doctrinal standards for the agents of the Church Missionary Society have no ultimatum in their possession. Two at least have declared that if their overture is rejected they will go on supporting the Society as before. One of them writes to the Guardian, explaining that he thinks the present attitude of the Society exceedingly costly in possible candidates, so he has joined in the protest, but has "faith enough in the future to leave it there". He is not going to turn over to any other society, or to leave the C. M. S. This is satisfactory, but if the committee is well-advised it will not trade on the idea that "nothing will happen if we say No". A great missionary society cannot afford to risk the charge of obscurantism.

The Divorce Agitation—The Guardian has an effective analysis of the causes for the new agitation for easy divorce. The national unsettlement has produced an abnormal number of cases of bigamy among people in the lower walks of life, and of immorality among the rich. Marriage ties have snapped sometimes in the most unexpected instances. Some deadly virus must be at work, which the writer finds in the overstrain with work or anxiety, or both. Most of the relations of life, social, industrial, and economic, are in a state of flux: nerves are highly strung: the conditions of the time are intensely febrile. Responsibility, duty and prudence seem to be in the process of uprooting. And the war-work of the women does not make for the strengthening of home-life. The "reformers" do not see the end of the road on which they are moving—social and moral chaos. Marriage no doubt creates many hard cases, but the world long ago realized that it is impossible to legislate especially for hard cases. It is an example of the unreadiness of a certain type of mind to learn from experience, that it should be proposing to establish the evil from which "the United States, as we recently showed, is trying to rid itself".

I need not add to the Guardian's views by quoting the utterances of the bishops, most of whom have spoken quite plainly on the point in their Advent messages. But there is one suggestion of a useful kind, made in the pages of the Church Times by a writer who signs himself "A Country Parson", which, he says, would be worth more than any number of resolutions at meetings. It is that the clergy should pledge themselves not to perform any marriages under the proposed Act, nor to permit other clergy to officiate for that purpose in their churches. He feels sure that the ministers of every other Christian body would join in the same pledge. He calls on the Marriage Defense Committee to issue some such declaration for signature.

Those "Joy Bells"—The bishops and others who were carried away by the British victory near Cambrai, and ordered the church bells to be rung as a celebration of it, are a little inclined to regret the hastiness of their act. But this is not because the British have since had to yield some of the ground gained by the "tanks", but rather because the rejoicing itself was premature. The Bishop of Chelmsford (Dr. Watts Ditchfield) who had advised the ringing of bells in his diocese, has confessed that his impulse, though natural, was unkind and unmerciful, as the bells were ringing at the same time that telegrams were arriving announcing the loss of dear ones. It seems unsympathetic, he adds, to set the bells ringing at such a moment.

More "Second Thoughts"—Another instance of "thinking it over" is recorded in a very different connection. Dr. Davey Briggs, vicar of St. Philip and St. James, Oxford, who had of his own motion altered the Canon in the Communion Office so as to bring the Prayer of Oblation into the position which it occupies in the American Rite, was ordered by his bishop (Dr. Gore) to adhere to the present arrangement in the English Church. Dr. Gore himself is strongly in favor of the change, but it cannot be made until properly authorized. At first, Dr. Davey Briggs intended to refuse the Bishop's ruling, but on later reflection he has, says the Bishop, "informed me that he has complied with the order which I felt reluctantly bound to give".

BOSTON

War and Missions Finance—The Laymen's Committee on General Missions has sent out its annual letter to the parishes and clergy showing the apportionment of each parish and mission for the next fourteen months' period. For nine consecutive years the diocese has overpaid its apportionment, and the committee is urging that the decade be completed in the same effective fashion. Bishop Lawrence adds a personal word to the same effect, saying that the War has shown us the possibilities of real giving for any worth-while cause ably administered in a way we had never learned before—although he might have added, had not modesty forbidden, except for the Pension Fund campaign, immediately preceding our entrance into the War.

Almost at the same time, the War Commission is getting into action for the raising of its half-million, and the work of local organization for securing this diocese's share has been put—like the Missions campaign—into the hands of the laymen; in this case the "Episcopalian Club" is to organize and accomplish the really great task of raising before January 28 some $45,000 for the Church's war work. Bishop Lawrence himself has already gotten an equal amount in hand or promised for the work, which will include the great undertaking, just commenced, of refitting and operating the old City Club building as a Service Club for enlisted men.

It was not long ago that two such campaigns as this within the diocese, simultaneously starting, would have been deemed too much for the sensibilities of lay pocketbooks. Care should be used, we have been told, not to seek too many gifts from well-meaning men, already hedged about with multifarious appeals for money. I have known fearful embargoes placed upon appeals for special or emergency funds for local missionary work, lest the regular donations to missionary running expenses be diverted. But those were the days when only a few realized the perpetually true maxim that opportunities to give to new objects of genuine worth, well administered, simply kept in smoother running order the fine spiritual machinery of personal self-giving expressed in money. As Bishop Lawrence says: "the War has at last taught all of us that elementary lesson. In spite of—or rather, because of—Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., Armenian, 'French Wounded', Halifax and a multitude of other appeals, we shall proceed promptly to oversubscribe our share of the War Commission's fund and for the tenth consecutive year more than meet our missionary apportionment. And if the sad deficit of the General Board of Missions stares at us to disprove such a rule of giving, I will risk a prophecy that at the end of this year a fully met budget there also will make us able to say that it was the exception that proves the rule. England, with all the tremendous pressure of three years of war, has not curtailed her forward work for the Kingdom of God, and the American Church will not lag behind her.

Emmanuel's New Organ—Emmanuel church, Boston, is rejoicing in a magnificent new organ, long needed to give expression to the high quality of musical work which she has always maintained. The new organ is of Canadian manufacture and is probably the finest instrument at present in the city of Boston.

A Priest Enlists—The Rev. John C. Poland, Jr., curate of the Church of the Ascension, Fall River, is the first of the clergy of the diocese to enlist in the Army or Navy, otherwise than as a chaplain. Mr. Poland has entered the Radio Service of the United States Naval Reserve. He will report to the Charlestown Navy Yard and then, probably, take up work in the great Radio School at Cambridge. He feels that he is in no sense turning his back upon his priesthood, but rather is following the heroic example of the many French priests long since found in the battle-line of France and, at a longer distance, following in the footsteps of our own Bishop Polk, who laid down the bishop's staff to take up the sword. In his farewell sermon in the Church of the Ascension, Mr. Poland quoted Bishop Lawrence as saying: "From one point of view I am gratified that clergy desire to serve the country; it is a token of their spirit. It is to some degree a source of weakness and limitation that the clergy are exempted. On the other hand, if they show the right spirit, the exemption will not affect public sentiment. And a certain number of men in the ranks will do much to offset that."

Mr. Poland's rector, the Rev. Charles E. Jackson, says: "For my own part, I shall deeply miss Mr. Poland. He has grown to be one in whose friendship I rejoice. We have shared our mutual confidences, occupied ourselves with common tasks, and interpreted each others' ideals." Mr. Poland recently declined a call to be assistant at St. Stephen's church, Providence.

ORDINATION

On St. Stephen's Day, December 26, at 11 o'clock in St. Paul's cathedral, Detroit, the bishop of the diocese ordained to the diaconate Mr. Henry Midworth and Mr. Edgar L. Tiffany. Mr. Midworth has long been a lay reader in the diocese and for several years lay missionary in charge of St. John's mission, Plymouth. Mr. Tiffany has for some time been connected with St. Paul's church, Flint.

COMMUNITY AND NATIONAL LIFE LESSONS IN SCHOOL

Federal Government Lessons Reaching Millions of Boys and Girls

WASHINGTON, D. C.—"Machine industry and community life" is the special theme for December in the series of lessons on the War, issued by the United States Bureau of Education, Department of the Interior, and now being studied by a million or more school boys and girls of all grades throughout the Nation.

The Bureau's series of lessons on "Community and National Life", as they were termed by President Wilson in his original announcement to the schools, have now reached their third issue. October and November issues dealt with the organization of modern industrial life as compared with pioneer days, the effect of war on commerce in nitrate, the war and aeroplane production and wise consumption and similar topics. The idea of teaching the principles of conservation underlying successful prosecution of the War originated with the Food Administration, but the plan has now been taken over by the Bureau of Education.

Parents as well as pupils will be interested in the December lessons. The older high school students will learn of the rise of the machine industry, from the day of the hand loom and the "spinning jenny" through the changes wrought by the industrial revolution, to the large-scale production, world markets, and social problems of modern industry. The various elements of cost in factory operating, education as encouraged by industry, the contribution of the press, are also treated in this lesson for older pupils.

In the section intended for the first class of the high school and the upper grades of the elementary school the subject is "how men made heat to work". The lesson reviews the use of animals, wind and water as sources of power.

For pupils in the intermediate grades of the elementary schools "inventions" is the subject taken up. The roll of invention is called from the simple traps and weapons of primitive men to the printing and telegraphy of today. Iron and steel are treated historically, and the modern processes are described whereby smelting is made easier and cheaper than ever before. Other lessons in this section have to do with the "effect of machinery on rural life" and "patents and inventions". Special attention is given to the farm tractor, which, besides its use in increasing production, makes possible the movement of heavy trench guns and furnished the principle from which have been developed the famous "tanks" used by the British Army in France.

Two Deaconesses Set Apart

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—On St. Thomas' Day in the Chapel of the Epiphany, Bishop Anderson set apart as deaconesses Miss Grace Wilson and Miss Dorothy Weaver, both graduates of the Philadelphia Deaconess School. The Bishop, at the beginning of a very impressive address on the deaconess life, spoke of the fact that it was the first time that a service of setting apart of deaconesses had been held in the Diocese of Chicago.

AUXILIARY PILGRIMAGE TEACHES WOMEN TO PRAY

Miss Emery Describes the Aftermath of the Pilgrimage

By Julia C. Emery

This war had not been long upon its dreadful way before it roused a feeling among English Christians which impelled them to call for a Nation-wide Mission of Repentance and Hope.

Stirred by that call and led by Mrs. Montgomery, secretary of the Women's Central Committee in England, there was formed the Society of the Pilgrimage of Prayer. Their plan is described as follows: "For one fortnight the pilgrims leave their homes and their home duties and make their pilgrimage on foot from village to village, wherever the parish priest has invited them, staying with the villagers themselves and bearing witness to the power and love of God. They call the people to come and pray together for pardon, for peace, for God's blessing on our land, our King, on our soldiers and sailors and on our homes and loved ones. They try to come very near to our Lord in prayer and to bring His presence with them into the homes they visit."

American Pilgrimage

This Pilgrimage was taking place in the Summer before our Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions was to hold its triennial meeting, in October, 1916. Our Nation had not then entered into the War, but doubtless the war cloud hanging over Europe made more real to the hearts of some the cruel horror and yet the limitless possibilities that lie in the age long warfare between holiness and sin. So it was resolved in the triennial gatherings of the Auxiliary that American Churchwomen also should enter upon a Pilgrimage of Prayer.

Its method has been described and its progress related in the pages of our Church papers. Both methods and progress differed widely from those pursued in England. With us, the Church Year from Advent, 1916, to Advent, 1917, made up the cycle of our pilgrimage, and the prayers arose week by week from diocese after diocese until the round of the American Church and its missions had been made. The subjects of our prayers were chosen while we were still a neutral people, but in their petition for unity, peace and the coming of the Kingdom among men, every purpose of every righteous prayer we pray today is found.

As far back as last May a committee of preparation was formed for the district of Hankow, and its week in the following October was kept with daily Communions in some churches and less frequent Communions in others and with prayer meetings, planned by native and foreign clergy and led by Bible women, members of the Woman's Auxiliary and Juniors and the girls of St. Hilda's School. The Rev. S. C. Hwang preached on Christian Unity to Chinese women, and the Rev. A. M. Sherman conducted a quiet hour for the foreign women of the Wuchang compound. In Ichang a little company of five—one an Englishwoman and one a Churchwoman from Virginia—joined in English intercessions. In Changsha the arrival of thousands of soldiers from Szēchuan combined with rain in torrents failed to keep a company of twenty sincere and earnest souls from the two celebrations of the Holy Communion and two afternoon meetings that had been planned. In one period set apart for continuous intercession, men and women of Ichang both took their share. China's week most happily included the Feast of All Saints, which to our Christians is as a second Easter.

From Japan, Deaconess Knapp writes that in Tokyo there was a daily Communion in the cathedral, at 6:45, with special prayers at Evensong, and Mrs. Wallace adds: "The prayers and litany for missions, so helpful at this time, will not cease to be of use in future years."

In Kyoto district the priests in charge at mission stations were asked to celebrate the Holy Communion on the Sunday and to speak at one of the services, upon prayer. Father Powell of St. John the Evangelist's, Boston, visiting in Kyoto at the time, conducted two quiet days, one for the workers in that city and its neighborhood and one for those on the west coast. Kyoto's week immediately preceded that of their special anniversary evangelistic meetings, and this gave the Christians a special object for prayer.

In Cuba thirty-eight Havana women gathered for a special service with their bishop; the priest of the colored mission at Limonar sent out a Pilgrimage leaflet to the Spanish-speaking people; the Juniors at Guantanamo had a corporate Communion when about fifty communicants assembled, and there, and in the Hooker School in Mexico, the pupils received daily instruction in the subjects of the petitions of the Pilgrimage.

At the end of the year those who had been praying in their separate places in their appointed weeks were asked to join in the closing week of prayer, and we can well believe that thousands of hearts re-echoed the thought expressed by a worker in the Virginia mountains, who wrote: "It seems as though every year ought to be a Pilgrimage Year."

To those of us who have been on pilgrimage, not one week only, or two, but through every week of this year, there has ceased to be the thought of stopping; the necessity is on us more than ever, for keeping on. Are not too many in our Church and Nation still too like what a correspondent in a small country place in England says of her neighbors: "This is practically a very godless little backwater, and though there is scarcely a house where there has not been a great loss, and for all there is the terrible anxiety, yet prayer seems to be the last thing wished for. It was very awful to me, when after two years I came home from France where every day the services in the little Roman Catholic church were attended by every one and on Fridays there were special services and prayers.

"I do think if our great desires can be prayers, they are made. For we work, we all have incessant work, and the greatest anxieties, for over three years. It seems as though one could never be away from the awful grandeur of this sacrifice. And the splendid friendship between the two great English-speaking peoples, both living, working and dying for the same mighty cause, is the greatest help—the spiritual bond most of all.

"It seems very beautiful and fitting, the beautiful unity of souls this Pilgrimage plan makes."

So, if the Pilgrimage Year has taught its followers anything, it must have taught us this—the absolute necessity for prayer. The Blessed Lord, who is our Great Example, had a work to do to which He gave incessant toil, but a part of that labor of His most laborious earthly life was performed in the silence of the night and in the loneliness of the garden where He wrestled in prayer with God. It will be happy for us not to wait till loss and suffering and sorrow intensified drive us, like our friends in France, to our churches and to our knees.

CHRISTMAS ADOPTION IS GREAT SUCCESS IN AUBURN

Children and Families Adopted by Auburn Citizens

Auburn, New York.—The Christmas adoption plan has proved a success, a far greater success even than had been anticipated. Under the generalship of Miss Pauline Titus, Smith and Pearson's store, several men from the City Hall, the Woman's Bible Class of St. Peter's, the children of the city's Sunday schools, and the public in general have combined their forces and collected toys for 125 children, besides a great many Christmas dinners. The dinner baskets all contained meat, sugar, potatoes, vegetables, coffee and tea, bread and other necessities for a real Christmas dinner. No discrimination has been shown in the distribution of names, and wherever a worthy poor family was reported the Charities Department has seen that this name was given to some organization which would see to it that that particular family was well taken care of on Christmas.

The plan of adoption as worked out by Miss Titus in Auburn this year is a new plan which is being watched with interest by charity and social workers in other cities. Possibly the people who have been interested in some poor family this Christmas will keep up the interest during the year.

Donations for the work have been much larger this year than was expected. The War seems to have loosened rather than tightened the purse strings of the public.

How One Parish Saves Coal

Lawrenceburg, Indiana.—Due to the shortage of coal the week-day celebrations of the Holy Communion of Trinity church here will be held at the home of the vicar, the Rev. H. M. Kellam. It is suggested that this is one way to assist in carrying on the war.

The members and adherents of Trinity church are rejoicing over the fact that an every-member canvass has just been completed with remarkable results. The number of pledges for local church expenses was increased by 66⅔ per cent. and the amount pledged by 70.9 per cent. The number of persons making pledges for missions was increased by 128 per cent. and the amount pledged for missions increased 360 per cent.

The vicar has organized a troop of boy scouts, which is increasing in membership and effectiveness.

Bishop Jones and the Special Commission

To the Editor of The Churchman:

The report of the Commission appointed by the House of Bishops to hear testimony in the case of Bishop Paul Jones of Utah having been made public becomes a matter of public concern, and, as affecting the interests of the Church, calls for discussion. I am utterly opposed to the views that seem to be held by Bishop Jones in regard to the prosecution of the War. I, therefore, write not because of any sympathy with his opinions, but in the interest of that justice and fair play which are vital to the well-being of the Church. I call attention to the following points in connection with the report:

1. The Commission refuses to say that Bishop Jones has been connected with "seditious" organizations, "but does say questionable organizations in respect of loyalty to the Government". It is not stated what these organizations are, nor in what their "questionable" character consists.

2. The Commission declares that Bishop Jones has promulgated "unpatriotic doctrines", but does not make public what those doctrines are, nor does it state in what their unpatriotic character consists.

3. The Commission holds that "in our free country" Bishop Jones is not to be "officially restrained" in the maintenance of opinions which he holds as an individual, "but it also thinks that weighty responsibility attaches to pronouncements by a bishop, and that thoughtfulness and reticence on his part are exceedingly desirable". Surely "weighty responsibility" attaches to a pronouncement by any conscientious Christian, and "thoughtfulness" is always desirable. But it is difficult to see why "reticence" is a virtue, and, if it is such, in what direction it should be exercised. Certainly plain speaking by bishops, as well as by other men, of that which they believe to be the truth is quite as "desirable" as is "reticence".

4. The Commission holds that if a bishop comes to the conscientious conviction that war is unchristian, he should, before making "an Episcopal proclamation" to that effect, withdraw "from his position of Episcopal leadership". And it apparently bases this opinion on the fact that "this Church in the United States is practically a unit in holding that it [war] is not an unchristian thing". This pronouncement of the Commission raises very important issues. Has this Church a right to forbid the teaching of any views that contradict such a "practical" unanimity, even though those views are not forbidden by the standards of this Church? Do those standards and the sworn vows of a bishop to abide by them give no protection against the opinion of a majority, provided only that majority is great enough? Is there not here an opening for a monstrous tyranny? If Bishop Jones has offended against the law of the land, he may be convicted of and punished for that offense. But until he is so convicted he has a right to hold and teach views that are not inconsistent with the doctrines of this Church.

5. The Commission concludes its report with the following statement:

"The Commission has not been unmindful of the risk of establishing a dangerous precedent in yielding to requests which desire the removal of a bishop from his diocese or district where canonical charges are not involved.

"It, therefore, desires to place on record that the advising of this action should not be interpreted as a precedent, but that it seems necessary at this time of an excited condition of public opinion."

Has then this Commission yielded up law and justice in deference to "an excited condition of public opinion"? On account of such "an excited condition" is a bishop to be called on to resign his office, even if he has not offended against the law of this Church?

It is to be hoped that the whole matter will receive careful consideration, and that this report will not lightly be regarded as expressing the mind of the Church.

Status of Our Seminaries

To the Editor of The Churchman:

After reading with interest the article of my friend, Dr. Palmer, on the status of our seminaries, I am moved to ask a little space in your columns for a diagnosis of the "Matter with the people", who are making demands on the seminaries.

Each age has its fads. Forty years ago you were asked to buy soap from Jones, and were promised a chromo: in other words, we had achieved a state of chromo-civilization, and had our Rogers' groups in conspicuous places. Today the latter are accumulating dust in attics and we are in the throes of green trading stamps and the kindergarten: for it is insufficient to tempt the adult to unnecessary buying, we must tempt the infant mind to work and play. This latter, in turn, is getting in its harvest in our congregations, as it is more than a generation since we took an outdoor form of education and forced it into confined and airless conditions, with the usual result of moldiness on the initiative faculties.

Just as the kindergarten began its deadly work there arose a craze for vocational education. The child was to be taught in so gentle and virtuous a manner that the mind would never be agitated. This being established, education departed from our schools, and in its place came the teacher chock-full of ideas on the psychology of the infant mind. The subsequent course of drums and trumpets graduated a child with a demand for amusement rather than knowledge, and profoundly loaded with a smattering of everything under the sun except reading, writing, spelling and the ability to add.

These grown-up children are now in the churches demanding amusement from the pulpit rather than a direction of initiative. They no longer sing,

"Must I be carried to the skies
On flowery beds of ease," they feel sure of such a carriage, and demand unlimited movies during the process.

To the good people who ask why we should be drawn into a war, when we have had no opium wars, no Congo atrocities, no long string of Siberian exiles on our consciences, it can be answered that we have abandoned the thrift of our Puritan forefathers, the contentment in the state of life to which God has called us and, in their stead, demand as essentials, a list of utter luxuries.

After this war has taken its toll of our best we shall, thank God, change our standpoint. We shall no longer ask, "Who is going to amuse me at church today?" Our cry will be, "Lord, what wilt thou have ME to do?" and the seminaries must have their graduates ready with the reply.

Physicians and Prohibition

To the Editor of The Churchman:

In the letter of Mr. Empringham I beg leave to make a slight verbal correction. Harvey discovered the circulation of the blood, not "Hervey".*

I beg also to state that in a town of Northern New York where I pass my Summers prohibition has been carried to the extent of not allowing a physician's prescription to be filled by the druggist unless the law be broken and the druggist be liable to a severe penalty. I regret, of course, that in the judgment of Mr. James Empringham the wisdom and conservatism of age does not seem to impress him favorably.

Miss Scudder's Message

To the Editor of The Churchman:

I have read with interest Miss Scudder's article, "A Christmas Message". With great respect for her sincerity let me challenge what she says about Russia, and about New York. "Word reached Russia," she says, "that American Democracy was a sham."

This very evening I read in The Living Age (of December 15) the report that did reach Russia. "A friend went to see some brigand anarchists who had returned from America and installed themselves in a fine (stolen) mansion in the capital. He asked them with unsuspected irony why they did not put their principles into practice in the great Republic. 'Ach! you're right, but that beastly police of theirs.'"

The word that did reach Russia was that America was a country where the rights of personal freedom and honest industry were protected from violence and covetousness; where the great truth was recognized that men are created with different gifts and capacities, and that the true welfare of society can be obtained only by each acting well his part. That is what St. Paul teaches us in the first epistle to the Corinthians. But that is not what the Russian socialists taught. The idea of reciprocal duties never was in their hearts or books. And so, when the discipline of autocracy was gone, there was no discipline of virtue. Peasants plundered the manor houses, soldiers refused obedience to their officers, workmen refused to work. The social fabric disintegrated. Let us in America beware of these socialist doctrines, which are as hostile to the teaching of the Apostle as they are to the ideals of American Democracy.

For we do "give that last man his chance". We have cleaned up the New York slums. The percentage of our "working population" that is on "the starvation line" is small and decreasing. There is sickness, but the death rate has been cut in two within thirty years. There is inefficiency and sin, which always bring suffering. But faithfully and earnestly New York Christians are striving to remedy both. I know New York well. I know the plain people well, and love them. And I can assure Miss Scudder that she is mistaken in her judgment of them. We are not perfect, but American Democracy is no sham.

I need not, however, rely on my own observation. Let every reader of THE CHURCHMAN read Mary Antin's Promised Land, or the Rev. Mr. Rihbany's autobiography, and they will see the real message that the honest, hardworking Poles and Armenians sent to Russia; that America is a land of true freedom, of real Democracy, where the Ten Commandments are respected and we still teach our children—Thou shalt not steal; thou shalt not bear false witness; thou shalt not covet.

Give Clergy Secular Training

Regarding the cleavage between clergy and laity, both sides have something to say that is worth while. Few, however, enjoy the experience which has been mine. For twenty years, covering an experience as both clergyman and layman, seeing both sides to the extent of my ability to discern, my observation leads me to the conclusion that clergymen, like blacksmiths, sailors, school teachers and policemen, are not so much the product of the system of education and training through which they have passed as of the environment that has accompanied that training, and of the opportunities found for practical experience in their profession while in training for the ministry. The apprentice system produces the best workmen in any field. The idea of a longer and more useful diaconate appeals to me strongly. The contempt which the B. D. feels for that irksome year of his diaconate we all know. A young graduate told me a few years since that he intended to travel during the year as he could not do anything in the Church until "priested".

If the age for the priesthood were set at thirty, and the deacon spent the preceding years, say five, supporting himself in a secular vocation and giving his Sundays and spare time to mission work, he would be far better equipped for his priesthood; and perhaps (if he had it in him) his contract with the secular world might contribute something to his environment as well as draw something out of it.

Some data might be obtainable from the records of men who have devoted a few years to secular pursuits before entering the ministry. I have known several, and they have stood up well in the ministry.

Tennessee Savagery

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

I believe I am one of those annoying persons who frequently comment on editorial opinion, to whom a paragraph in THE CHURCHMAN of December 23 refers; but I should like very much to thank you for the notice in that same CHURCHMAN of the burning alive of a colored man accused of rape in Tennessee. Its sincere indignation comforted a heart which race contempt and hatred often make sore as I observe them rife in my country today. Your notice of this frightful savagery was the only one I have seen in any paper: but perhaps that is due to my careless reading.

Wine for Holy Communion

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

Here is another suggestion for the administration of the wine in Holy Communion as being less cumbersome than individual cups, and less awkward and objectionable than dipping the bread in the wine. Provide a number of small spoons about the size of coffee spoons, one for each communicant. Have them placed on a tray at some convenient place or passed by an assistant. Let each communicant take a spoon, dip it in the cup when passed, then replace the spoon upon a tray.

When there are a large number of communicants the spoons could be cleansed by an assistant and used again.

An Appeal

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

One of the problems facing the Church Mission of Help is how to give the young girls under its care the opportunity to better themselves economically. Many of these girls are wholly dependent on their own earnings for support; others, living at home, help the family income.

To take them out of their present occupation, in the interest of increasing their earning capacity, would be to deprive them wholly or in part of their means of livelihood; but more than one of these girls have the intelligence and ability to forge ahead if opportunity were given them. Youth chafes at monotony and the work they are now doing holds nothing out to ambition. We appeal to you at this Christmas season to come to our aid in opening out a future of hopefulness to these girls, who only need the chance to complete the education or training hitherto denied them in order to maintain themselves in decent independence.

Five dollars a week for six months would free one for the clerical training she is fitted for and another for the completion of the high school course required for a nurse's training; $60 are needed to maintain still another girl at a course in filing.

Are there any readers of THE CHURCHMAN who, mindful of their own young ambitions, will furnish this money to offer these young girls wider opportunities?

Cheques should be made payable to the Church Mission of Help and sent to 2 East Twenty-fourth Street, Room 152.

"Four Times a Day

I Reach for Those Bubble Grains"

So one mother says.

That is the way to use Puffed Rice and Puffed Wheat. They are both foods and tidbits. Serve them all day long.

These are whole-grain bubbles—airy, flaky, fragile. They have an alluring taste.

In the morning serve like other cereals, or mix with any fruit. At other times float in bowls of milk.

Salt or butter, like peanuts or popcorn, for children after school. Use like nut-meats in candy making — as wafers in your soups.

For these delightful dainties are the best foods one can eat. They are whole grains, with whole-grain nutrition. Every food cell is exploded, so that every atom feeds.

Some Recent Books

The Jesus of History. By T. R. Glover. Foreword by the Archbishop of Canterbury. New York: Association Press. $1.00.

The Christ We Forget—A Life of Our Lord for Men of Today. By P. Whitwell Wilson. New York: Fleming, Revell Co. $1.50.

Two books that make real the Jesus of history in His relationship to the men of today, one by a Cambridge fellow and lecturer, and the other by an English journalist and brilliant parliamentarian. Both authors are young men. Both books are fresh and felicitous. Neither is fantastic. Each with unusual artistry relimns an old picture, but each does it in his own way. Mr. Glover bases his book on his many lectures before Y. M. C. A. audiences in Great Britain and India.

Mr. Wilson bases his book on his private studies of the New Testament. His experience on the London Daily News and in Parliament was the urge that caused him to relate the Jesus of history to the men of today. The Jesus of History presents such subjects as "The Man and His Mind", "The Teacher and the Disciples", "The Teaching of Jesus Upon God—and Upon Sin", "Jesus and Man", "The Choice of the Cross and Jesus in Christian Thought", and offers not a final presentation of the historical Jesus but suggests a study that will deepen our interest in Him and love for Him. The leaders of the Y. M. C. A. in America have already hailed this book as the most important one issued in a decade by the Association Press, on the personality of Jesus.

The chapters are grape vines heavily laden and the author is an expert gardener. His method is illuminating and the results stimulating and the whole effect of the book is a remarkable impression of the real Jesus and His contact with life in His relation to men.

The Christ We Forget pictures with surprising freedom, born of the journalistic sense, forty-two incidents in the life of Jesus Christ. But this brilliant picturesque presentation is not an unlicensed photo; on the contrary it is orthodox enough and all done in a spirit of reverent feeling that with a deep tenderness appreciates the beautiful story of the most beautiful character of the ages.

The book is perhaps more literary than Mr. Glover's and offers less instruction, but the flights of imagination are higher and the appeal of the book is compelling. Both of these books will reach with a captivating charm a large class of people that would not so readily read the ordinary discussions of the personality and place of Jesus Christ.

These two books are alike in theme and purpose but naturally exclusive as to style and method. They are both just the presentations of the Jesus of history that we men of today need. Both impress the reality of Jesus to the men of today who are essentially the same as the men of yesterday, just as also the Jesus of history is the Christ of today.

A. L. MURRAY.

Arthur Stanton. A Memoir. By the Rt. Hon. George W. E. Russell. New York: Longmans, Green & Company. $3.50 net.

There are a few biographies that one lays aside after reading with the thought, "It is good for us to have been here. It is good for a while to have seen life through this man's eyes, to have thought his thoughts and companied with him".

We say this as we finish Liddon's Life of Pusey and Allen's Life of Phillips Brooks and we say this as we lay aside reluctantly this memoir of Arthur Stanton.

It is written in a very happy style; it is interspersed with letters in which the subject of the biography tells his own story of his thought and experience. A very vivid and pervading personality is made very real to the reader.

There were few outward changes in Stanton's life; all his ministerial life was spent as a curate in St. Alban's, Holborn. At the very beginning Bishop Tait of London had said to him, "If you go to Mackonochie or St. Alban's you must never expect any Church preferment". In spite of this he went to St. Alban's and there he remained. Once he thought of taking work at St. Saviour's, Leeds, and there is an interesting correspondence with Dr. Pusey on that subject, but there was a misunderstanding and it came to nothing. Once he was offered work in the United States, but this he declined, and at the last he was offered a Prebendal Stall in St. Paul's Cathedral in recognition of the fifty years of service he had rendered the Diocese of London, and this honor he also declined.

But while remaining at one post, and that a subordinate one, his life was full of color and incident, he was a storm centre about which beat the waves of theological controversy, he came to be perhaps the most influential figure in Church life in London, he exercised great influence over the lives of men and women, he aroused tremendous enthusiasms, and he played as great a part as any man in awakening the Church of England to a new spirit of devotion and self-sacrificing service.

The War and the Bagdad Railway. By Morris Jastrow, Jr. J. B. Lippincott Company. $1.50.

This story of Asia Minor and its relation to the present conflict by the professor of Semitic languages in the University of Pennsylvania and author of a noted work, The Civilization of Babylonia and Assyria, is a war book of first importance.

The Bagdad railway is a determining factor in the East; for its control Persians, Romans, Greeks, Arabs, and Turks have fought in times past as Europe is fighting for it today. Its history is a strange and wonderful romance that is of serious interest to all earnest students of the present war.

Dr. Jastrow summarizes the war in the East, the story of Asia Minor and the history of the Bagdad railway, and offers an interpretation of the issue and the outlook.

xperience in the Western world. His first irprise was the absence of police inquiry pon his arrival at the Port of New York. o questions were asked about his friends, here he would lodge before starting for ie West, or what his antecedents had been. e was free to go where he chose. He took train for Chicago Westward bound and xpected on arrival in that city to be sub- ct to police inquiry there. Again he ound himself as free as any man who alked the streets. But the experience he as then enjoying evidently puzzled him iore than anything else that he had en- ountered in the new country. Was this ian who had invited him to ride in his iotor a chauffeur or did he actually own ie car? Could it be that in America there as really no class distinction and that men ere men whether they dressed in broad- cloth or in fustian? He was getting a new idea of American civilization.

The American defines democracy as that form of government which emancipates the individual in order that he may serve his brother and illustrates it in daily life.

I believe the time is near at hand when this characteristic will play a dramatic part upon the stage of history. When this awful struggle has ended, please God, in the triumph of democracy over autocracy, should not America become the protagonist in the establishment of a new civilization based upon forgiveness and mercy and not upon revenge and retaliation? The future is pregnant with another opportunity for an American embodiment of national altruism and if we would contribute to enable our country to seize it we must ourselves be altruists.

uccessful was the canvass. The Rome ampaign was the first of the three and vas in charge of the Rev. L. G. Wood. The preparation by the rector (the Rev. . S. Pearce) and his people was splendid nd the campaign surpassed the expecta- ions of the most optimistic. The gain of 73 per cent. for missions means an in- rease of pledges from $460 to $2,640. In ddition there was an increase of 33 per ent. in envelope pledges for parish support, nd this despite the fact that the parish had een well canvassed before, and the work lone so successfully that a generous in- rease had been made in the rector's salary. There were 400 at the men's dinner on Thursday night.

In Syracuse the Rev. Dr. Patton was the "missioner" and the services were held in St. Paul's church. At the simple "war sup- per" in the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium Thurs- day night 500 men were seated. The speak- ers were Bishop Fiske, Dr. W. C. Sturgis and the Rev. Dr. Patton. Apart from the financial success of the canvass lasting bene- fits are expected from the splendid co- operation of the parishes and the enlistment of leading laymen in the work. Already a committee of the clergy are planning a series of educational lectures on missions. Some of the results, financially, were as fol- lows:

St. Paul's.—A downtown church, with pew rents, had in addition to such rentals single-pocket envelopes under a budget sys- tem, with a fixed percentage of all contribu- tions for missions. The envelope pledges increased from $4,906.00 to $9,261.00, of which $2,132.00 is for missions. One hun- dred people, all present subscribers, are yet to be visited, not having been found in on the day of the canvass.

Trinity.—The rector was acting as Army chaplain at Spartanburg and the parish in charge of a locum tenens, the Rev. C. A. Roth. Missionary pledges increased from $450.00 to $1,800.00; pledges for parish sup- port (like St. Paul's, there are rented pews) from $4,878.00 to $6,721.00.

Other figures are equally remarkable, with special circumstances requiring explanation. St. Mark's had concluded in June a suc- cessful campaign to pay a $12,000 debt; yet the canvass gave a 33 per cent. increase for parish support and a 150 per cent. increase for missions, the latter figures jumping from $439.00 to $1,108.00. Grace church had just had a campaign to raise money for a parish house, opened only a month before; yet $1,060 additional was collected for the debt on the new building, pledges for missions increased 110 per cent. and for parish sup- port (again, pew rents additional) 35 per cent. Calvary had an increase of $1,440.00 (122 per cent.) for parish support and $643.00 (192 per cent.) for missions. All Saints', pledging $312.00 for missions, in- creased to nearly $1,000.00 (220 per cent.) and also increased 45 per cent. for parish support. From neighboring towns, Skane- ateles (already twice canvassed) showed an increase of $300.00 for missions, and other parishes reported equally encouraging figures.

The Utica week of education and enthu- siasm, under the leadership of the Rev. L. G. Wood, will also have lasting effects on the Church life of the city. Among the speak- ers at the preliminary services on November 18 was Mr. Geo. C. Thomas, a vestryman of my former Parish of St. Michael and All Angels', Baltimore, and chairman of the central committee which carried through

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

John Jay Chapman is one of the best known of our modern American authors. His delightful essays, his "Memories and Milestones", "Deutschland über Alles", "Greek Genius and Other Essays", as well as his less recent volumes make it unnecessary to introduce him to our readers. American parents, whose sons are serving or about to serve in France, owe him an especial debt of gratitude for "Victor Chapman's Letters From France", a brief review of which appeared in our last issue.

Robert H. Gardiner, as secretary of the Commission on a World Conference on Faith and Order, contributes a timely article on the proposed week of prayer for Unity, January 18-25.

Frances Beers is a contributor from Brooklyn, New York.

The Rev. George Hodges, D.D., LL.D., D.C.L., dean of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Massachusetts, needs no introduction to Church people.

Amelia Josephine Burr has written much delightful verse. Our readers will recall her "Red Cross Work", which appeared in our issue of October 13 and has been much quoted by the press throughout the country.

Elizabeth Cranstoun is a New York contributor.

The Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, D.D., Bishop Coadjutor of Central New York, contributes an account of the successful "Patton Missionary Campaign" which will be of interest to those planning similar campaigns. It is especially timely inasmuch as the subject of these campaigns is to be discussed at the Synod of Province II, January 8-10.

R. Fulton Cutting is one of the leaders in social, civic and Church life in New York City. He has been prominent in the Council of Good Government Clubs, has served as chairman of the Citizens' Union, and for twenty years was the president of the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor. He is senior warden of St. George's church. His paper on "The War and Democracy", which we publish this week, was read at the annual dinner of the Men's Club of the Church of the Redeemer, Pelham, New York, a club which takes in the most influential citizens of the Pelhams and of New Rochelle.

The Rt. Rev. William Alexander Guerry, D.D., Bishop of South Carolina, contributes the second one of his articles on "The Liberty of Prophesying" this week.

Arthur Wallace Peach is a regular contributor whose charming verse is always welcome in our columns.

Ada M. Skinner is a teacher in the Primary Department at St. Agatha's School, New York City, and a well-known writer for children. There is a New Year play of hers in the January St. Nicholas. "Little Folks' Christmas Stories and Plays", "The Tale of Tibby and Tabby", "The Emerald" and "The Topaz Story Book" are among her published books. Besides these there are several written in collaboration with her sister. We are glad to publish the following suggestions for those who wish to use the first of "Heart of the Jungle Tales" in the classroom.

Suggestions and Helps.—I. Everyday Life: Describe the mud home, inside and out; compare it with your own home, with the wigwam, the cave home, the tent home. What work is done by the little African girl? What work is done by the African boy? Tell about the preparation of the evening meal. II. Material: "Patterns for an African Village", J. G. Hutton; 15c. "African Painting Book", J. C. Pratt, 10c. "Picture Sheet of Africa" (especially prepared for notebook work, as an aid in story-telling). All these may be procured from the Missionary Education Movement, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City. III. References: "Home Life in All Lands", Charles Norris; J. B. Lippincott & Co. "African Adventures" (Chapter I), Jean Mackenzie; Missionary Education Movement.

Betty T. White is a member of the staff of the American Committee on Armenian and Syrian Relief.

a city-wide campaign in that place. A busy professional man, his willingness to travel 500 miles to speak for missions gave added importance to the campaign for the laymen of the city. The meetings of the week were held in the New Century Auditorium and there were 500 men at the Thursday night dinner in the gymnasium of the Y. W. C. A., when the speakers were Dr. J. W. Wood, the Rev. E. S. Pearce and the Rev. L. G. Wood. The parishes report the following gains:

	Increase for parish support	Increase for missions	Total
Grace church	$4,336.00	$2,297.00	$6,633.00
Calvary	2,964.00	1,099.00	4,063.00
St. Luke's	918.00	652.00	1,570.00
St. Andrew's	705.00	205.00	910.00
Holy Cross	778.00	142.00	920.00
St. George's	52.00	243.00	295.00
Trinity*	209.00	110.00	319.00

*Including All Saint's, Hartford, and Deerfield.

Trinity had completed a very efficient canvass only a few month's before, St. George's had recently had a canvass, and Holy Cross had just erected a new parish house, or the increases would have been larger. Whitesboro and other nearby places also sent excellent reports.

Both Bishop Olmsted and the Coadjutor gave their hearty support to the campaign and indeed were instrumental in urging the undertaking. The provincial secretary, the Rev. J. R. Harding, was active in the work of preparation in all three cities.

Our School Service Bureau

FOR YEARS we have maintained for the benefit of readers of The Churchman a School Service Bureau, which has aided parents materially in selecting the right school.

Years of experience have given us a knowledge of good schools which school-seekers will find valuable, and it is entirely at the service of our readers.

In seeking advice about schools we ask our readers to give the following information:

The age and sex of the child.
The maximum amount you are able to pay.
The state or section of the country preferred.
If any special training is required.

With such information at hand, we shall be glad to suggest schools to meet the conditions.

There is no charge whatever either to the school or school-seeker for this service.

Does Your Rector Get The Churchman?

EVERY day we receive letters from clergymen telling us how much they value THE CHURCHMAN and how greatly they enjoy reading it. But very often they add that they cannot afford to subscribe. While the cost of living has been mounting by leaps and bounds, in most cases clerical salaries have remained stationary. This has made it impossible for many rectors to continue taking THE CHURCHMAN. Only a day or so ago the following letter came to the Editor from the rector of a small Western parish:

> "How very stimulating I find 'THE CHURCHMAN'! I am not a subscriber, but I have borrowed copies. The holidays are near, however, and I am rather expecting that some one of my good friends is going to give me a subscription; and then the coming of 'The Churchman' will be one of the things to look forward to."

Perhaps your rector is in a similar position. Will you let him go through another year without the aid of THE CHURCHMAN, one of the most significant religious periodicals in America today? It is his particular publication—just as much a necessity to him as the farm paper to the farmer, or any trade paper to a man in his trade. He may have to go without it unless you, your parish guild, or your vestry present it to him.

THE CHURCHMAN will make a fitting gift for your rector. Just send us his name and address and $3.00, or have the treasurer of your guild send us $3.00 from the general funds, and we will see that THE CHURCHMAN goes to your rector regularly every week for one year. We will also send him at once an attractive card announcing the vestry, your guild, or yourself as the donor.

THE CHURCHMAN'S editorials are being widely quoted. Its news columns are alive and informing. It will publish during the coming year important articles on religion and current life. Your rector must not be without it.

Find out today if he is on our list. If not, let us send him THE CHURCHMAN throughout 1918. He will thank you a thousand times in his heart.

The Rebirth of Russia. By Isaac F. Marcosson. New York: John Lane Company. 1917. $1.25.

A vivid journalistic account of the Great Upheaval and its immediate followings. Mr. Marcosson was among the first to reach Petrograd after the unparalleled happening of last March, finding, as he says, "the capital delirious with freedom", and witnessing both "the fruits and the follies of the new liberty". It is all set down here, trustworthily and so that one must read. One has an extraordinary feeling of reality as he goes through the chapters, and at the end the sense of firmly grasped tendencies. The chapter on "The Man Kerensky" is particularly dramatic and strong. There are numerous photographic illustrations.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

Christmas Festival

GOSHEN, INDIANA.—St. James' church was filled Christmas Eve with communicants and friends of the parish, who assembled to participate in the first midnight commemoration of the Nativity of our Lord given in the parish. And it was an event not soon to be forgotten by those privileged to be present.

Preceding the Celebration of the Holy Communion at midnight, the choir rendered joyous Christmas carols with splendid spirit, and violins assisting at the organ added to the effectiveness of the music.

The service was announced to begin promptly at 11.30 p. m., and by that hour the church was filled with devoted worshipers, whose hearts were deeply moved by the religious environment and significance of the occasion.

In carrying out the scheme of decorations all electric lights were turned off, and hundreds of candles provided the only illumination. These burning tapers were set in banks of Christmas green about the sanctuary, chancel and organ, as well as along the ledge of all the windows. And the altar was particularly brilliant with many lights and ornaments.

It was a service long to be remembered for its beauty and spiritual helpfulness, and those present will look forward with an earnest desire for a similar privilege on next Christmas.

GOD AND SUFFERING

The problems which confront thinkers who endeavor to reconcile sickness and suffering with an all-loving God are frankly met and answered in HENRY B. WILSON'S new book

DOES CHRIST STILL HEAL?

Many perplexities are dispelled by the author's abolition of an outworn Hebraic theology and the presentation of the true Christian aspect. An appropriate New Year's Gift, bearing a New Year message of permanent value.

The Church and the Children

THE Episcopal Church has never taken the religious education of children seriously. We inherit from the Church of England an indifference towards the Sunday school; but we have not taken over from the Church of England her safeguard of religious instruction in the day school. How lamentable the result is we are beginning to learn from the trustworthy statistics gathered by the General Board of Religious Education. It has been like pulling teeth to get the Episcopal Church to buckle down to the problem of instructing her children in the things that pertain to our religion. The problem she willingly acknowledges to be one that must be solved. There have been heavy sighs cast at every diocesan convention, clericus and home gathering of Church people when the word Sunday school is spoken; but we seem to have lacked (shall we say the character?) to grip the problem and solve it. Sighs, longings and lamentations are not evidences of mental or spiritual alertness. Something is wrong with us. What is it? The answer is evident. We don't really care.

People who perceive a need and keep their hands folded lack either energy or intelligence. Perhaps both. The Roman Church would rather see every other one of her institutions leveled to the ground than to relinquish her hold upon the children. She shows her wisdom. There have been leaders and pioneers in the Episcopal Church who have perceived the importance of religious education; if they hadn't had perserverance, born of conviction, they would have given up the fight long ago. If they had surrendered the task, the Church would go on dwindling throughout the country as it is palpably dwindling in those sections where the leaders of the Church have refused to face the educational problem. If we compare the statistics presented in Dr. Well's report, "The Church in 1917", published in our issue of December 15, with the reports of the General Board of Religious Education, we shall learn why it is high time that the Church in some sections awoke to the pressing importance of religious education and why the Church in every section of the country needs very soon to recognize the urgent necessity of putting time any money into her work among the young. In every place where the methods of the G. B. R. E. have been put into practice, statistics show an improvement in Sunday school attendance; where their methods have not been adopted, there has been a decrease in the number of children in the Sunday school.

One fact should be kept clearly in mind in this connection. The problem of religious instruction is the problem of the Church as a unit. The child in some struggling, obscure mission in the far West is the child of the whole Episcopal Church. His spiritual interests are the responsibility of every diocese in the country. Some day the boy in that obscure mission may become one of the leaders in thought and action in the great metropolis. Whether the Church did her duty by him in the days of his bitter struggles with adversity will count seriously in his life. One of the weaknesses of our Church everywhere has been lack of imagination. Statesmanship requires above everything else imagination. The diocese is a unit. The problem of every corner of the diocese is the problem of the whole diocese. It is a short-sighted policy for the city parish to be content to see its own big problems solved and to be careless about what becomes of the rest of the diocese. Just as truly as the city population is being fed and its morale determined by immigrating citizens, the big city parish is having its life year by year renewed by the communicants who have received their training in distant parts of the country. Every city rector knows this. Again and again he has thanked good fortune for sending him some layman who came from a small town in a distant diocese and brought with him the healthy life and loyalty nourished in some little parish where a really great leader, obscure though he was, had stamped with his high loyalty and enthusiasm the religious life of his mission or parish.

If the rectors of the big city parishes in every diocese would insist that the Church face intelligently this problem of religious education, it would be faced and solved. It would not be a purely disinterested task either.

If dioceses would pay the Religious Education apportionment, the Board of Religious Education would be left free to use their experience and brains for the great task itself to which they have been appointed. It is not sufficient that here and there a prosperous city parish should seek the counsel of the Board experts. It is not the purpose of the Church, we are sure, to treat the religious instruction of the children as a luxury for those who can afford it. Every village, every small town, every poor industrial factory community has a right to demand for its children the same moral and religious opportunity that is given in Boston, Chicago, or Washington. This is not charity. It is the A B C of Church statesmanship.

And please do not let us say that there isn't any money. There is always enough and to spare, if there are statesmen to perceive and demonstrate the need. One of the burning questions, people everywhere are likely to be asking after the War is: "What is our money for?"

Personal Liberty

CLERGYMEN recall their bitter experience years ago when, in any attempt to better social conditions in their community, they touched the province of the liquor interests. Not an inch would these arrogant interests yield to decency or pity, if a penny of their polluted income was threatened. We know the harsh truth of this assertion, because we have stood wearily pleading with these liquor venders to be human. But never a glint of light stole from their souls. Watts has painted that soul in his picture "Mammon" and Chesterton has translated for us the meaning of that cruel picture in his little book on Watts.

We tried to reason with the men who, through their wealth amassed in this sordid business, were trying to force an entrance for their families into the community interests of decent people. We asked them why they couldn't make beer, brandy and whiskey and sell their products with clean hands. We tried to make them tell us why they thought it necessary that the manufacture of beer should produce as a by-product dirty politics, corrupt police departments, with their attendant evils of prostitution, white slavery, and what not.

They did not answer us; but their apologists did. The answer was: "If we yield an inch we are ruined. If we admit the thin edge of the wedge of reform, our business will crumble to pieces." They were partially right. Unless the liquor maker and seller was willing to become a decent citizen, the only way he could withstand the force of reform was by contesting every inch of the ground. That is what he chose to do. Today his business is tumbling about his head. But he isn't ruined. He saw the writing on the wall and slowly he has readjusted his investments. He still sits astride some tolerant communities; but he is no longer the insolent, obese creature of Watts' portraiture with his heavy, shapeless limbs crushing the bodies of little children and emaciated women. He is wizened and desperate, clutching at his escaping prey and begging to be spared.

But we will not pity and spare! Never from the beginnings of his struggle for power and money has he shown any pity for the helpless, any sympathy with the fighters for decency or one flickering ray of moral intelligence. His love of money has made him a hater of all the humane efforts of those who love their fellowmen. He was willing to coin his millions out of the souls of drunken fathers, half-starved children and wives and mothers crushed with overwork. He was eager to build his castles in Milwaukee, St. Louis, New York and Chicago, to educate his children in the best of American and European universities and to try to marry his daughters and his sons into respectable American families; but he was not willing to help a minister of Christ or a Settlement House worker or a clean statesman to lessen the misery of the poor and protect the bodies and souls of our young men, if such work of mercy curtailed his income. His greed and perverted brain have plotted to keep our houses of prostitution full, our feeble-minded and insane asylums with a waiting list and our relief agencies smothered with appeals for help

What is the cry of this monster now that the powers of decency hold him at bay? With pathetic cowardice he is vainly simulating the attitude of the children of light. On every hand we hear the faint protest "Personal Liberty". The voice is not his; but he is using it as the last throw of the dice. This timid cry of personal liberty is the final gasp of the liquor monster, still reaching for his gold. He is dying. God be praised!

A Miracle of Patriotism

IF some of the men of big business of a generation ago had been told by a Christian idealist that in the year 1918 their successors would be serving the nation for a salary of a dollar a year (or is it a month?) and be having just the happiest time that they have ever had in their whole lives, what would those gentlemen have said? If their prophetic informer had added that, when the administrators of the Red Cross would send word hither and yon to captains of industry that they should report at their earliest convenience to headquarters, these captains of industry would be pleased as Punch to be asked, what would their fathers have said?

The miracle has taken place with so little pretense of virtue, so little complacency among these industrial leaders, that the rank and file of us humbler citizens are likely to take it all for granted as a mere circumstance of the War. But it is one of the marvelous spiritual products of the War. It is so astonishing that it must not escape the notice of the moralizer. Men whose time is worth from $25,000 to $1,000,000 a year are working for their country for a dollar a year and the perquisite of honor. And they love it! They do it willingly. They are just waiting to be asked.

The moralist knows why they are doing this. They are patriots. They are also men of keen intelligence. They know that unless America and the Allies win the War the world will not be a desirable place for freemen to inhabit. They know that the fortunes that they have amassed for their children will profit them nothing if Germany is entrusted with the governance of the world. Patriotism and intelligence have made these men willingly obedient to the Nation's call.

But the moralist has another and higher interest in this inspiring phenomenon of the millionaire working for a dollar a year. The idealist begins to dream dreams as he watches these individualists working so ardently for the good of all. The dreamer is never content with a vision of the present. His eyes are upon the future. Hence we find him asking himself will the man of big business ever return to the harsh individualism of two decades ago? After having tasted the joy and the honor of giving his genius for the Nation's work, will he be willing to go it alone again after the War is over? When the idealist asks this question, he doesn't mean to say that he pictures our captains of industry begging the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A. and the Secretary of War for permanent places on the staff. But will they not have learned what many a teacher, college professor, scientist, social worker and minister of Christ knew ages ago—that the happiest men in the world are the men who find their happiness in ministering to life with all their ability? The wage is incidental. The joy and the reward come in giving one's best.

Perhaps in a not far distant future we shall see the mayors of our cities, the governors of our States and even the national government summoning to their willing service the men who have administrative genius, the men whose ability no city could afford to buy but who for honor and the joy of service will gladly answer the community's call. This is no dream. It is a leaf taken from the history of the Christian Democracy that is to be.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

Mr. Hoover on American Sacrifice

AMERICA feels that it has been hard hit in the sugar famine. Mr. Hoover does not appear to be deeply impressed with the measure of our sacrifice thus far. American consumption of sugar, he says, has been only slightly diminished. Each American consumes more than twice as much as each Englishman and almost four times as much as the per capita consumption in France.

The consumption of candy goes merrily on. It would seem that the first consideration just now ought to be the poor. They need sugar. There is already a sadly depleted diet among the poor children of our large cities; we cannot with safety reduce their consumption of sugar. It is hard on candy manufacturers to be denied the means of carrying on their industry, but these are war times.

Most of us have little reason to complain of our sacrifices while England and France are cheerfully accepting their hard lot. It occurs to some of us that there are too many pleasure automobiles in use in America. When we are told the price of gasoline on the continent and in England, one wonders what right one has to waste this precious commodity on luxury and ease.

America is willing, if the matter is put in a convincing way, to undergo almost any sacrifice for hastening the day of victory. It is fair to say that people are everywhere cheerfully accepting conditions. But we must not exaggerate the extent of our sacrifice.

Dr. Newman Smyth's Manifesto

WE publish in this issue the appeal of Dr. Newman Smyth for a more united front of organized Christianity.

Admirable as are the spirit and purpose of this appeal, one wonders how the signers interpret the statement therein contained that "Today the Y. M. C. A. represents Christianity before the world".

Does it?

The New Police Commissioner

NEW YORK has been justly proud of its police force under Commissioner Woods. No city ever had a Police Commissioner who conducted his office with a higher conception than his of what a policeman might become as a social service agent in the community. It is therefore gratifying to the friends of good government that Mr. Woods upon retiring should express confidence in Mr. Bugher, his successor. It augurs well that Mr. Bugher upon coming into office announced the continuance of Mr. Wood's policy.

The police department of New York City is an institution of national interest.

Cardinal Mercier's Counsel

"MY Brethren, do but look up, I beseech you, and keep your eyes fixed upon this polar star of your eternity." Thus wrote Cardinal Mercier to his afflicted people a little over a year ago. "Whatever may happen to you, there is in you something that no man and no event can touch—your soul; and this soul which belongs to you, which is yours of which you are the master, is made to enjoy God, and will enjoy God if you will only have it so."

Christians here in the safety, the comparative calm, of America would do well to lay the Belgian Cardinal's counsel to heart. How many of us have deflected our gaze from eternity to the transitory things, and thereby imperil the safety of temporal affairs quite as much as of our eternal souls? Isn't perhaps the fear of doing this the starting point of the pacifist fallacy? Pacifists are so afraid that in the progress of the military campaign the very democratic ideals for which we are fighting will be demolished, that they prefer to run the greater risk of the instant overthrow of democracy itself. But we are all more or less guilty of an equal error. Missions, economic welfare, industrial safeguards, education, are all assailed by those who concentrate their energy upon the temporary aspects of this war, and fail to keep their eyes fixed upon eternity. The danger assails us in our very churches if the parish house is given over entirely to war service, and the pulpit to war sermons. Our Government needs and claims every heart and head and hand in the United States. But the heart that gives itself most selflessly is the heart that has been purged by Divine Love; and the eye that sees most clearly is the eye that is fixed on eternity.

Juvenile Delinquency

IN addition to the annual report of the National Child Labor Committee the November Child Labor Bulletin contains a study of Child Labor and Juvenile Delinquency in Manhattan by Mabel Brown Ellis, the National Child Labor Committee's Special Agent on Juvenile Courts. The records of 1,792 children who passed through the Children's Court in New York in 1916 were studied by Miss Ellis to find out whether there is greater tendency to delinquency among employed or unemployed children. The popular feeling is that the child who is not employed is more likely to get into mischief than the employed child, but Miss Ellis found quite the opposite to be the case—that working children contributed four times their share to the ranks of juvenile delinquency. They are also responsible for a larger proportion of serious offenses than the non-working children. "Among the recidivists, or repeating offenders", says Miss Ellis, "both the absolute and relative numbers of workers are very much in excess of the unemployed". In an effort to account for the poor showing of the working children material was gathered showing the age, amount of schooling, nationality and home conditions of these children as compared with unemployed children. In every case it was found that conditions were about the same for the two groups—that the working children had as much education, as intelligent parents, and as good homes as the non-working children. "It is hard to avoid the conclusion", says Miss Ellis, "that the mere fact of being at work, irrespective of occupation, was a more potent factor than age or family conditions in bringing these boys before the Children's Court."

On the Yukon

WE welcome right heartily Archdeacon Stuck's Voyages on the Yukon and Its Tributaries. It is the long-promised companion volume to Ten Thousand Miles With a Dog Sled. Although quite complete in itself it is supplement and complement to the earlier book, and "forms therewith a survey of the interior of Alaska under the totally different aspects of Summer and Winter travel. In Winter one travels with the dog team almost wherever one wishes; Summer travel is confined to the waterways with which interior Alaska is so liberally supplied". Most of these journeys were taken aboard the Pelican with which every reader of The Spirit of Missions and The Alaskan Churchman is thoroughly familiar. It is dedicated to Walter Harper, Arthur Wright and John Fredson, those "native Alaskan youths who during the past ten years have been engineers and pilots of the launch". Indeed, the whole volume is friendly and familiar to those who have followed the fortunes of the Archdeacon of the Yukon in his adventurous missionary journeys.

But the book is in no sense a missionary chronicle. It is that only incidentally. It is a masterly and very complete narrative of Summer travel in the interior of "The Great Country" which illustrates again for us the almost axiomatic truth that the explorers, geographers, botanists, and linguists of a newly opened corner of the globe are with extraordinary frequency the missionaries. The American Church was proud of Archdeacon Stuck when he climbed to the summit of Denali; it is proud now to have these volumes forming together so valuable an addition to geographical literature.

Safeguarding Efficiency

IT is very encouraging to have the protection of women and children in industry advanced as a war-efficiency method by the people responsible for the output of munitions, guns, uniforms, and other war-necessities. The Chief of Ordnance has issued a statement in which he says: "In view of the urgent necessity for a prompt increase in the volume of production of practically every article required for the conduct of the war, vigilance is demanded of all those in any way associated with industry, lest the safeguards with which the people of this country have sought to protect labor should be unwisely and unnecessarily broken down. . . . Industrial history proves that reasonable hours, fair working conditions, and a proper wage scale are essential to high production."

Accordingly he suggests to the arsenal commanders and manufacturers that the standards which have been attained with such difficulty, regarding hours, holidays, accident prevention, wages, etc., be rigorously maintained. He urges especially the necessity for observing where women are concerned the eight-hour day, no night work, equal pay for equal work, and certain minor regulations in regard to lifting of weights, etc.

On the other hand we have Pennsylvania trying to let down the bars of child labor by the admission of sub-normal children below fourteen years of age into industry. In other States there has been constant pressure to violate labor laws on the plea of war necessity. The National Child Labor Association is standing guard over the children. They have recently been aided and encouraged by an uncompromising statement issued by President Wilson, as well as one made by Secretary Baker.

Georgia and Texas Head Dishonor Role

THE Principal of the Tuskegee Institute reports in a letter to the New York Evening Post thirty-eight persons lynched during 1917, thirty-six of whom were Negroes.

The offenses charged against the Negroes were: Attempted rape, 5; rape, 6; murder, 3; killing of officer of the law, 2; for not getting out of road and being insolent, 2; attacking women, 2; disputing white men's word, 2; entering woman's room, 2; wounding officer of the law, 1; molesting women, 1; stealing coat, 1; intimacy with woman, 1; killing man in altercation, 1; accidentally killing child by running automobile over it, 1; vagrancy, 1; wounding and robbing a man, 1; attacking an officer of the law, 1; opposition to war draft, 1; insulting girls, 1; writing insolent letter, 1.

The States in which lynchings occurred and number in each State were as follows: Alabama, 4; Arkansas, 4; Arizona, 1; Florida, 1; Georgia, 6; Kentucky, 2; Louisiana, 5; Mississippi, 1; Montana, 1; Oklahoma, 1; South Carolina, 1; Tennessee, 3; Texas, 6; Virginia, 1; Wyoming, 1.

Americanizing Our Women

AT least 400,000 foreign-born women in the state of New York, citizens, by virtue of their husbands' citizenship, having passed none of the five tests required of their husbands, are entitled to vote next election day. This problem the Americanization Committee of the Woman Suffrage Party is facing with plans to reach these immigrant women, teach them English and give them instruction in the basic principles of citizenship. It would be the part of wisdom if the leaders of mother meetings and women's guilds should cooperate in this necessary work.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMON

Our Chances of Winning the War

By THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

"Watchman, what of the night?" Isaiah xxi-11.

AS we enter the New Year there faces us this one superlative question; so superlative that nothing else counts. I want in this hour to sound a note of courage; and I am glad that I can do it heartily.

We are going to win this war. In the words of Secretary Baker, in unison with the statements of David Lloyd George and General Pershing and others, "It would be irreligious to doubt it".

In this battle between the German race and the human race, the human race is going to win. Be not disheartened. Barbarism is not going to triumph over a civilization which it has taken twenty Christian centuries to upbuild.

And there are three reasons why I speak with so great confidence. Each may be expressed in two words: We must—we can—we will. We have the necessity: we must. We have the opportunity: we can, and no one who understands the Anglo-Saxon race, the bull-dog tenacity of Great Britain, the adaptability and the never-give-up-a-tive-ness of our American people, when once aroused; no one who appreciates the splendid heroism of France can fail to believe that we have the inflexibility: we will. Let us see how true this is.

We Must! It is no longer a question of alternatives. We have, each of us received our ultimatum from the Fates. There is nothing else to do. To use the ever-memorable words of President Wilson, "This intolerable Thing of which the masters of Germany have shown us the ugly face, this menace of combined intrigue and force which we now see so clearly as the German power, a Thing without conscience or honor or capacity for covenanted peace, must be crushed".

If Germany were to win we and our descendants would be for a thousand years a race of slaves; ultimately, as abject and helpless as the slaves of ancient Rome, whose masters whipped them for sport and crucified them for a whim. If you think this an exaggeration, you only need to study the history of Germany's conquests and of the people whom she has conquered. The time was when a few patriots, grasping their muskets from the cabin walls, could foment and carry to success a revolution. But those days have passed forever. Modern warfare, to be successful, requires millions of money, acres of munition factories, and years of preparation. If a militant and barbarian race, such as Germany has now become, should triumph, she would control the war-making potentialities of the world. A revolt anywhere could be strangled as soon as it was born. Never again could we have well nigh twenty nations leagued against her as we have now. We must win! It is our last chance. The Honorable Elihu Root, than whom we have no greater statesman in America, has said, "As surely as the sun will rise tomorrow, if this War ends with the triumph of Germany, this country will be a subject nation".

Subject to whom, and what would that mean? It would mean for us—do not forget it—Alsace-Lorraine. It would mean Belgium. It would mean Poland. It would mean the colonies of Germany and all the unspeakable cruelties of that sad story.

What is this "Thing" of which our President speaks?

Last year the Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, pastor of Plymouth church, Brooklyn, was commissioned to go to France to answer that question. I heard his report when he returned. Every fact was wholly authenticated, from personal observation, from photographs which could permit of no question, or from official records and affidavits preserved in Government archives. Here is a part—only a few grains—of what he tells us, of how the German armies conducted warfare, when falling northward in their retreat, passing through French towns and villages where there were no armed Frenchmen, no guns, and where no shots were fired:

"In Gerbevillier, standing beside their graves, I studied the photograph of the bodies of fifteen old men whom the Germans had lined up and shot because there were no young soldiers to kill. I heard the detailed story of a woman whose boy of fourteen, being nearest the age of a soldier, was first hanged to a pear tree in the garden, and when the officer and soldier had left him and were busy setting fire to the next house, she cut the rope, revived the strangled boy, only to find the soldiers had returned, and while the officer held her hands behind her back, his assistant poured petrol on the boy's head and clothes, set fire to him, and while he staggered about, a flaming torch, they shrieked with laughter.

"When they burned all the houses and retreated the next morning, the Prefect of Lorraine photographed the bodies of thirty aged men lying as they fell, the bodies of women stripped and at last slain."

As I write there comes the official news from Washington that they have captured, as prisoners of war, some of our boys who left us only a few weeks ago, and then cut their throats, "to teach the Americans a lesson". True, they had done the same thing to the British lads. It isn't a new German crime. There never can be a new German crime.

Slavery? What think you of this? Here is a proclamation which was posted on the walls of Holnol, a suburb of St. Quentin in France, last harvest. Let us cut it out; paste it where we can read it often—lest we forget:

"1. All men, women and children above fifteen years of age are ordered to work in the fields daily (Sundays included) from 4 a. m. until 8 p. m., with intervals of half an hour in the morning, one hour at noon, and half an hour in the evening.

"Disobedience to this order will be punished as follows:

"(a) Lazy workmen will be placed together and will work under the control of a German corporal during the harvest; later on they will be imprisoned for six months. Every third day they will be fed on bread and water only.

"(b) Lazy women will be drafted elsewhere for work. After the harvest they will also serve six months' imprisonment.

"(c) Children who shirk work will be punished by thrashing with a stick ('coups de bâton').

"(d) Further, the commandant is likewise empowered to punish lazy workmen by twenty strokes with a stick daily."

Now ask yourself: is it not true that this fellow, who claims partnership with God, and still struts waving his sword, proud of the fact that he is the head of this megalomaniac gang of desperate criminals, must be beaten to the earth? This is our first incentive. We must win. As I have already said, nothing else counts.

But I must defer till next week the remainder of this article, in which I shall try to show that we not only have the necessity—we must; we have the opportunity—we can, and the inflexibility—we will. Simply as a forecast of what I shall seek to establish let me remind you that during the twenty-one years of the Napoleonic wars, in fifteen of those years, some one of the nations engaged made a separate peace with the enemy; but England, though she was at one time left to fight practically alone, never gave up. Never once did the bull-dog relax its grip. She kept right on, till after twenty-one years, Napoleon at last went down at Waterloo. And then she did not have America to help her. Pause for a moment and try to conceive what that means.

During the wild reign of the French Commune in 1871, the venerable Bishop of Paris was arrested and brought to the Tribunal. As he stood before his judges he asked, "What do you wish, my children?" And they answered, "Do not speak to us like that. We are your superiors. Who are you?" And he replied, "I am the servant of God." And when they asked again, "Where is God?" he answered, "Everywhere". Then they issued an order for "the arrest of one God who was everywhere".

That order was never executed. And before Germany, who is fighting against liberty and honor and purity and truth and everything for which Jesus Christ lived and died;—before Germany can win this War, she must execute an order for "the arrest of one God who is everywhere".

New Publicity for Christianity

By THE REV. GUY EMERY SHIPLER

ON the morning before Christmas Day perhaps a million people read a strange advertisement in the pages of The New York Times. Across a full half page—the largest piece of copy carried by the Times that morning—ran the caption: "What does this Christmas mean?" At the breakfast table, in street cars and commuting trains, in barber shops, in cafes and hotels, men and women found their minds mystified by something quite new in the realm of advertising. The question rose: "Who did this?", and the farther question: "Why did they do it?". People who never go to church wondered. Clergymen and laymen who always go to church wondered. Last but not least, advertising men wondered. The advertising department of the Times found itself as busy as the editorial rooms on election night answering telephone queries.

The mystification was natural. Church advertising is not new, though still in its swaddling clothes. The advertising of Christianity—if by that one means display advertising—is new. Some one had cared enough about it to spend several hundred dollars to buy expensive space in a New York daily to give readers an inspiring Christmas message. But the real mystery lay in the fact that the advertising was evidently quite unselfish. It was distressingly altruistic. It was not to "get results"; not to get the kind of results of which advertisers dream and talk; not to get even the kind of which church advertisers dream and talk—when they talk at all of the subject. Nowhere in the copy was any admonition to "go to church". Evidently whoever inserted the advertisement was not thinking about filling his pews.

Down in one corner, in modest type, appeared the disconcerting and unrevealing statement: "Inserted by an Episcopal Parish in the City of New York". Still the question: "Who did it?". Still, with more emphasis, the question: "Why?". Had the name of the church been given, the first question would have been answered, and the second partly answered. It would have smacked of an appeal to go to church, and here was a sample of what one might expect to find if one went to that particular church.

But this thing was bigger than any one church. Here was a message that heartened thousands of readers who needed heartening. Minds perplexed with the thought: "How can one be happy this war Christmas?" found an answer. Men who never go to church, and who knew nothing of the Christian interpretation of adversity and the possibility of real happiness along with it, spent a happier Christmas because someone had cared to tell them how to bring it about, and didn't exact what is sometimes counted the penalty of going to church to find out—cared enough to buy "big newspaper space" to tell them.

Here was started a new era in church advertising—though, strictly speaking, it was not church advertising at all. Instead of advertising the church, it advertised what the church itself is constantly advertising to the people it can first persuade to come to church. It was advertising Christianity.

The copy for the advertisement was written by a man who knows how to write; he put his best into that copy. It was carefully thought out, revised and submitted to others. The whole procedure was quite in contrast to the practice of most clergymen who have written advertising. Part of the failure of church publicity has been due to the unhappy facility with which clergymen, who are not trained to write such copy, have tried to produce results. Sermon writing and advertising writing are different fields. Commercial advertisers have spent thousands of dollars to buy trained brains big enough to write advertisements for chewing gum. Clergymen, with no training for the job, have spent a few minutes writing advertisements for the church. The present example marked one happy departure.

Also the matter was dignified—but it was dignity with a punch. Here were no blatant Billy Sundayisms shrieking vulgarity in the name of religion. In spite of all that has been said to the contrary, there are ways of getting the public ear without employing the fantastic hair-tearings of Billy. Manufacturers of high-class automobiles find straight English effective, and spend staggering sums to get it written and displayed. Even chewing gum can be sold without vulgar copy—and that ought to be a convincing fact!

A few years ago the city of Baltimore was astonished to find columns, and even pages, of the daily newspapers given up to church advertising. Far-seeing publicity men had for a long time been trying to hammer home to clergymen the fact that we are not living in the days of the Apostles, when word of mouth advertising was sufficient. They had said that the fear of being "commercial" was a foolish fear, and pointed to the questionable practice of clergymen of "putting over" free notices in the daily press. They had said that newspaper space has a commercial value, and that newspaper offices would have small respect for the business methods of the church so long as the church had so little respect for the newspaper. If merchants and manufacturers paid real money to advertise their wares in the press why shouldn't the church pay money for the same purpose—or else keep out of the press?

None the less they felt it of prime importance to get into the press. St. Paul, whose success in the propagation of Christianity could not be well brought into question, revealed in the opening phrase of his speech on Mars Hill, as well as in many another place, his keen knowledge of advertising psychology. These men argued that he used whatever mediums of publicity were available, and that, had he lived in the days of movable type and the daily press, he would have been an ardent advocate of display advertising, and a brilliant writer of advertising copy.

One could cite the prophets of an earlier time as examples of men who believed in and practised modern methods of advertising, so far as their mediums allowed. One could point to much later examples of church advertising. Furthermore, what was the church bell, if not an advertising medium? In the days when our civilization was less complex in its organization it was a simple method of insistently recalling to men's minds the obligation to go to church. But its voice no longer penetrates, at least in the larger cities. The rumble of trolley cars and the general turmoil of the city streets, together with tall buildings and great distances, have effectively put the church bell in the class of obsolete mediums of publicity. Instead of hearing the church bell on Sunday morning, the tired business man feels the lure of other voices clamoring from the columns of the Sunday newspaper. The amusement advertisements suggest to him many pleasing sources of diversion for the day, from the movies to the art museum and the ball game.

Since all this is true, why not buy some space in those columns of the Sunday paper (or the Saturday night paper) and let him feel the lure of the church? After this fashion must have argued someone in Baltimore. This someone felt the matter thoroughly. He was evidently willing to back up his enthusiasm with an investment of thousands of dollars in newspaper space.

The end of the story is not happy. A checking up for "results" failed to show any marked increase in church attendance.

But the filling, or failing to fill, the churches by that advertising is beside the point in measuring the real value of church publicity. It failed as good advertising, because it failed to get the results for which it was inserted. And advertising which fails to get results is not good advertising. Though it was of doubtful effect for its stipulated end it must none the less have had a very real value. It was at least such an argument for church unity as could not (Continued on page 68)

The Christian Mystery

By THE REV. R. J. CAMPBELL

THERE are two ways of viewing the subject of the birth and earthly life of our Lord. One is to regard them from the naturalistic standpoint and try to explain them as far as possible in terms of ordinary human experience; the other is to accept them frankly as a break with ordinary human experience, an invasion of the natural order of things by a set of facts and forces essentially supernatural. There can be no real compromise between these two; they are quite inconsistent with each other and give entirely different results.

The former has been the favorite with advanced Biblical critics for many years, and is the more in harmony with the prevailing habit of mind in the modern Western world. At first sight it seems the easier and more obvious method of accounting for what is related in the New Testament concerning the person and works of Jesus. The bias of scientific criticism of the New Testament sources in this direction has long been evident. It almost takes for granted that the miraculous element in the Gospel story is incredible and to be explained away; and, starting from this basis, it endeavors to present to us a reasonable, wholesome, living figure distinct from and prior to the collection of wonder-stories which, presumably, may be said to have gathered about Him in much the same way as the winsome legends about St. Francis of Assisi grew up within a generation after the saint's death and transformed him from an humble preacher into a worker of astounding marvels. In the case of Jesus the marvels are comparatively restrained, it is true, so we are told—or, rather, the narratives of them—but none the less impossible of acceptance as authentic by the educated mind of to-day. We must eliminate the supernatural, not only from the evangelic records of our Lord's birth and resurrection, but also from the meagre reports of His public ministry, or we shall not be able to get at the truth concerning the greatest religious Teacher who has ever lived—so the most advanced school has been insisting with ever-increasing emphasis. Treat the person of Jesus as you would treat that of any other historical person in relation to His time; keep Him in His proper setting; get rid of all dogmatic presuppositions in investigating the tangled problems that surround the study of the Gospels in particular and the New Testament in general, and let us see what remains.

Well, the truth is that nothing remains. The method adopted is perfectly futile and barren of spiritual gain. It has its own fatal presupposition while professing to clear the ground of other presuppositions, and that is, that if we could only sweep away the miraculous from what has come down to us concerning Jesus we should find Him easier to understand. On the contrary, He would not be there at all. One of the most deservedly respected of English New Testament scholars holds that the one great miracle of the New Testament, in whose presence all others sink into insignificance, is the sinlessness of Jesus, that the rest may be surrendered without loss if this be retained—in fact, that they must be surrendered, for the good and sufficient reason that, as Matthew Arnold says, miracles do not happen and people living in a scientific age will refuse to believe in them. This is all very well, but what is there to justify the prodigious assumption that at least one stupendous moral miracle has been wrought, namely, the appearance on earth of a sinless being? There is absolutely no proof of it; it is a matter of faith alone and attested only by the consistent spiritual witness of nineteen centuries, beginning with the Resurrection of our Master from the dead. Take away the historical fact and what becomes of the moral one? Take, if it were possible to take, the supernatural out of the Gospels, and the figure of Jesus disappears with it; there is practically nothing left. The supernatural is the peg on which all else stands in the Gospel story.

It is time that this was re-emphasized. Naturalistic methods of interpretation have held the field too long. Either Christianity is a supernatural revelation or it is nothing. It began with a tremendous spiritual impulse communicated by a supernatural person and ever since maintained by Him from the transcendental world. There is absolutely no reason for the fixed assumption of so many minds at the present day that such an incursion from a higher order of things could not take place and that no so-called miraculous occurrences accompanied it. An accumulation of evidence in recent years is telling the other way; miracles, in the New Testament sense of the word, do happen and are happening now. Given a transcendent person, as Jesus was, and we should expect transcendent facts; but miracles of healing do still take place, and there is no other phenomenon recorded within the pages of the New Testament, save and except the birth and resurrection of our Lord, which cannot find its parallel elsewhere and in later times.

The word "supernatural" is the right word to employ with reference to the coming of our Lord into this world with all the benefits that accrue therefrom to mankind. It may not be the right word to use of the miraculous in general; what we choose to call miracles are only phenomena which we cannot refer to some general law. There are plenty of things happening around us every day which would have seemed a thousandfold more miraculous to our forefathers than the healing of a paralytic by a touch of the Saviour's hand. Wireless telegraphy would be an astounding miracle, for instance, to an Elizabethan sea captain, but to us it is no miracle at all, though a most wonderful discovery; the word "supernatural" would not describe it in the least. But supernatural does describe the significance of Christ's advent among men. Why? Because He came from a supernatural order of being, from a state of which our senses take no cognizance and in which the laws governing material existence do not hold. We know that there must be such an order or state, for all idealism presumes it, all spiritual aspiration is towards it, we hope one day to enter it. The One should come from it, to take upon Himself our flesh and our nature, in order to break our fetters and enable us to rise towards it and live the life proper to it—the life eternal—is a glorious thing to know and far easier for the devout soul to believe than that Christianity took its rise within the bounds of normal human experience and unattended by any portents or gleams of glory from without. The hope of the world is that the revelation of Jesus Christ is not from beneath but from above, not of earth but of heaven, not in line with the processes of ordinary human development but the infusion of a new creative principle from the Divine order. This is our faith, and upon this our souls repose.

IF we are to get the best character results from the experience of the war, the child and the youth must not merely see its costs, or read them in the papers. The costs must be felt in some sacrifice which is both real and voluntary. The clearer the motive and the more frequent or repeated the acts of sacrifice, the greater will be the educational influence. Probably some small sacrifice, voluntarily made by the child with a clear desire to serve the country and to help humanity, and repeated at frequent intervals so as to create a fixed habit of mind, will have more permanent influence than some larger but single effort.

This is a reason for urging the movement of Patriotic Service upon the Church Schools. It creates frequent and yet not impossible demands upon the children and youth to which they are perfectly able to respond. They give time or work and feel the gift. They conserve food and feel the self-restraint. They do kindnesses in manless homes and feel what it means. And all this is to meet the country's needs, and to show that mere might must never usurp the place of right.—The Leader.

War and Missions

By THE VERY REV. HOWARD C. ROBBINS, D.D.

THESE are trying times for people who are interested in missions. There are all the old difficulties and discouragements to face, and in addition there are a number of new ones occasioned by the War. But that is only one side of it. On the other side, the War has given new incentives to missionary effort. It has opened to us new missionary opportunities, and inspired new missionary hopes. Taking for granted your interest in missions, I wish to say a few words about these new conditions: first about the new difficulties, and then about the new incentives and hopes.

One difficulty is competition. The War has brought home to us innumerable needs and claims. War relief has been organized upon the most colossal scale that the world has ever heard of. It had to be, to meet the overwhelming needs. Everywhere one goes one sees people knitting sweaters, or preparing surgical dressings, or getting up bazaars and fairs to obtain funds for relief work. It is right that this should be so. It would be dreadful if it were not so and if all these tragical claims upon our compassion and our helpfulness were not given the right of way. But in giving war relief the right of way, other forms of philanthropic effort are being subordinated, and some of them are even being endangered. One hears everywhere the question what is to become of this or that beneficent work, now that its former supporters are so engrossed in new tasks.

For people who believe in missions, as you and I believe in missions, the answer is very simple. Missions are a part, and an indispensable part, of our war work. They are as much a part of it as surgical dressings, or munition manufacture. For ideas, as well as armies, are contending in this gigantic conflict. Essentially and fundamentally, this war is a conflict of ideas. What are its objects, as we Americans have defined them in our thoughts and purposes? Liberty. But the object of all missionary endeavor is to bring to men the liberty which is in Christ Jesus and his Gospel—Democracy. But the Bible is the text-book of democracy. Every great political movement looking toward the emancipation of the common people and their establishment in self-government has had its origin in the Christian Scriptures, either directly, as in England and America, or indirectly, as in France, through recognition of the principles which found their first expression there.

So with our other war aims: law, justice, respect for the weak, and the vindication of public right. Why, they are the political expression of missionary enterprise! There is no law, no justice, no respect for the weak, and no vindication of public right which is not ultimately founded on belief in the God who is the Judge of all the earth, and who demands these things of men and nations. The aims with which we have entered the War are precisely the aims which Christianity, and Christianity alone, can make secure for us and for others. To neglect missionary efforts at a time like this would be to throw aside the sword of the spirit in what, in its last analysis, is essentially a spiritual conflict. It would be to resort to the crude and brutal reliance upon force alone which has led to the moral bankruptcy of the despotic Power which we oppose.

The next difficulty is a good deal like the first. The War exacts time from us for relief work. It exacts money in the form of taxation. We are just beginning to learn the meaning of taxation. By the middle of next March we shall know a good deal more about it than we do now. We do not grudge the money that is being required of us. If ever a government had a prior lien on all the resources of its citizens our Government has that right now. We shall give all that is required, and we shall give it not only without complaining, but with profound satisfaction that we are able in this way to forward the cause to which we have solemnly dedicated the whole force and resourcefulness of our national existence. Still, it is not possible to pay such taxes without finding the margin available for gifts correspondingly diminished. What is going to happen, for example, to the apportionment for General Missions? That is a question which I have heard raised a dozen times within the last ten days.

There are two answers. The first and obvious one is sacrifice. Most of those who give largely to missions live in a very comfortable way, sometimes even in a luxurious way. The place to cut down first is in that scale of living, not in the support given to the brave men and women who represent us on the far-flung battle lines of Christ. They have made their sacrifices for the Gospel. It is time now that we should be making ours. I cannot believe that while this country is raising and spending money in billions it is going to be impossible to raise this year as in former years the pitifully small proportion of our wealth which has hitherto been devoted to Christian missions. In England, where taxes are higher than they are here, and where the cost of living is higher than it is here, I understand that gifts for missions have not only not fallen off, but actually increased. When I read that item of news in a missionary review I felt that I had just had news of a great British victory. It was a victory of the finest and highest sort, far reaching in its results. But, like all other victories which amount to anything in this war, it was won by sacrifice.

There is also another supplementary answer, and that is intensive cultivation of the home field. In our missionary giving in the past we have not sufficiently taken into account the value of the small gifts which come from numerous givers who give in a systematic way. Now this is a field which is capable of greatly increased fruitfulness, but which needs to be worked up. Experience has shown that it can best be worked up by the every member canvass and by the introduction of the duplex envelope system. For many parishes this involves a radical innovation, but the present emergency demands and justifies the innovation. If the larger gifts are going to be somewhat reduced, the difference ought to be made up, and more than made up, by a great increase in the number of small but regular weekly gifts. The parishes, as well as their offerings, will be greatly strengthened by it in the end.

I come now to the greatest difficulty, the greatest embarrassment and discouragement of all. That is the War itself. Here is Christian Europe, and Christian America, engaged in fratricidal strife. Here is war in its stark horror being waged between nations all of which have received the Gospel, all of which have nominally accepted it, and all of which have been taught to regard themselves as brothers in the one family of God, brothers, to establish whom in brotherhood Christ Jesus gave his life. Here, too, are war's fierce hatreds and intolerances. They are not peculiar to any people. Thanks, not to our superior merit, but to our geographical isolation, we are freer from these things than the other belligerents can be, yet even here in America we witness many lapses from that spirit of Christian chivalry which was enjoined upon us by our President. "See how these Christians love one another," was a true saying once. If it were repeated now, it could be said only in most bitter mockery. How can we send missionaries to spread abroad the Gospel when we, who have enjoyed it for centuries, have made so little use of it, and have been governed so little by its precepts that all Christendom is today a winepress trodden by the wrath of God?

The answer to that question is penitence. It is the deep note justly sounded by our War Commission which called upon us to enter in a penitential spirit the new Church Year. We are not called to our churches to meditate upon Germany's ferocity, or Austria's duplicity, or Turkish cruelty, or Bulgarian rapacity. We are called upon to come in penitence to confess our own sins, and to pray to God for forgiveness for public and for personal transgressions of His (Continued on page 71)

Jerusalem in the History of the World

By THE REV. WALLACE E. ROLLINS, D.D.

THE occupation of Jerusalem by Christians on December 11, 1917, after an almost continuous Moslem possession of 1280 years, will have, in the language of the British Prime Minister, "a profound influence on the history of the world".

For at least thirty-three hundred years Jerusalem has wielded, either directly or indirectly, a profound, and often a determining, influence upon the destinies of the world, and this influence has not been due to the fact that she has ever been a great political and military capital like Rome or Constantinople, or a great centre of commerce like Tyre or Corinth, or a great intellectual centre like Athens or Alexandria. Nor has her great influence been due to a highly favored location, for she sits on a high and barren Judean plateau, thirty-four miles from the sea and isolated from the great highways between the East and the West, bare of many of the necessities of life.

Her power has been due solely to her history and to her sacred associations. She became the religious capital of the world and the most venerated sanctuary on earth becauses she was the bearer of a Divine message to the world. It was here on this barrent spot, to quote the words of her greatest historian, that "She arose who, more than Athens and more than Rome, taught the world civic justice and gave her name to the ideal city that men are ever striving to build on earth, to the City of God that shall one day descend from heaven—the New Jerusalem. For her builder was not Nature nor the wisdom of men, but on that secluded and barren site the Word of God, by her prophets, laid her eternal foundations in righteousness, and reared her walls in her people's faith in God".

When Jerusalem first comes into the clear light of history—about 1400 years before Christ—she is a fortress, of no ordinary strength, under a Semetic chieftain, Abd-Khiba, who held his position under the king of Egypt. The name of the city even then was "Urusalim". All this and much more we learn from the Tel-el-Amarna tablets, eight of which were written from Jerusalem itself.

About the year 1000 B.C., as every child knows, this fortress was captured from the Jebusites by King David. It is interesting to recall that David, contrary to the customs of his time, generously spared the lives and the property of the inhabitants—a thing that has seldom happened in its many subsequent captures. David made Jerusalem the capital of all Israel. He brought the sacred ark there and made Jerusalem the religious centre of the twelve tribes.

Solomon built a magnificent temple of stone on Mount Moriah for the wandering Ark. He greatly increased the population and the buildings of the city. "If he found it little more than a fort he left it a city."

In the eighth century B.C., it was for fully fifty years the scene of the inspired ministry of Isaiah. He is the real creator of the spiritual Jerusalem. He became the interpreter of her divine mission, of God's purpose through her to the whole world. It was, as has been suggested by George Adam Smith, the advance of Assyria in the eighth century, B.C., that made Israel for the first time realize the world as a whole, just as the aggressions of German militarism in this twentieth century have forced America out of her provincialism and have made her, for the first time, conscious of the world as a whole and of her mission to the world.

In the year 621 B.C. the Law was discovered in the Temple, and, as a result, a great reformation was begun. Worship was centralized at Jerusalem. Henceforth there was to be but one altar. Henceforth the nation was really the city—the rest of the nation was but the outskirts of Jerusalem.

In 586 B.C. Jerusalem was captured and destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar and many of its inhabitants were deported to Babylon. But, though in a strange land, their hearts turned over to Jerusalem. "By the waters of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept when we remembered Zion." Psalm 137, 1.

"If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning.

If I do not remember thee let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy."

The exiles returned to their land in the year 537 B.C. under Cyrus, King of Persia, and in a few years more a new temple was built and dedicated, and later still in the year 458 her walls were rebuilt by Nehemiah.

I will not speak of Jerusalem's tragic history during the Greek period, of its many sieges, captures, and desecrations, as, for example, the Abomination of Desolation in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes in the year 168.

The glory of the city revived in the year 165 B.C., when Jerusalem became, and continued for nearly a century to be, the capital of a more or less independent Jewish state.

In the year 63 B.C. it was captured by Pompey for the Romans, and was under Rome when our Lord was born.

The Holy City was most intimately associated with our Saviour's life and ministry. It was this city which He visited as a boy. It was here that He drove the money-changers from the temple. It was to this city that He went up to attend the Feasts. It was here that He had His memorable conversation with Nicodemus. It was into this city that He made His triumphant entry. It was in this city that He instituted the Last Supper. It was the city which He loved and over which He wept. It was the scene of His trial and condemnation and He was crucified just outside its walls. It was here, also, that He arose from the dead, and it was in the sight of this city that He ascended into heaven. These events, all occurring within the brief space of a few months, have given to Jerusalem a glory and a pathos that can never fade away, and have made it for Christians the most venerated spot in all the world.

In 66 A.D. the Jews rebelled against the Roman Empire and in the year 70 Jerusalem was captured and destroyed by Titus. One million, one hundred thousand Jews are said to have perished in the awful struggle and 97,000 were taken prisoners.

The fourth century of our era marks a new epoch in the history of Jerusalem. The Emperor Constantine became a patron of Christianity, and built a magnificent church—the Basilica of the Holy Sepulchre—on the site of the tomb of our Lord. His mother, Helena, built the Ascension church on the Mount of Olives.

In the year 637 A.D. occurred one of the saddest events in all the tragic history of Jerusalem. The city was besieged by the Khalif Omar and his Arabian Moslems. The Patriarch of Jerusalem was Sophronius, one of the most learned bishops in the Church, and one of the ablest defenders of the faith and who deserves to rank with Athanasius. Under his inspiration the Christians fought valiantly for four months, but resistance was hopeless. Sophronius agreed to surrender the city if the Khalif himself should come to the walls and receive it. Omar agreed, and, entering the city, forced the aged patriarch to be his guide to the holy places. Omar erected a mosque of wood on the temple area which bears his name to this day, and which is the most sacred spot to Moslems, next to Mecca. On this spot a magnificent stone building—The Dome of the Rock—was built in 688 A.D. by Khalif Abd-al-Melik. That great black dome shines in the sunlight today almost exactly as it did 1229 years ago.

Late in the eleventh century Palestine was overrun by the Seljuk Turks—rude and savage tribes from Central Asia. Jerusalem was captured. Many Christians were imprisoned and many sold into slavery. Christian pilgrims were mistreated. All this led to the Crusades—those romantic episodes in history whose glamour affects us still. A burning zeal took hold of the Christian world to be in possession of

"those holy fields,
Over whose acres walked those blessed feet,
Which fourteen hundred years ago were nailed
For our advantage to the bitter Cross."

Millions of lives were lost in the attempt to win the Holy Sepulchre. Jerusalem was captured by the first Crusaders in 1099. For forty-eight years a Latin Kingdom was set up in Jerusalem (1099-1187)—Christian in name, but not always in deed. Whatever may be said of the misguided zeal and the cruelties of the Crusaders, the fact remains that they bear eloquent testimony to the idealism of the Middle Ages, for they came to her, "not like most other invaders, because she was the road to somewhere else, but because she was herself, in their eyes, the goal of all roads, the central and most blessed province of the world". It is with gratitude that we now recall the fact that generous, idealistic France took the leading part in the Crusades. The Crusades began and ended in France.

In the year 1517 the Ottoman Turks captured Jerusalem, and, with the exception of a brief period of Egyptian occupation, have held it to the present time. Thus the adherents of Islam have held Jerusalem, with a few brief intermissions, since 637 A.D. Of this time the Ottoman Turks have held it almost continuously for 400 years.

Such is a fragmentary sketch of the history of Jerusalem. It is a tragic history. No city in the world has had a more tragic one. But now at last her day of deliverance has come. Only a few weeks ago, as all the world knows, Jerusalem was surrendered to the British forces, under General Allenby. On December 11 the official entry took place. General Allenby entered the city reverently and on foot through the historic Jaffa gate. Near this gate is a breach in the walls, made to allow the proud Emperor of Germany to enter in state in 1898, but this breach was not used on this historic occasion. The commander-in-chief was accompanied by representatives of his own army, and by the commanders of the French and Italian detachments, and by a military representative of the army of the United States. Once more the inspired prophecy of Isaiah has come true: "Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem: for the Lord hath comforted His people, He hath redeemed Jerusalem. The Lord hath made bare His holy arm in the eyes of all the nations, and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God."

The City of Jerusalem during its long history has been besieged more than fifty times and has been captured almost as often, but this capture of Jerusalem by the British is, in many respects, unique among all its conquests.

Never before has so much consideration been shown by any captor for the city and for its sacred places. Turkish guns, concealed near the city and upon the Mount of Olives, fired upon the British troops, who did not reply for fear of injuring the Holy City, but with great bravery stormed the guns with rifle and bayonet. As a result not one stone of the city has been broken or torn down by its capture.

Never before has a conquering army shown such consideration for the inhabitants of Jerusalem. Not one of its 60,000 inhabitants was killed or even injured.

Never before have the inhabitants of the city welcomed a conquering army with clapping of hands, with shouts and tears of joy. Never before in the long list of conquerors—Babylonian, Persian, Greek, Roman, Turkish, Crusader—has a conqueror been acclaimed by the inhabitants as was General Allenby. Flowers were strewn in his path as he entered the city by Jews, by Moslems and by Christians. What a tribute to the character, to the fairness, the justice and the generosity of our valiant ally, Great Britain.

There is one other respect in which this deliverance of Jerusalem will, we devoutly trust, prove unique. All other deliverances have been temporary. This, please God, shall be permanent. Never again shall the Holy City be turned over to the cruelties of the unspeakable Turk, nor shall it ever be dominated again by his still more unspeakable masters in Berlin.

What will be the results of this last great deliverance?

Pilgrims will flock again in ever-increasing numbers to worship at the sacred places of the Holy Land. Jerusalem will be made sanitary and pilgrims will have every care and guidance. The holy places will be reverently guarded and protected.

Archæologists will have the opportunity, unhampered by Turkish bigotry and interference, to make fresh discoveries which will confirm and illuminate our sacred narrative. The old Jerusalem is buried from twenty to forty feet below the present city. Scientific investigation will settle many a disputed question of topography and will bring to light many new facts in regard to the city of Christ and His Apostles.

It may be that many Jews of all lands, inspired by prophecy and by their intense affection for the land of their fathers, will return to Palestine and build again a Jewish state, under British or allied protection.

But the greatest result of this last deliverance of Jerusalem will be its immense influence upon the sentiments of mankind—upon the scattered Jews throughout the world, upon the many millions of Moslems, and upon Christians of every name. The military importance of the capture of Jerusalem may or may not be great, but the world, after all, is ruled by its sentiments and affections and it may be that December 11, 1917, will yet prove to be the turning point in this great war. At any rate, the great significance to us of this capture of Jerusalem is that it is one more step in the great world-wide battle for righteousness, liberty and peace. One more stone has been laid in the building of that Ideal City which men are ever striving to build on this earth—the City of God that shall one day descend from heaven—the New Jerusalem.

May God grant that America shall do her part in the building of that city.

Thanksgiving and Prayer

ALMIGHTY FATHER, Who didst rebuke the sins of Christians of old by delivering the Holy Land and Thy City Jerusalem into the hands of an alien faith, we praise and bless Thy Glorious Name that Thou hast seen fit to restore into our hands Thy Holy City, placing it once again under the protection of Christian Rule; and we humbly beseech Thee, both to make our Empire more worthy of this sacred trust, and to grant that in the City, where the Saviour lived and died and where He founded His Holy Catholic Church, the branches of that Church, walking in the light of Thy truth, may consummate that unity which Thy Son has declared to be His will, to Whom with Thee and the Holy Ghost, be glory and dominion throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

The Invalid and His Clock

By D. H. ALLEN

THROUGH the still dark he sees them, every hour,
Those phosphorescent hands that duly keep
Their dim, yet gleaming, way, and ever creep
Round and around in slow, incessant power.
Yet stately constellations do embower
The watcher in his penance, and afar
Beyond his little room, each heavenly star
Moves glorious, till the day draws on in flower.
The night, where he has wandered in the deep—
The never-ending night—at last is gone;
And from all trouble, now, he has release.
The lovely light! It fills his heart with peace,
He knows the sun is shining on the lawn,
He feels that God is good—and falls asleep.

The Small Mission in the College Town

By THE REV. PAUL ROBERTS

PROBABLY never before has America thought of her young men and their welfare as she has been thinking of them during the past few months. She is pouring out her wealth by the millions to care for the men who are going to defend her cause on the field of battle. She is surrounding them with every possible opportunity for physical and moral uplift. She realizes today, perhaps as never before, that on these young people her safety and honor rest. And the Church through her efficient War Commission is seeing to it that her share in this work of spiritual uplift is being maintained.

Surely one of these helpful results that we can look for from this dark cloud hanging over us is that America and the Church will remember the thousands of young people, not called, possibly, to serve their country with the gun, but with the mind; not mobilized in military camps, but in educational ones; not learning to apply their scientific training to the problems of destruction, but to the problems of construction. And this lesson must be learned by the Church in particular. Here is an army of 227,000 members who are to be the coming leaders of Church and State gathered in 1,390 college centres. They are going to determine rather largely the future trend of our civilization. At least they will be the officers in the army of progress. What is to be the direction of that advance? Shall the leaders have unselfish Christian motives or shall they have materialistic and worldly ones? We make a mistake at this time if we confine our attention to the military camps and forget the educational ones. With the European colleges drained of their men; with problems of reconstruction facing the world after this war such as she has never faced; with many of our own college men fallen or rendered helpless on the field of battle; there stretches before the men left in our colleges almost limitless opportunities for service. Are they going to be equal to the task? Are they going to be able to carry the burden and carry it in the right direction? The Church has always faced a serious student problem. I submit to you that she faces one now so serious that it well-nigh staggers the imagination.

We know that even in normal times the college age is a critical one. Old foundations are perhaps swept away, and the need is for new ones to take their place. The restraints of home life must be replaced by higher and bigger ones. The apparent freedom of college life must not spell license. The field so open to wild oats must be sown with clean and good grain. In normal times these opportunities and responsibilities lie before the Church. Today, in the face of the world's great need the failure of the Church to meet the situation would be worse than a tragedy.

In this western part of the country all this is particularly true. Ours is very largely an agricultural section and our problems are those of the open country. Farm life is the rule, and the problems of farm life the Church has been very slow to handle. We are by no means a rural Church, or at least we have attained little success in the country so far.

Living far from town, with chores to be done on Sunday as well as every other day of the week, there is apt to be little Church attendance. Sunday is largely a social day for the farmer when he goes to visit a neighbor. The men usually are to be seen sitting around the wind mill and on the edge of the water tank, chewing straws and talking over the crops, and their wives are in the house tending the children and discussing symptoms. How shall we reach these people? In many instances the clergyman has held services in country schoolhouses and the results are usually good, but unfortunately a man can be in only one place at a time and so the country problem is merely being scratched on the surface. Surely this rural situation must be met in some other way, and the Church must work through strategic centres. Does any place offer such a centre as the college? Here are gathered the progressive young men and women from all over this great country. In a few years they are going back to the small towns and to the farms and will be the leaders in their several communities. In college they are getting the ideas that they are to take home with them. Where is there a finer opportunity for the Church? We have not enough clergy now to do the work that we have already undertaken, so we cannot look to the clergy alone for the solution of the problems in these great farming countries, but if we can send out Christian leaders as well as agricultural and scientific leaders from our colleges can we not effectively meet this great missionary problem?

What has the Church been doing to meet this situation? There are a good many causes for encouragement. In many places there is being made a determined effort to send the proper sort of men as student chaplains, to erect worthy buildings, to arouse the diocese and province to its responsibility. And here a word of tribute should be spoken for our own General Board of Religious Education which, with a miserable support from the Church as a whole, has been trying to rouse her to her responsibility.

But there is another side to the picture which is not as encouraging. It is a side that is illustrated by the work of the Church in Brookings, South Dakota. The situation in this town is not an unique one, but is typical of many places that are seldom if ever heard from. It illustrates a condition sufficiently widespread to be a cause for deep heart searching on the part of the Church that has permitted it.

The Church has been in Brookings more than twenty-five years. Here is the South Dakota State Agricultural College with more than one thousand students, who are to be the future leaders of this great state. For all of those twenty-five years the Church has been represented to those students by a small frame building one mile from the college. It is forty feet long and twenty feet wide, and is frequently named "The Shoebox". The building and grounds owned by the Church stood for the work of about twenty faithful communicants who lived in the town and who had received practically no outside assistance toward the equipment. The church will hold just ninety, for one Easter morning there were ninety-one present, and one had to sit out in the doorway. He was a college professor. One year the minister-in-charge helped to coach the college football team, and the players decided to attend service in a body. The question arose whether they could all get in at the same time. They decided that they would have to go in sections and the plan was abolished. Last year a Bible Class of students was started with a good attendance especially of students with no Church affiliation, but there were three other classes in the same small (40x20) room, one of which was the kindergarten, and the confusion was too great for the class as well as the teacher. Last of all services are held only every other Sunday, and many a time students and professors walk the mile to the Church door only to find that the minister is preaching in some other county.

May I repeat that this is not merely a Brookings problem. The details may be different, but it fairly represents too many places that are never heard from. Does anyone need ask why the Church has not grown in Brookings in twenty-five years? That is the idea many a student has of the Episcopal Church to take back with him from college. Is there not some connection, perhaps between this situation and the fact that the Church is not recruiting her ministry from the colleges as she used to? Furthermore the colleges represented in the ministry are very largely eastern. We will never win these college men and women for the Church of Christ until we send out picked men, and until we are ready to support them with the proper equipment. That is, at least the first part of the solution of this college problem.

Our Women Students

By MABEL ELEANOR STONE

"I NEVER dreamed that the Church was like that—people who knew and loved our Lord, from the very first ones down to us, and all wanting to share Him with those who did not know. I always thought it was societies and a building and I did not see how belonging could make much difference." Through many weeks this girl had worked with absorbed interest as one of the three hundred college girls who gave in simple pageant form the story of the Church at a conference of southern colleges two years ago; at the end she turned with the above remark to the director, the rough wooden cross that she had carried as St. Columba's crucifer still in her hand, her new vision of the Church shining in her eyes.

A little while ago a keen, thoughtful graduate woman student challenged me: "Then you really believe that there have always been and always will be leaders in the Church who are trying to look things straight in the face and not dodge? I have been thinking of the Church as a sort of opiate against being too uncomfortable over social unrighteousness and I want to be one of the people till it hurts."

"No, I don't have much to do with the Church any more," another girl said. "It did very well when I was a child, but I'm thinking for myself now."

These three girls represent the typical attitudes of the average college girl to the Church. The first had missed the vitality that comes only through the touch of one life on another; the second had failed to find in the Church of Christ the same passion for social righteousness that she had learned from the teaching of Christ. And the third had received no help in the important adjustment of her childhood conception of God and the Church to the ever-growing conceptions of the rest of her life.

Two illustrations will also serve to show the possible effect of the returning alumnae on the home parish:

"No, I can't seem to get hold of the high school girls in this parish at all," said a troubled rector. "They are fairly running wild. I hoped great things this Fall when Maud W. came back from college because she has always been a leader, but she thinks the Church is old-fashioned and that she, for one, 'has too much brains to believe all she's taught'; they follow her, of course."

On the contrary, there is in the South a small parish which three or four years ago had no Auxiliary, a pitiful apology for a Church school, and no community interest, which is at the present fast becoming a vigorous force for the Kingdom of God—and all because an unassuming, quiet girl from a normal college went there to teach and threw her splendid energy and ability loyally and tactfully into the work of the Church. The rector told me this himself.

These are simple cases, to be duplicated every day; yet would any rector willingly risk in his parish the influence of such a girl as the first, or fail to welcome the tremendous help a tactful, enthusiastic "older girl" can give after four years of learning to lead girls?

Then if we do care what she is to be when she returns, we naturally begin seriously to question what she is during college and what forces affect her during those four years (may I here define student as they themselves do—"anyone studying at a college or university," with distinct emphasis on undergraduates). It is a far cry from the quietly self-confident college women of the North, and the brainy, aggressive university women of the West, to the shy, hungry girl of some tiny mountain college of the South, yet they have certain things in common. Scorning unreality in the religious life of those who lead them (and in their own), intensely, almost morbidly honest in intellectual things, giving of themselves eagerly in all forms of service, with a group consciousness so marked that it has proved far wiser to deal with them as students, having needs and problems apart from those of other young people of their age—they are sent out to spend four years in an atmosphere as real, as tense, as complex as anything you can find today in the world. The immediate result is that the modern college girl offers the most fascinating contrast imaginable. She plays basket ball one hour, as irresponsible as her small brother, and the next discusses philosophy and religion with deadly earnestness; she spends the morning in the laboratory and the afternoon between a matinee and the dressmaker; she is "crazy" about tennis and psychology, French pastry and sunsets, H. G. Wells and symphony concerts, and always underneath her ready humor is an earnest thoughtfulness and hunger for God. This hunger for God is being met by two forces within the college; first, the services for worship arranged by the college (and this is true in some measure of almost every college in the country); to these is added in many colleges by the faculty opportunities for supervised practical service along many lines; secondly, what the students have created for themselves during nearly fifty years, and what is by far the most vital influence in developing a corporate religious life within the average college walls—the Christian Student Movement of North America, a part of the World's Student Christian Federation. By this time the Movement has intense self-consciousness, unity of purpose, a mass of data on student conditions unequalled by any other organization, and a deep loyalty to the Church and desire to be of service. Most important of all this is the students' own chosen expression for their religious life as students. We cannot ignore it, but we can utilize it.

Another question confronts us: What has been our attitude towards the woman student in the past? For the most part, threefold. First, we have ignored her. Reports of "student work" have gone into great detail for the men's work, and dismissed hundreds of women students in the same institutions with a sentence, or forgotten them completely. This may be due partly to the need mentioned before of securing men for ordained leadership, and partly to the general belief (unwarranted though it is) that the moral problem of men students is greater than that of women, because more obvious. Second, we have exploited her. We have not meant to, but we have ended in wasting her energies in uneducative activity and drained her sympathy by unwise appeals. Third, we have honestly tried to understand her and help her find her place in the Church's life. To this end we have had for over ten years in the Church a woman acting as secretary for women students. The Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Congregational churches also have student secretaries, and with one exception (Southern Presbyterian) these secretaries are attached to Mission Boards, perhaps because more women students are needed in the mission fields than elsewhere in the Church. This plan, however, has narrowed the work among women students almost to that of a candidate secretary, leaving, as Deaconess Goodwin says, hundreds of girls outside any direct touch with the Church during college years simply because they are not material for missionary candidates. In addition, there is the splendid work done by university pastors, chaplains and rectors of parishes in student centres, but everywhere there has been the tendency to overemphasize one path of approach. In some places the missionary propaganda was so strong that no one entered Bible classes, because it was not all part of a unified program. In another, girls were so busy with social service that they had no time left for worship, while there is at least one state where a particularly enthusiastic teacher-training course, promoted during three years, left the colleges which it entered practically without Christian leadership at the end of that time because teacher-training reaches mainly the older students and one freshman class after another had been left undeveloped. Illustrations of the lack in other branches of work, admirable in themselves, through failure to relate them to a unified program, might be given but would add nothing to our discussion. The question is left: If none (Continued on page 52)

The National Prohibition Amendment

By THE REV. JAMES EMPRINGHAM, S.T.D.

ON December 17, the House of Representatives of the United States passed the Constitutional Prohibition Amendment Resolution and on December 18, the Senate of the United States adopted it in the form passed by the House. The vote in the House was 228 to 128 and in the Senate 47 to 8. The Senate had originally passed it in a slightly different form by a vote of 65 to 20.

The resolution submits an amendment prohibiting the manufacture, sale, transportation, importation and exportation of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes one year after it has been ratified by thirty-six States; the ratification, as specified by the resolution, having to occur within seven years. The Republican and Democratic parties contributed practically equal quotas in support of, and in opposition to, the amendment in the Lower House.

All seventeen of the existing amendments to the Constitution were submitted by Congress as in this case, and adopted by the Legislatures of the States. Congress has the power to submit amendments to special ratification conventions in the States but that method has never been used.

This Congressional victory is the logical culmination of a series of political events on the prohibition issue covering the past fifteen years. The liquor traffic is a national institution. Its primary lease of existence is national and not State, the States having secondary and not primary permissive powers with respect to it. The traffic has operated upon national lines. It is nationally organized for political purposes. It has continuously used its profits in license States for corrupt purposes in prohibition States, and has sought by every ingenuity to override and break down the laws in those sections of the country which have outlawed it. For these nation-wide machinations there is now presented to the nation the opportunity to visit national judgment.

There are already numerous Federal laws concerning the traffic evidencing its national character and logically preparing the way for the final ending of the traffic by constitutional action.

Those interested in war emergency prohibition may well rejoice over this victory in that it has presented so vigorous and incontrovertible evidence of the earnest temper of the country upon this issue in this particular national crisis. All previous efforts at securing immediate national prohibition for the duration of the war by statute have gone to wreck upon minority shoals in the United States Senate, where a minority able to muster one more than one-third of the votes is able to prevent any measure from coming to a vote. It is to be hoped that the tremendous demonstration of popular sentiment on behalf of national prohibition evidenced in the vote on the constitutional amendment may lead the Senate minority now to yield and permit the proposed war-prohibition legislation which the nation so imperatively needs.

Does the amendment violate personal liberty? That all depends upon what people are really free to do. Rights of property are older and even more sacred than rights of behavior, yet, by the amendment to the Constitution forever forbidding slavery, alleged property rights were swept away for the nation's moral good. One has but to read current newspaper comment upon this new amendment resolution to realize how generally the idea is coming to prevail—as it has long prevailed at law—that there is no right to deal in or use poisonous drugs, of which alcohol is one. While the secular press is voicing such lofty sentiments with respect to habits of drink, it ill becomes professed representatives of Christian altruism to argue upon a lower plane.

What about the danger of generating undue controversy during the war? There has never been a proposed election anywhere in any State in the nation without loud liquor prophecies of social turmoil following the adoption of a prohibitory law. There are now twenty-seven prohibition States. That prophecy has never come to pass in any one of them. The thing which raisers of this contention fail to see is that it is the sublime interest in, and determination with respect to, the war upon the part of the people of this land which has compelled the amendment's submission. What they are seeking to secure for the better presecution of the war cannot possibly divert their interest from the war. On the other hand, there is turmoil already here with respect to this traffic, of which the opponents of the amendment have failed to take any note.

Moral issues grow, they do not happen. They are the fruit of conscience and experience and embody the irrepressible power of all growing things. This movement could never have been smothered by failing to submit the amendment. The fight would have gone on in a more distracting degree than ever; it had grown through the years until it was majestic enough to demand the right of submission and to have refused that right would not have ended the controversy. With few exceptions, editorial comments in the metropolitan press have not been bitter or hostile. The New York Times, which, probably more than any other paper represents conservative political opinion, has ransacked its mental attic for every antiquated objection to the amendment and its adoption. The New York World has interpreted the submission of the amendment as a menace to the future of the Democratic party; but other metropolitan papers have calmly reminded the World that what the nation is primarily interested in just now is not the future of any political party, but national efficiency and morale.

When Abraham Lincoln undertook to save the Union and slavery, too, it was mysteriously made plain to him that ere the Union could be saved he would have to meet a divine demand for the liberation of the slaves; and he bore repeated testimony to the fact that he issued his Emancipation Proclamation in answer to what he believed to be the demand of God. Could the Judge of all the earth have a moral price for victory then and have no such price for victory now? The signs are abundant that the price is the obliteration of the liquor traffic from Christian civilization.

of the present attacks are wholly satisfactory, what next? May I venture to suggest

(1) That such a careful study of the student in relation to the Church be made as will enable us to define the problem. We know what the student is not in relation to her home parish; we think we know what we wish she were, but of what we really mean by the "problem of the college student in relation to the Church" (at least if that student is a girl) I do not honestly believe we have more than a vague and general idea.

(2) That the maturing of concrete plans be carried forward slowly enough to insure a sound constructive foundation, and that anything in the nature of a program be held in suspense until we can test it against the student's own reactions.

(3) That some provision, of whatever nature seems wise, be made for a committee, the sole responsibility of which shall be to undertake the study of student conditions and the initiation of work among students. The task is so stupendous, involving as it does relationships with other boards of our own Church—social service and missionary, for instance—and with those of other religious bodies, with many social and religious organizations, with college faculties and with student organizations of every description, that it seems surely an unfair burden to add to the work of any other committee which already has its own responsibilities.

BISHOP McCORMICK FINDS MEN WANT COMMUNION

War Commission Representative in Touch With All Chaplains

The following letter has been received from Bishop McCormick by Bishop Lawrence:

Paris, December 18, 1917.

My dear Bishop Lawrence:

It is good to get your Christmas and New Year's greetings.

I have been in and about Paris most of the time so far on account of three things:

First. The necessary organization of the office and the popularization of our work among church people and others in the city.

Second. The three weeks of anti-typhoid innoculation.

Third. The arrangements as to military passes. I have had an interview with General Pershing, and the matter of the passes is in process of adjustment.

I have had several conferences with Mr. Carter, the head of the Y. M. C. A., and with members of his staff, and am cooperating with him in every possible way. He is a high grade man, very sympathetic with us and thoroughly to be trusted.

Bishop Brent has been here for some days and is now on a Y. M. C. A. tour which is, perhaps, the beginning of his work with them. He is in a Y. M. C. A. uniform and seems quite fit. I understand that his headquarters will be in Paris and I shall, therefore, see him frequently. Bishop Lloyd came over from London, on his way to Liberia, accompanied by Archdeacon Schofield, and spent eight days, returning to London yesterday. He preached at the American church on December 9, and then went on a flying tour arranged by Mr. Carter for the purpose of giving him at least a glimpse of conditions. Bishop Israel is still waiting for his base hospital. Meanwhile he has been making very acceptable addresses to the men on the Y. M. C. A. circuit. Just now he is within the British lines visiting the deputy chaplain general. He seems much improved in health and spirits. He is exercising the jurisdiction over the American churches in Europe, and has sent Murray to Rome to relieve Lowrie for three months.

As to the registration, we are attempting to catalogue all the men in the service and all war workers attached to our Church, wherever we can find them. We have already something like 300 names on our list, which is growing rapidly. I am sending each one a Christmas card and am having printed some thousands of cards announcing the services of the American church in Paris and the fact of my having my office there. These cards we will take out to the men wherever we go.

I have formed a chaplains' auxiliary of about twenty of the most prominent churchwomen in the city and am putting them into touch with the individual chaplains and their men. Through these ladies we are accumulating and distributing large numbers of books and periodicals and we are having 3,000 pairs of woolen socks made and sent to the chaplains for distribution, 1,400 of which have been forwarded.

As I wrote Bishop Perry, Dr. Watson has been very considerate and has given us the use of the large room on the second floor of the parish house, with light and heat. As soon as Bishop Israel returns, he and I together will make a substantial donation to the expenses, as both light and heat are very dear. I am looking for an extra helper in the office, who can be here when either Mr. Ross or I, or both, should be out of the city, and who can assist with the correspondence, which is becoming increasingly large.

I have made several visits outside the city to camps and hospitals and canteens, and hope next Sunday to be in one of the large troop centres, where arrangements are being made for giving the men their Christmas Communion. Last Sunday I was to have been within the lines, but the engagement was canceled by wire for military reasons which could not be explained. Such is war!

I have seen and conferred with the following chaplains: Messrs. Sherrill, Taylor, Bayard, Peabody, Talbot, Rollins and Danker and have corresponded with all the rest. Among our clergy in the Y. M. C. A. I have seen and conferred with Messrs. Patrick, Cate, Kinsolving, Rathbun, Cleveland, Cooke, Ferguson and Lusk, and have written the rest of them. I have also seen Mr. Van Keuren who is with the Red Cross. I have co-operated with Dean Beekman in his Soldiers' and Sailors' Club, which is a most useful piece of work, and I have had an interview with Chaplain Pierce, who is now acting as a major, in charge of all burial arrangements for American soldiers.

In regard to the additional clergy coming over, I have already written at length that unless they secure commissions as chaplains, they would have to come under the Y. M. C. A. or the Red Cross, as there is almost no chance to use men independently.

As to the American University union, I should say that in addition to its general value as a University club, it has the advantage of giving to the men a decent and Now—Give for the Church!

MEN and women of the Church have given in large figures for the excellent work of the Y. M. C. A. and loyalty to the Church will prompt them also to give in large figures to their own Church work. As Dr. Mott has well said, the Y. M. C. A., composed of laymen and the mission and voluntary chaplains, being the clergy, are indispensable to each other in the work of the Church for the men of the Army and Navy.

PENNSYLVANIA'S CHILD LABOR LAW THREATENED

Danger of Admission of Sub-Normal Children Into Industry

Regulations that would violate both national and state child labor laws have been recently adopted by the Pennsylvania State Board of Education, and the National Child Labor Committee has sent a letter to Governor Brumbaugh protesting against the regulations and urging that they be immediately withdrawn.

The regulations adopted by the Board of Education relate to the issuance of employment certificates to mentally defective, subnormal and sub-standard children. Under the existing State law no child under fourteen may be employed in any gainful occupation, and a child between fourteen and sixteen may not be employed unless he has completed the sixth grade. The new regulations make it possible for the Bureau of Vocational Education to issue certificates to defective and retarded children who are below fourteen years of age or who have not completed the sixth grade. In other words, as the letter of the National Child Labor Committee to Governor Brumbaugh points out, the regulations attempt to make valid an invalid employment certificate although no such discretionary power is given to the Bureau of Vocational Education.

OF NATIONAL IMPORTANCE

"These regulations are of national importance," says the committee's letter to the Governor, "because Pennsylvania has the largest number of wage earning children under sixteen in commerce and industry of any State in the Union and because until now it has had one of the best child labor laws. Whatever Pennsylvania does is watched with interest by employers and educators throughout the country. Any lowering of standards there is likely to be followed by similar action in other States. For this reason the National Child Labor Committee protests against these regulations and asks in the interest of the working children, not of Pennsylvania alone but of the whole country, that they be rescinded."

In addition to the violation of national and state child labor laws the committee points out the danger of turning into industry a body of abnormal children when there is a definite tendency now to eliminate even normal children under sixteen years of age because of great liability of young workers to accidents. Permitting children who are not abnormal but merely below grade to obtain employment certificates puts a premium on sending children to schools where the teaching is incompetent, the committee asserts, and, finally, the regulations are directly opposed to the policy of President Wilson and the administration, which is committed to the maintenance of labor standards for the sake of efficient production at present, and for the efficiency of the American Nation after the War.

CHILDREN SING FOR SICK AT DAWN OF CHRISTMAS

Visit Hospitals in Automobiles to Bring Christmas Cheer

KEARNEY, NEBRASKA.—The Sunday school and the Junior Auxiliary of St. Luke's parish, including many children who do not belong to the Church, for many weeks practiced for the Christmas carol service in anticipation of being able to render it not only in the church but to carry the glad tidings to sick and homeless people.

As the congregation was gathering for the Midnight Celebration of the Holy Communion on Christmas Eve it was the children's voices singing their carols outside the church that could be heard in the stillness of the frosty "midnight clear." The children were then hurried home for the shortest night that many of them had ever known, for soon after dawn a line of cars, headed by the auto-bus from the Midway hotel, was outside the church to take the children far and near to render their service. Men of the congregation who had hitherto enjoyed Christmas morning in bed were out with their cars to convey the youngsters.

St. Luke's hospital was first visited, where the full children's service was rendered as they marched through the corridor and, at the request of the nurses in behalf of the patients, up the stairs, where they sang carol after carol. Before leaving, and where the patients were well enough to receive them, the children offered their gifts to the sick, fruit and flowers.

Next the W. C. T. U. hospital was visited, where the carols were repeated and most of the service. The children will not soon forget the expressions of gratitude upon the part of the patients here whose "forms are bending low." The cars now drove to the State Tuberculosis hospital, where the service is rendered in the crisp, winter air. The next and last drive is to the State Industrial school, where the superintendent had gathered three hundred boys and teachers in the hall to listen to the children's service. Five hundred and twenty-five gifts were carried to the sick and to persons without, or away from their homes.

The children had voted a month before "to have no Christmas," but to ask their parents to give the money to help prepare the gifts they were to carry. The home Christmas Tree and even Christmas dinners were postponed. At five o'clock the children sang their services in the church, after which the unanimous declaration was "We have never spent so happy a Christmas".

CHURCH LOSES ITS FIGHT TO BAR EXPELLED MEMBER

Judge Throws Out Trespass Case Brought Against Woman

ATLANTIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—Judge Frank Smathers directed a jury in the district court here last week to bring in a verdict for the defendant in the action for damages for alleged trespass brought by the Christ Methodist Episcopal church against Mrs. Millicent Watson, a former member, who was recently expelled.

Mrs. Watson was charged by officials of the church with having made uncomplimentary remarks about the pastor, the Rev. Charles D. Sinkinson. She was called before a committee and bidden to withdraw the criticism, but refused. Then a jury of church members adjudged her guilty of conduct unbecoming a member of the church and the Quarterly Conference expelled her from membership.

Mrs. Watson, however, continued to attend services. When she appeared at the church on a certain Sunday morning officials decided to sue her for trespass and an action for $500 damages was instituted. The case was thrown out of court when Judge Smathers decided that if any officials of the church could prevent Mrs. Watson from entering the building it was the Board of Trustees, and it had not been shown that this body had taken such action.

SOLDIERS GRATEFUL FOR MACON CHRISTMAS PARTY

Khaki Clad Guest Sings His Own Patriotic Composition

MACON, GEORGIA.—Christ church parish house fairly radiated with Christmas comfort, happiness and homely cheer to the soldiers of Camp Wheeler on the Saturday night, December 29. This parish started the weekly social and informal dancing for the boys two months ago with only six enlisted men, but as each man told others the attendance has increased until, Saturday, the place was thronged, although no special invitation had been given out, and the night was one of the worst of a bad winter. They found a lovely scene awaiting them. A beautiful large holly Christmas tree stood at one end of the hall with a package of cigarettes and a present for each soldier. At the other were two long tables against the wall; so as not to take up any dancing space one was piled up with different kinds of fruit and the other set with bowls of mixed candies and nuts. One large old-fashioned silver tray, in the centre, was heaped with candy nearly half a foot high.

Among the pleasant features of the evening was the singing of a patriotic song by one of the boys, A. Mitchell of the 117th Field Artillery, who composed it and set it to music himself. He is by way of being a very fine organist, and since being here in camp has played for the Sunday services in St. Paul's. It is understood that the song will soon be given to the general public, so all can share the pleasure with us.

The ladies of this parish feel that under the enthusiastic leadership of their rector, the Rev. Mr. Libson, and his charming wife, they are really accomplishing their "bit" very satisfactorily. As one of the boys expressed it: "You ladies don't know what this means at camp, how the influence spreads; I can see the greatest change in my company and, do you know, they begin Friday discussing who shall come in Saturday".

enjoyable social centre and also of putting them into touch with really wise advisers such as Professors Nettleton, Van Dyke, Lansing and Vibbert, who may be of unusual help to a man in time of perplexity or emergency.

As to moral conditions, there is no doubt that difficulties arose at first, and to some extent continue, both on the drink and woman question, but matters are being straightened out and regulations are becoming stringent. Men will not be allowed in Paris on leave and the Y. M. C. A. has been asked to prepare large recreation centres, in places like Aix-les-Bains, where the men can have a good time without unnecessary temptations. I think it might fairly be said that matters are improving and that the military authorities are quite awake to the necessity for control, and wherever necessary, for punishment.

CARS NEEDED

As to the requirements of chaplains, it is manifest that the first thing needed is a small car or other means of transportation. I think that Edwards is the only man who has a car of his own. A car is better than a motorcycle as it gives a man a chance to carry supplies and to take helpers with him. In some cases battalions are 150 miles from each other, and in many cases, if not in most, portions of the regiments are widely separated. The car question would have to be settled in America as it is practically impossible to obtain cars here. I do not think it necessary for the chaplains to have moving picture machines or anything of that sort as they can best be looked after by the Y. M. C. A. We need additional Prayer Books and some more of your service books. I am trying to get Bibles from England, as many of the men have asked for Bibles rather than Testaments. There is always a need for readable books and periodicals.

In conclusion, the men seem glad that we are here and that the Church is officially represented. They talk frely about their home parishes and about the services. Last Sunday afternoon, in a driving snow storm, three young aviators walked a long distance to attend the service here. Two of them were from Brooklyn and one from Philadelphia and they were good types of hundreds like themselves. Three men have come long distances to me, in Paris, for Confirmation. When I was at the base of the ambulance service, a few Sundays ago, a fine, tall sergeant said to me, "Bishop, are you going to give us the Holy Communion?" and when I replied, "Yes", said, "I'm so very glad, as it may be my last". He was going, the next day, to an exposed position. The Communion service seems to be that which the men really prefer.

I heard from Dr. Maxon that in his base hospital there were 400 men, mostly suffering from such diseases as measles and mumps. We shall have to do what we can to keep the men in good spirits this Winter and to try to brace them up and cheer them.

With regards and best wishes, believe me,

Sincerely yours,

JNO. N. MCCORMICK.

MOVE TOWARD CHURCH UNITY AS RESULT OF WAR

Many Signatures Attached to Document on Subject

The following document in Church Unity has been made public:

To Our Fellow-Believers in All the Churches; Greetings:

The present crisis confronts the Church with the possibility of coming forth from the War either with a diminished or a vaster power. Today the churches must face realities. A divided Church cannot stand.

Today everywhere the people are combining their industries to make the Allied Nations one mighty power in the War. Even on the lower plane of economics the Churches are not uniting to save waste as in many places they might do. How many tons of coal and units of electricity might be saved if thin congregations in large edifices should consent this Winter to worship together!

Far more than this: today the Young Men's Christian Association represents Christianity before the world. The many Churches stand as an unorganized, scattered line of support behind its well organized line of volunteers. As they go forward the separate Church units are not in position to let the world know that behind them stands the reserve power of the whole Church of God. Today some of our ministers at the front, forgetting the denominational names of the churches that sent them, on battlefields and in hospitals are working side by side as servants and priests of God. At home they are held apart.

Today the Government of the United States is apportioning chaplains among the different denominations. The Red Cross only for our charity; our denominational names and churchly vestments for our religion!

These things ought not so to be. The crisis of Christianity requires the subordination of all things divisive. Without prejudice to existing personal relations or official fidelities, the whole Church is called today to make one sacrificial offering of all things held to be of value in one great venture of faith for God. Today we should take counsel not of our fears but of our hopes, as did our fathers before us. Today our fears may be our disloyalties.

Bishops, clergymen, laymen—shall we loiter in the way, disputing about many things, when in the suffering of the world our Lord is crucified afresh for the sin of modern civilization? The hour commands unity. By some decisive act our faith in it should be made fact. That might be done if, for example, as a war measure we should put in cantonments, in regiments and on battleships chaplains and ministers, from whatever Church they may come, commissioned not by their own Communion only, but by joint ordination or consecration sent forth with whatsoever authority and grace the whole Church of God may confer, bearing no mark upon them but the sign of the Cross. At some single point of vital contact—that or something better than that—the Church might act as one.

Something must be made visible fact of unity today if the Church—the one Church of the many Churches, the only Church which the Lord Himself had faith enough in God to pray for—is to become tomorrow the power of God to save the world. This cannot be too long postponed. These times require quick decisions. Can we suffer the Churches today to forget that before the week of His passion our Lord gave the barren fig tree but one year more in which to bear fruit or be cut down? This parable may be for the Church now.

Therefore we, the undersigned, representing different communions, lay before you this appeal for action, asking for response and for such suggestions as may seem to you timely.

Correspondence relative to this appeal may be directed to the Rev. Newman Smyth, New Haven, Connecticut.

CANADA APPROVES ORDER STOPPING LIQUOR IMPORTS

Premier Borden's stoppage of the importation of intoxicating liquor into Canada, and promise to cut off domestic manufacture of liquor in the near future, have there been generally approved. "A big and bold thing", says the Toronto Globe; probably the permanent end of the main "cause of riotous living, of national waste, and of social demoralization and misery", says the Montreal Mail and Empire; "the greatest step ever undertaken in social reform in this country", says the Ottawa Citizen. All the nine provinces except Quebec are already as "dry" as provincial legislation can make them, and Quebec has been conquered by the prohibition forces so fast that by next Summer the only notable "wet" spots will be Montreal and Sherbrooke—even Quebec City having voted to oust the saloon.

RUSSIAN DEAN HOLDS SERVICES FOR SEAMEN

Sixty-four Russians at Seamen's Institute Welcome Russian Church

NEW YORK CITY.—Saturday, December 29, the coldest day of the old year, found one of the representatives of the Seamen's Church Institute at the request of Dr. Mansfield calling on the Very Rev. Peter Poppoff, dean of St. Nicholas Russian church, pleading with him for a service among the sixty-four Russian sailors now at the Institute. These strangers within our gates are far from home and have been separated from their loved ones for from two to four years, without language, books, or friends, and without any religious ministrations. The response was unique and generous. The dean himself would come tomorrow afternoon and minister to the shepherdless sheep.

Fully one hour before the time appointed the Russian seamen were eagerly waiting for the word. When the altar was arranged, the candles lit, and the incense burning, the priest, clothed in a robe of gold from head to foot, began a truly wonderful service. The men entered the chapel in solemn manner, with sacred pace. Four of them separated themselves from the others, formed something like a choir, and led the Litany, Te Deum, Confession, and Gloria in Excelsis. Although they had no book, nor had they seen one for some time, they never failed once in the entire service, but responded with reverence, dignity, and pathos. Unaided by organ or any other instrument they chanted in the clear, rich, mellow tones that are the distinct property of the Russian race. With the uplifted hands, the interceding priest, the pleading Kyrie Eleisons, the swinging of the golden censer, and the burning of the fragrant incense, the great Eastern Church ministered before the Lord, to His people in the Chapel of our Saviour.

The sermon was brief, clear and personal in its application. The dean pleaded for faith in God and His Providence, even though dark and foreboding were the present events. He pleaded for purity of life, nobility of purpose, and heroism in action. After some prayers and intercessions he turned towards his eager and devout audience, blessed them with the apostolic benediction, and, as he did so, signed them with the sign of the cross, as the symbol of blessing, protection and victory. Then each of the men, as if claiming that sacred sign for himself, crossed himself upon the breast.

Leaving the place where they had stood for more than an hour, they approached the priest, who held out to them a gold cross with the dying Saviour upon it, which he himself had kissed, and presented it to the men. Each man, as he passed by, kissed it reverently and tenderly, as if the suffering and dying Saviour were present in reality. Then they departed.

Each man was given (by the foreign worker) a New Testament with Psalms. After this they went to their rooms and were not seen during the entire evening either in the lobby outside, for they were quietly meditating and reading the Gospels which they had not had for years.

Even an infidel could not fail to be moved by the hunger and thirst after God these men of large stature and dignified conduct evidenced as they approached God's altars, and by the profound satisfaction which they seem to have found through this wonderful and never to be forgotten service. Those who witnessed it, even though looking at it through the eyes of the West and in the spirit of modernism, were compelled, like Mary, to ponder in their hearts.

On New Year's morning the dean sent the Rev. John Kozitsky, together with Mr. Nicholas Belischewsky, to celebrate the Holy Communion. Both came and were met by sixty-four seamen, eager, and prepared by fasting and prayer. The robes worn at this service were gold and green, the service full of sacredness, mystery, and rich meaning. The sermon was strong and inspiring. The men, having received the New Year's blessing, pledged anew their allegiance to the Lord Christ, kissed the cross, and departed with the peace of God in their souls. Not one of these seamen is touching intoxicants of any kind. Such services as these, unexpected as they are blessed, recall the prayer of our Saviour, "that they they all may be one". East and West met each other in the Seamen's Church Institute, a House of Prayer for All Nations.

BISHOP DUNN TRAVELS 300 MILES UP OLD RIVER

Bishop of British Honduras Plans to Open Up New District

BELIZE, BRITISH HONDURAS.—Bishop Dunn has taken a trip into the interior of the colony. He went between 200 and 300 miles up the Old River, as it is called, in a small open motor boat, with three men (colored) and a colored catechist, a faithful old man who has been spending all his time going up and down this district, holding services and preaching in his simple way. The trip took eight days, and fortunately the weather was good and, the river being in flood, traveling could be rapid. The Bishop held five confirmations and many services. He visited places that had never seen a bishop before, holding his services in little bush huts with mud floors, or in the open air.

He found about 280 children receiving no education, and came home full of a scheme to start a training college for native teachers, Government aided. Till this can be started he is going to start a night school and get some voluntary teaching for the lads. The teachers must be young men, as they have to build their own huts, plant cocoanuts and plantains, bananas and rice for their food, and live alone, fetching their few other supplies from Belize by dory. The Bishop wants to place a clergyman at El Cayo, the most considerable place at the end of this river district, and the teachers can act as catechists under his direction, and hold services in the schools on Sundays.

ORDINATION

On December 9 in Christ's church, Greenville, S. C., the Bishop of South Carolina advanced to the priesthood the Rev. R. D. Malany. The candidate was presented by the rector of the parish, the Rev. Frank A. Juhan. The bishop preached the sermon. Chaplain Fell of Camp Wordsworth was one of the attending priests.

NOW COMES HER MAJESTY, MARY SEYMOUR, A DOLL

Who Travels From Child to Child With a Pleasant Lesson

AUBURN, NEW YORK.—Mary Seymour came into existence in this fashion. One of the public schools containing mostly foreigners was asked by the drawing teacher in the first grade to bring some toy to draw. The children arrived, armed with mittens, or a rubber or a shoe. "We ain't got no dolls," they announced. The heart of the D. T. was touched and she had visions of her next month's salary going into dolls, but she had learned wisdom from former experiences, and she remembered the constant daily stream of pennies that flow out for candy, gum and the movies. So she said, "I'll bring a doll the next time I come, and the child that has the best record can take her home to spend Sunday."

She bought the doll and, as she was having the fun of dressing it, the thought popped into her head: Why not make this doll an object lesson? She had heard the grade teachers speak almost in despair of trying to get the tiny children to wear the proper amount of underneaths that American children wear. Sunny Italy never required such a superfluity of clothing, so why bother in the land of the free? It was only one of teacher's queer notions, anyway!

The doll was dressed as carefully as any American child could be, and every article, although of the utmost simplicity, had a tiny amount of trimming, and the requisite number of buttons and buttonholes, and also ribbons, where usage requires. Her frock was a blue linen, trimmed with bands of white braid, and only on the hat did the D. T.'s love of the beautiful creep out when she tucked a tiny bunch of forget-me-nots under the brim. "Children all love blue," was her aesthetic excuse. If the young lady was to pay week-end visits she must be prepared, so a sport coat and finally a tiny suitcase, containing a real "nightie" with a ribbon in it, evolved from this clever teacher's fingers.

When it was time for the next visit to this school, the doll went along. She was duly presented and "What shall we call her?" was answered as one voice, "Mary Seymour." They took the name most dear and familiar to them and added to it the name of their school. The clothing was all shown and explained, but when the suitcase was opened and the nightie with the ribbon came to light, their joy was unbounded.

The first to have the honor of entertaining Mary Seymour was a tiny Italian boy, and he stretched out eager hands for her.

"Mary must be undressed and put to bed every night, and if she gets her dress or clothing dirty, it must be washed and ironed and she must be brought back to school in just the same condition she goes to your house," explained the teacher.

Mary is paying regular week-end visits. The interest and work of the children who are in competition for her have increased wonderfully. She is a silent educator of the greatest value, and already the teacher sees an effort to conform to American standard in regard to clothing and cleanliness. Mary often has her entire wardrobe freshly laundered, and in all her globe trotting she has lost only one slipper?

BISHOP LEADS CHRISTMAS PROCESSION IN BELIZE

Choirs Sing Carols in Market Place and Streets

BELIZE, BRITISH HONDURAS.—Never before have the people of Belize witnessed such a unique and impressive scene as that on the night of Christmas Eve, when the Bishop of British Honduras, the Right Rev. E. Arthur Dunn, and the Ven. Archdeacon Murray with the choirs of the cathedral and St. Mary's church, accompained by members of both congregations and others, went in solemn procession through the streets singing with great effectiveness well known Christmas hymns. and at the various stopping places, carols.

At 7:45 p. m. the surpliced and female choirs assembled at the cathedral, and the Bishop prayed for God's blessing on this special effort to remind the people of the town of the Christmas news of peace and good-will to all men. Then, led by the cross-bearer, and followed by the bishop vested in his scarlet robe and hood and carrying his pastoral staff, with the priest-in-charge of the cathedral, the layreader and catechist from a river mission, the choirs marched in procession to Government House singing "O Come, all ye faithful". On arriving there the carol "In Excelsis Gloria" was sung, after which the bishop spoke a few words and wished His Excellency the Acting Governnor and Mrs. Walter and family a happy Christmas. His Excellency in replying thanked the bishop and the choir for the good work they were doing in trying to promote a well kept Christmas in Belize, and heartily wished them all a joyful Christmas. The procession then proceeded singing "O come, all ye faithful", to the market square, where they joined the surpliced and female choirs with cross-bearers from St. Mary's church who were waiting with their rector, the Ven. Archdeacon F. R. Murray and a deacon from Virginia, Guatemala. At this place a very large and expectant crowd had assembled. The chief constable of Belize had kept an open space around the waiting group of St. Mary's, which was now filled by the cathedral choir.

Very picturesque was the scene under the flickering lights, and the noisy market place was hushed as the sweet strains of "Carol, sweetly carol" rose and fell. At its close the bishop gave a brief address in which he said that the object of the unusual step which the Church of England was taking was to give to each of the citizens of Belize a Christmas greeting, and to remind them that Christmas Day is not a day for mere worldly pleasure, for drunkenness and impurity, but that it is a religious festival and that it would be well for all to regard it in that light. He appealed to all to attend on Christmas Day the churches to which they belonged in order to worship the Savior Who was born so many years ago on the first Christmas morn. He spoke of the Saviour's passion, to which the crosses leading the choirs reminded them, and of the grievous war that is raging in Europe, which will not cease until the nations of the world repent, and he asked the people of Belize to do their part in bringing the war to a close by raising the moral and spiritual tone of the town.

The carol "Good Christian Men Rejoice" was then sung and the combined choirs, with St. Mary's leading, marched in procession over the bridge into St. Mary's parish, and proceeded to the public hospital singing "While Shepherds watched their flocks by night".

On arriving there the vast procession entered the grounds through the opened gates. Near the hospital veranda the two choirs were formed up and the same three carols sung, while the bishop and the archdeacon visited the wards. The bishop said a prayer and spoke a few kindly words of Christmas greetings in the various wards. When he was giving his episcopal blessing to the inmates his voice could be distinctly heard in the grounds, which added to the impressiveness of the carol singing outside. On returning to the choirs the bishop gave an address in words similar to the last.

The quiet and peace of the hospital grounds were a great contrast to the bustle and noise of the market square; every word of his earnest appeal could be distinctly heard.

The procession then re-formed and marched singing "Hark! the herald angels sing" through several other streets, across the bridge again into the cathedral parish, where, at a street corner, the bishop gave once again his Christmas greeting and earnest appeal for the proper keeping of Christmas daay, and once again "Carol, Sweetly Carol" was sung.

Shortly after, the procession divided, part returning to the cathedral and the remainder to St. Mary's church. As the choirs entered the brightly lighted cathedral and wound through the aisles, the beauty of the Christmas decorations, and the long procession of choristers in scarlet cassocks and surplices made a sudden blaze of color very striking to eyes accustomed to the dimly lighted streets. The bishop said a few prayers and then dismissed the choir and congregation with his blessing.

THOMAS BROWNE SEXTON IN TRINITY FOR 38 YEARS

NEW YORK CITY.—Thomas P. Browne, sexton of St. Agnes' Episcopal chapel, Ninety-second street, west of Columbus avenue, last week completed thirty-eight years as a sexton of Trinity parish. Until a few years ago he was sexton of old Trinity, at the head of Wall street, and he now is the senior sexton of the parish. When he became older he was transferred uptown, where the duties are not so exacting.

Mr. Browne has four stars in his family service flag, although he is too modest to display such an emblem. Three sons and one grandson are serving the colors. Dr. William H. Browne of Detroit is with the Sixteenth Engineers in France. His son, William A. Browne, and the grandson of Thomas P. Browne, is a despatch rider in France.

The Rev. Duncan H. Browne, rector of Christ Episcopal church, New Brighton, Staten Island, recently was commissioned chaplain of the 305th infantry, and is at Camp Upton. Joseph F. Browne belongs to the Hospital Unit at Fort Porter, Buffalo, N. Y. A fourth son is Thomas P. Browne, Jr., private secretary to the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity parish.

CHAPLAIN HOLDS MISSION WHILE CROSSING ATLANTIC

Rev. J. G. Mabry Sails for France with Tank Regiment

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.—The Rev. John Gregory Mabry, who has just sailed for France as chaplain of one of the tank regiments, expected to hold a mission for the men of his regiment on the ship going over. This plan was suggested by his colonel who thought it would be a good way for the new chaplain to get into touch with his men.

Mr. Mabry has been on the staff of the House of Prayer in this city for some time. His work among boys here and in Calvary church, New York, where he worked during his seminary days, has been peculiarly successful. Soon after the outbreak of the War, Mr. Mabry organized a Boy Scout troop at the House of Prayer. He had no one to drill the boys, and was rather anxious about the success of his venture. One day he was walking along the street and ran into a well-set-up sergeant in khaki.

"You're the man I want", he said to him.

"I don't know ye, Father", was the reply.

"I know you don't. But I've got some boys I want you to drill."

"Then I guess ye're the man I want. I was jest thinking I'd like to do somethin' with boys."

But the sergeant had little use for the House of Prayer or religion of any kind, and consented only when Mr. Mabry promised him that his duties would be limited to the parish house. Of course, the result was that the sergeant was converted, instructed, and finally confirmed.

After he went into camp with his regiment, Mr. Mabry often visited the camp. The chaplain was a Methodist, and at the invitation of the commanding officer, Mr. Mabry celebrated the Holy Communion in the camp frequently for the men of the sergeant's regiment. He would go down on Friday and spend the afternoon and evening seeing the men. One tent was given to him as an office, and he had a procession of men coming one after the other to talk things over with him. On the last Friday Mr. Mabry had 143 such visitors. Then on Saturday he celebrated a "Field Eucharist". Finally Bishop Stearly accompanied him and confirmed a number of the men.

Mr. Mabry now holds a captain's commission in a newly formed tank regiment. Most of the officers and men belong to the Roman Catholic communion, but they are enthusiastic over their new chaplain, and it is at the special request of the officers that he has planned to hold the mission aboard ship.

GIFTS AND MEMORIALS

A beautiful Gothic porch and vestibule has been presented to St. Paul's church, Warner, New York (the Rev. Ray Wootton, rector), the gift of Miss Isabella Lawrence, in memory of her sister, Catherine Lawrence Olmsted, late wife of Bishop Olmsted of Central, New York. The design was taken from an old English church and makes a very attractive entrance. The interior of the vestibule is solid oak and an appropriate bronze tablet has been placed within.

PRESIDENT UPHOLDS CHILD LABOR STANDARDS

Urges Maintenance of High Level in War Emergency

The following letter defining President Wilson's stand on the maintenance of labor standards during the War has just been received by the National Child Labor Committee:

"As the labor situation created by the War develops I am more interested than ever, if that were possible, in throwing all the safeguards possible around the labor of women and children in order that no intolerable or injurious burden may be placed upon them. I am, therefore, very glad indeed that the National Child Labor Committee is diligently continuing its labors and extending its vigilance in this important matter. By doing so it is contributing to efficiency and economy of production, as well as to the preservation of life and health. "WOODROW WILSON."

Although President Wilson has indicated in a number of his speeches that he does not believe in the relaxation of laws protecting women and children, his letter to the National Child Labor Committee is his first direct utterance on the subject.

"We expect that President Wilson's letter will be one of the greatest factors in preventing further relaxation of child labor laws," said Owen R. Lovejoy of the National Child Labor Committee. "Last Spring before the administration had time to state its position on the question of labor standards a number of States authorized the suspension of their laws. Since then there has been constant pressure on other States on officials charged with the enforcement of labor laws to permit violations of the labor laws on the ground of war necessity. But the President's letter, and a similar one received by the National Child Labor Committee from Secretary of War Baker, shows clearly what the attitude of these officials and the public at large should be toward any proposals that would 'place intolerable or injurious burdens' upon the women and children.

"The National Child Labor Committee plans to use Child Labor Day, January 27 (January 26 for synagogues and January 28 for schools) to urge the preservation of labor standards in accordance with the President's letter. State legislatures will be convening about that time and the committee hopes through the medium of schools, churches, Y. M. and Y. W. C. A.'s, women's clubs and other organizations to so awaken the public to the need of continuing the protection of children in war time that any legislation tending to break down standards may be forestalled."

Special pamphlets outlining European experience and the steps already taken in America have been prepared by the National Child Labor Committee for use on Child Labor Day. Copies of these pamphlets may be obtained from the committee's headquarters at 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City.

Prisoners to Receive Calendars

AUBURN, NEW YORK.—The inmates of both the men's and women's prison are to each receive a calendar, if the request of a public-spirited citizen is complied with. The plan was tried out last year and was such a success that the daily papers are publishing appeals for two thousand calendars to bring a bit of cheer to those who are inside.

SUPPORT OF YOUNG PEOPLE PROBLEM IN WASHINGTON

Bishop Acts in Behalf of Those Church Communicants

WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—Because of the enormously increased volume of the work in the government departments, a great influx of young men and young women have come into Washington from all over the land, and many social and religious problems prevail. In connection with these the Bishop of Washington has issued the following letter to his city and suburban clergy:

The Sunday school institute of the diocese at a recent meeting voted to ask all of the clergy to give special attention to the many young men and young women entering government offices at the present time, and strangers in this city. Pastoral care and personal welcome, with introductions to suitable homes and individuals, and in particular the bringing them into adult Bible Classes and church guilds, and sociables, and to regular worship and frequent communions, should be our chief aims.

Every pastor should create a committee for this work, or assign it definitely to one or more of the existing parochial organizations.

In the case of women and girls the Young Women's Christian Association is endeavoring to secure a full list of names, addresses, and church relations of all coming here, and this will assist in finding those belonging to our Communion. But every one of our congregations should seek to minister to all strangers in its neighborhood without regard to church affiliations, not with a view to proselytizing, but as Christian service to those sojourning within our gates, and deprived of the benefit of their home influences and associations.

On behalf of the Board of Religious Education of the diocese of Washington,

ALFRED HARDING.

BISHOP SUMNER MARRIED AT CHICAGO CATHEDRAL

Informal Reception and Wedding Supper at Clergy House

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—The cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, Chicago, was the scene of a beautiful and informal marriage on January 1, when Bishop Anderson, assisted by Dean Pond, married Miss Myrtle Mitchell of Negaunee, Michigan, and the Rt. Rev. Walter Taylor Sumner, D.D., Bishop of Oregon. The bride was attended by Mrs. Raymond Seward Anderson, while Lieutenant J. Allen Haines, U. S. N. R. F. acted as groomsman. An informal reception and wedding supper followed in the clergy house.

It was fitting that Bishop Sumner should be married in the cathedral, which he served first as lay worker and organist while a student at the Western Theological seminary. It was before its altar that he was ordained, first to the diaconate, then to the priesthood, and finally consecrated as a bishop. From this cathedral as a centre and as its dean he accomplished the great work for the church, and Chicago.

REMARKABLE WAR RECORD OF LOS ANGELES PARISH

Largest Episcopal Church West of Chicago Gives 107 Men

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.—On a recent Sunday there was raised in St. John's church here a service flag containing 107 stars in honor of the men of the parish who are in the service of their country. In this number there are twelve sets of brothers, representing a double contribution from this number of families. Eighty of the men are communicants, all are baptized, sixty are commissioned officers and all but four per cent. are volunteers.

WE ARE PROUD

In his sermon on the occasion the rector, the Rev. George Davidson, said in speaking of the men on this honor roll:

"We are proud of their splendid manhood, of their quick and ready response to the call of duty, and of their willing consecration to the cause of freedom and democracy. We will constantly think of them and we will often pray for God's blessing upon them and the cause which they defend. It is not necessary that we shall live, but it is important that freedom and righteousness shall survive; it is not necessary that we shall live, but it is necessary that Democracy shall not perish from the earth. It is not the length of years which counts, but the quality of life. To be true to our own cause of justice and of righteousness, of liberty and of freedom is all that matters just now. If the enemy wins in this struggle it will only be over the dead bodies of every true and loyal American. If this is the only way by which the enemy may win we gladly make the sacrifice. We do not want war; but if war is thrust upon us, then war it shall be. The die is cast and with our patriot of a hundred years and more ago—Patrick Henry—we will be true to the spirit of our fathers and say, 'Give me liberty or give me death!'

SYMBOL OF OUR PRINCIPLES

"We dedicate our service flag today and hang it in our Church as a symbol of the principles for which we live and die; we place the 107 stars upon it in honor of the gallant and brave men who have caught the vision of our land and have gone from us to defend our sacred rights; and we consecrate ourselves, our lives, our fortunes, our all, upon the altar of our country's need in a sure and certain confidence of the ultimate triumph of right over wrong, of freedom over tyranny; and in the sublime faith that our God is the God of Justice, is a Righteous God, who careth for His children who are true to Him, and that to them the victory shall be given."

St. John's parish has the largest communicant list of any Episcopal church west of Chicago, and is proud of its splendid record in the country's service. There is a Red Cross auxiliary which stands fourth largest in the entire city, and of the individual congregations stands first. The rector is chairman of the finance committee of the Diocesan War Commission.

CINCINNATI MOTHER WORKS NEAR HER SON IN FRANCE

Finds Boys in Service Want to Get to Front

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—A hope, almost too distant to be admitted, has been realized for a Cincinnati mother, Mrs. Guy Mallon, who is now stationed in the same location in France as her son, Lieut. John Mallon. Mrs. Mallon is a well-known communicant of the Church of the Advent, and prominent in social service work. She is president of the Women's City Club, the livest women's organization in Cincinnati. Mrs. Mallon is in France as a Y. M. C. A. worker. The lieutenant is one of her eight sons and daughters. A letter received by Attorney Guy Mallon from his wife says:

"Of course I am dreaming and will waken in Paris if not in Cincinnati. But this is what seems to be happening. I left Paris this morning, and after noon arrived here and found John at the station. He looks well and is very busy. They are evidently studying hard and enjoying it. They are evidently anxious to get nearer the front.

"This is a wonderful place—a historic old town with a story-book castle. John took me there today—dungeons, turrets, a torture chamber, everything a mediaeval castle should be.

"The Y. M. C. A. is in a palace. I mean that literally. A huge palace, perhaps twenty rooms, all furnished as a palace should be. I have a room and a dressing room, heat and hot water when I order it from the old woman who is the one servant. She is a refugee from Northern France, whose husband and two sons were taken prisoners by the Germans three years ago. The walls are tapestried. There are beautifully frescoed ceilings, bronzes and ornaments everywhere and oil paintings. I am writing at a wonderful inlaid desk, near an open fire.

"Address me 'care of Y. M. C. A., American Expeditionary Force'. You see we are an accepted part of Pershing's force. I am filled with two sensations. Admiration for the plucky, courteous, self-sacrificing French and appreciation of the goodness of you all in sending me over.

"The need for women is far, far greater than we realized at home and if when Spring comes there are not enough I know I shall feel that I should stay on—always providing of course that I am not needed at home. And I tell you right now that I am going to make good. . . .

"Do not forget that I am militarized and uniformed. I look like a cross between a Salvation Army lass and a Zouave from Tunis.

"I just missed hearing M. Painleve fail to get his vote of confidence, and so the ministry fell. No wonder the senators seemed to be excited. Why did they take time to drink tea with me and to kiss my hand and gabble unintelligible and unmistakably polite compliments during the recess?"

Bishop Woodcock Addresses Soldiers

"We shall bid our boys God-speed when they go", says Bishop Woodcock. "And—God hasten the day—we shall welcome them with open arms on their return. We shall remember them and pray for them by night and day. But when they return victorious, as we believe, we shall honor them not only for the visible enemy whom they have defeated, but even more for the great invisible enemy whom they conquered. It will be victory, indeed, two-fold and glorious, the enemy overcome by implements of war, and the enemy resisted by integrity of soul. No reward could be sweeter than that to the soldier who, in his home-coming, may look mother and sister and sweetheart and wife in the eyes without flinching, without shame, and without torment of conscience. That is loyalty—the loyalty of—"'Men who never fail their brothers,

Men who never shame their mothers,
Men who stand for country, home, and God.'"

PRISONERS DO THEIR BIT JUST BY MARKING TIME

Speaker Tells Women It Is Their Job for Uncle Sam

AUBURN, NEW YORK.—The women of Auburn prison were called upon to pledge their loyalty and support to their country at a New Year's eve service. A large package containing boxes of candy for every member had been sent by some friends in New York. The women all gathered in the chapel and the services were opened by singing "Oh come, all ye Faithful". The speaker told them that the first thing soldiers were taught to do was to mark time, in place. It was hard, dull work, for it meant keeping your eye on the pair of feet next to you and all down the line, and seeing that your feet were put out and back at exactly the same time as all the other feet. If it was perfectly done it made the line of hundreds of feet look like one pair.

OPPORTUNITIES REFUSED

The speaker said she had had repeated opportunities to go to Europe and help in the war work, and that her desire, as theirs, was to get out, but her job was right there in Auburn, attending to the everyday tasks. It was really marking time, as was theirs. If they did their job just as faithfully and cheerfully as they possibly could day by day, they were helping Uncle Sam in the best way, and he was calling on every woman in America to do just that, the best they could. It meant supporting the matron, keeping up their interest in themselves and their personal appearance, hanging on to their tempers, not carrying tales, doing their daily tasks with a smile, and, above all, seeing what they could do to help someone else.

It was a big bit that the country asked, for on the march there is always a change of scene, and in battle there is always such excitement that the soldiers can forget their discomfort; but the soldier who has to stay in one place all the time, seeing the same people, doing the same thing, just marking time, and does it cheerfully and willingly, is as much needed as the other kind. The speaker then asked all who would be willing to "mark time" for their country in 1918 to stand, and every woman arose.

After the candy had been given out and a word of greeting to each, the service ended by singing "America".

BISHOP GUERRY OPPOSES CLOSING OF CHURCHES

Thinks Union Services Would Weaken Local Attachment

CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA. — The Right Rev. William A. Guerry, bishop of South Carolina, in a statement for publication opposes the closing of churches owing to the coal shortage. He says:

"Of course, every good citizen sympathizes with the effort of the Government to conserve coal, food and all supplies which will help us to win the War. But in this crisis it seems to me unfortunate that there should be any suggestion from representatives of the Government that the Christian Churches should be closed on Sunday in order to save coal.

"If this is a war of principles or, as the President has expressed it, to make the world a safe place for democracy, it must be evident to every thinking man that you cannot make the world a safe place for democracy until you first make it a safe place for the Kingdom of God; and that there never has been a time when people needed more than now the inspiration and consolation of their religion. Therefore, instead of shortening our services and reducing their number by any plan of cooperation, it seems to me that we ought to encourage our people to go to church more frequently than they do.

"To conserve fuel by holding union services would result in fewer people attending church. Local attachments would be weakened and responsibility for attendance on one's own parish church would be undermined. The advantages to be gained would be doubtful. In this time of war I am not in favor of doing anything which would tend to decrease church attendance, which would undoubtedly result if this plan were adopted.

"It strikes one as rather inconsistent in this great national crisis when religion should mean so much to our people that representatives of the Fosdick Commission at Charleston and elsewhere should seriously propose the opening of 'movies' on Sunday afternoon. If fuel is going to be saved anywhere let it be in the 'movies' and not in the churches. People can do with less amusement, but we cannot afford to dispense with religion. I feel very deeply that it is a mistake at this time to endorse any movement which tends to undermine a man's religious convictions. While we are conserving food and fuel we need to conserve even more moral and spiritual influences in the life of the Nation."

LARGE FUND RAISED BY ST. JOHN'S UNIVERSITY

NEW YORK CITY.—A report to the Mission Home says that the Alumni and students of St. John's university, Shanghai, have raised and placed in the hands of President Pott $11,000 as their share of the $15,000 needed for the new university gymnasium to be erected in memory of the late Professor F. C. Cooper. Dr. Pott has personally secured from friends in this country $2,500 and needs $1,500 more to make good his part of the pledge to the building fund.

For Country

"You have done your bit; you must now do your utmost!"

AT ST. PAUL'S church, Milwaukee, the rector and people have decided to save coal for the Allies. They have accordingly closed the church building and are using only the parish house and the chapel until warm weather returns.

THE FOLLOWING EXTRACTS are from a letter written by a parishioner of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Paris, to friends in this country:

"There are so many boys to be seen on the streets and many families are inviting one or two or a dozen for dinner or supper on Christmas day. Bishop McCormick, who has been preaching in our church lately, is much interested in the boys and also Bishop Israel. They seem both to be fine men and I am glad to have them over here . . . . Bishop McCormick spoke to the ladies of the congregation about our getting in touch with the American chaplains at the front, so that they may feel that they can write to us about any special man or special need that we could help them with. The idea seems good and I believe many ladies responded."

IT IS ENCOURAGING to see how the schools are "backing up the Government". The following is from the letter of a California school girl:

"Our principal is a fine, wideawake man, who is very much interested in the national situation, and that interest is pounded into everyone who goes there to school. The Junior class had a thrift stamp campaign and the members of that class bought $28 worth during the first week. I think there are sixty pupils in the class."

THE REV. BERTRAM E. BROWN has been requested by the Bishop of North Carolina, Bishop Cheshire and the War Commission to move to Charlotte as voluntary chaplain at Camp Greene.

AT SPARTANBURG, SOUTH CAROLINA, the Rev. W. H. K. Pendleton, rector of the Church of the Advent, has been spending most of his time in serving the troops at Camp Wadsworth. The War Commission has provided for an assistant in his parish in order that his pastoral work in the camp may continue.

THE REV A. E. WHITTLE of the mission in Porto Rico was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Garland at Atlantic City, New Jersey, on December 27, and sailed at once for England, where he hopes to secure a chaplaincy in the British army. As was reported in THE CHURCHMAN recently Mr. Whittle, who is a British subject, has been called to the colors, and for this reason left his work at Fajardo about a month ago.

AN AMERICAN FLAG has been placed in the chancel of St. Paul's church, Warner, New York, the gift of Mr. Orlin Spore. A service flag with ten stars has been presented to the mission by Dr. Charles B. Gay and a roll of honor of boys enlisted from St. Paul's hangs in the church.

THIS NOTICE APPEARS in the last issue of the Trinity Record, New York:

"News has reached us of the call God has made upon one of our soldiers, James Treadwell Hequemborg of the Congregation of the Intercession to enter into the higher and fuller life of service. His name upon the honor roll has been marked by a small red cross, and his star upon the service flag has a smaller white star imposed upon it. He is still a soldier, contending for righteousness and peace, for all the universe is bound about the feet of God, and we pray God to keep his soul in the place of light and refreshment and to give him a merciful judgment at the last day."

THE WAR COMMISSION has appointed Dr. Milton, with the permission of the Bishops of North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia, to be official visitor at the camps at Spartanburg, Greenville, Columbia, Charlotte and Augusta. Dr. Milton spent ten days after Thanksgiving in conference with the chaplains at all of these five points arranging for services and equipment. For the four camps in North and South Carolina the Commission has provided $6,000 on acount of salaries for volunteer chaplains.

THE REV. E. S. WITTELL has been appointed by Bishop Guerry in charge of the work among the negro troops at Camp Jackson, Columbia, South Carolina.

THE REV. HERMAN PAGE, JR., has been appointed by the commission as voluntary chaplain at Camp Lewis, American Lake, Washington, on the nomination of the Bishop of Olympia.

THE REV. CHARLES F. COLLINS has entered upon his duties as voluntary chaplain at Camp Pike, Little Rock, Arkansas.

AT CAMP JACKSON, Columbia, South Carolina, the Rev. Edwin A. Penick, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Columbia, has left his parish to give his whole time to his duties as chaplain.

THE REV. EDWARD M. JEFFERYS, D.D., rector of old St. Peter's church, Philadelphia, and now serving as chaplain of Base Hospital No. 10 in France, sent the following cablegram to his congregation on Christmas Day: "A blessed Christmas to you all, and may the New Year bring us victory and peace."

MANY OF THE clergy of the Diocese of New York have reported the names of parishioners who have responded to the call to the colors. Many others have not yet made known to the committee the names on their honor rolls. All the clergy of the diocese are requested to send to the Secretary, Samuel W. Patterson, Ph.D., diocesan house, 416 Lafayette Street, New York, the names and rank of all soldiers and sailors belonging to their respective parishes or missions who have already been enroled for service in this War, or who at any time before the end of the War engage in such service, in order that the Bishop of the diocese and the War Commission may have complete records.

THE REV. A. G. B. BENNETT of Columbia, South Carolina, is working as a voluntary chaplain at Camp Jackson, Columbia.

THE REV. E. S. WILLETT of Columbia, South Carolina, is working among the colored people at Camps Jackson and Gordon.

THE REV. R. E. GRIBBINS, rector of St. John's church, Wilmington, North Carolina, has been granted an indefinite leave of absence by his vestry and will act as one of the chaplains at Camp Sevier, Greenville, South Carolina Mr. Gribbins is a graduate of the South Carolina Military Academy.

AN HONOR ROLL of war service has been made up for insertion in the next catalog of Kenyon College. The record shows that 201 Kenyon men have enlisted, which is 170 per cent. of the average annual student attendance for the last twenty years. Very few American colleges have reported a proportionate enlistment which approaches this record. A Kenyon service flag will shortly be hung in the college chapel.

In the interests of the many Kenyon men who are or presently will be in France the college has joined the American University Union in Europe which maintains a club house for college men in Paris. Through this action of the college all Kenyon men in Paris can enjoy the privileges of the Union and in addition the college will be able through this organization to maintain regular communication with its sons at the front.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 19, the first American cemetery in France was dedicated. The ceremony was attended by a large number of the people of ——— as well as American and French soldiers. The bit of ground, a gift of the French Republic, was officially presented by the Sous Prefect in an address which touched the hearts of all who heard.

A SERVICE FLAG bearing thirty-seven stars, with room for more, was raised in the chapel of Hobart College at the services a week ago Sunday evening in honor of the Hobart men of the last graduating class and of the four classes now in college who have participated or are preparing to take an active part in war work. While those present stood, Dr. Hubbs, the college chaplain, read the thirty-seven names represented by the stars in the flag. The president of the senior class then raised the flag to its position on the left hand side of the altar.

THE DIOCESE OF New Jersey is fortunate in having two civilian chaplains and one United States naval chaplain on the ground at the three encampments within our borders. At Camp Dix, the Rev. Karl M. Block is in charge of St. George's Chapel and Club House, address Wrightstown, New Jersey. At Camp Vail, the Rev. Thomas A. Conover has been appointed temporary chaplain and may be addressed care of Y. M. C. A., Camp Vail, Little Silver, New Jersey. At the Fourth Naval Base, Wissahickon Barracks, Sewells Point, Cape May, New Jersey, the Rev. Ernest L. Paugh, one of our clergy, is the naval chaplain.

These chaplains will be very much helped in their work if the rectors or parents of any of the young men stationed at Camp Dix, Camp Vail or Sewells Point will send them their names and their regimental company.

READING MATTER OF a Christian character is being furnished to our soldiers and sailors by the American Tract Society. Since the United States entered the War, the society has issued and distributed over a million and a quarter carefully selected tracts especially adapted to the spiritual needs of our boys, 50,000 Soldier's Text Books, 40,650 copies of Cromwell's Soldier's Pocket Bible, 2,500 copies of "Daily Food" in khaki, and 1,600 volumes of the Patriot Library, making a total of 1,364,750 publications.

It is the purpose of the Tract Society to continue this helpful distribution during the entire period of the War. When all the United States battleships and cruisers and the Y. M. C. A. buildings in the various Army cantonments have been supplied with the twenty volumes of the Patriot Library, the society proposes to forward another set of twenty volumes to each Y. M. C. A. building and to every battleship and cruiser in commission in the United States Navy.

IT SHOULD BE encouraging to those who have friends or relatives at Camp Wheeler, in Georgia, to be advised somewhat of the delightful manner in which Christ church, is looking after the welfare of the men in this camp. For several months past the rector, assisted by the several societies in the parish, has been keeping open house every Saturday evening in the parish house, to which all of the boys from Camp Wheeler are extended a cordial invitation, and to show their appreciation they are accepting these invitations and attending in large numbers. A liberal number of regular communicants from the parish attend these receptions, personally extending a cordial welcome to all the boys. Light refreshments are served. Singing and dancing are indulged in and a general good feeling prevails. Last Saturday night an unusually large number were present from the camp and in recognition of the Christmas season, the ladies had prepared and presented to each one of the boys some special present. The organist arranges and conducts every Sunday afternoon at 3.30 in the church an organ recital. Last Sunday night our regular services were dispensed with and a musical service of Christmas carols was substituted. This program consisted of traditional English and French carols. The boys at the camp showed their appreciation of all of these services by a very liberal attendance upon them all. It is hoped to keep these boys all closely in touch with the Church.

BISHOP KNIGHT and Mr. W. D. Cleveland of Houston, Texas, are representing the War Commission and making tours of all the camps in Texas this month.

MONTANA

Men's Club Organized—A forward step which gives promise of great helpfulness was recently taken in the parish of the Incarnation, Great Falls, under the leadership of the Rector, the Rev. G. G. Bennett, when, at a dinner given in the Y. M. C. A. building, there was organized a Churchmen's Club. The object of the club is to freely discuss from a sympathetic viewpoint questions of deep vital and religious import to men of the present day. The organization is to be open to all men who are sufficiently interested to be present at the monthly dinners, irrespective of their creeds. It is to be strictly a laymen's club, officered by laymen for laymen. At the first meeting a very able and interesting address was given by Judge E. K. Cheadle of Lewistown, in which he discussed the place of God and of religion in the community and in the lives of men. The following were elected as officers of the organization: President, Dr. Chas. V. Coulter; vice-president, Mr. E. G. Maclay; secretary, E. K. Lenzarder. Already about sixty men have signified their desire to become members of the club. And the interest which has thus far been manifested would seem to indicate that the enterprise is destined to become a useful institution in the parish and in the community.

Personals—The Rev. J. W. Hand entered upon his duties as rector of St. Paul's parish, Anaconda, on January 1.

The Rev. Ralph F. Bloaning has been appointed by the Bishop as missionary of the Mussellshell field, with residence at White Sulphur Springs, provided a house can be secured for his residence.

The Rev. Chas. F. Chapman of St. John's church, Butte, who has been in a sanitarium for the past three months, has returned to his home much improved in health, but is not yet strong enough to resume his arduous duties.

BALTIMORE

New Year's Day—The new year was auspiciously begun by the Churchmen of Baltimore, who, under the leadership of Bishop Murray, devoted the best hours of the day to religious exercises and special intercessions for divine courage and grace. Two great Corporate Communions were held, an early communion for men at Grace and St. Peter's church under the auspices of the Churchman's club and the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, attended by some five hundred laymen, and a later celebration for women, attended by about the same number, at St. Paul's church. The Bishop was the celebrant at both these and was attended by a large number of the clergy in their vestments. The day was marked by a serious earnestness in keeping with the trying times through which we are passing.

Dr. Dame Again a Chaplain—Great regret was felt when, upon his return from the Mexican border, the Rev. William Page Dame, D.D., found it necessary to resign his position as Chaplain of the Fifth Regiment, M. N. G., in order to attend to parochial affairs. Great satisfaction is now expressed at his appointment as Chaplain of the Second Regiment of Maryland State Guard now being recruited. He is peculiarly well suited for work amongst soldiers and his long experience in such work eminently qualifies him for his new position.

Prominent Churchmen Dead—The closing days of the year were marked by the departure of several prominent Maryland Churchmen. Rear Admiral John Schouler of Annapolis died on Christmas Day and was buried from historic St. Anne's church. He was a brother of the Rev. William Schouler and Dr. James Schouler of Johns Hopkins University, and a son of the late Gen. William Schouler. Dr. Charles W. Mitchell of Baltimore was one of the most eminent specialists in children's diseases in America and for a long time professor and dean of the University of Maryland. Dr. Charles F. Bevan was formerly dean of the College of Physicians and Surgeons and widely known and respected in Maryland.

Patriotic Service for Deaf Mutes—On the evening of Friday, December 28, the chapel of Grace and St. Peter's church, Baltimore, was filled with an enthusiastic congregation of deaf mutes, their children and friends, assembled for their annual Christmas festival.

Preceding the program of gift giving, an inspiring patriotic service, including the presentation and blessings of a beautiful silk standard, the united gift of the members and friends of the mission, was held. The vested choir of deaf mute women, followed by the rector of the church, the Rev. Romilly F. Humphries, and the minister in charge of the Mission, the Rev. Oliver J. Whildin, advanced up the aisle of the chapel singing in the sign language of the deaf "Onward, Christian Soldiers," after which a short service of evening prayer was held. Hymn 194 followed, during the singing of which the flag-bearer came slowly up the aisle, entered the chancel and stood at the Gospel side of the altar while the dedication prayers were said. Then came the placing of the flag, the pledge of allegiance, the salute and the singing of the "Star Spangled Banner" by choir and people synchronously in the silent language and orally. A most beautiful and soul-stirring address by the rector, interpreted into the sign language by Miss Olive Whildin, a daughter of the minister in charge, was made, after which all sang the Doxology.

It is proposed shortly to place in the chapel a service flag having a star for each one of the sons of deaf mute parents of Maryland who have been called to the colors, and it is known that the number of the stars will not be few.

PROVIDENCE

Celebrate Fall of Jerusalem—A service in celebration of the Christian recovery of Jerusalem was held at St. Stephen's church on Sunday afternoon, December 30, with procession of clergy, choir, and congregation round the church and festal Te Deum at the altar. The sermon was preached by the rector, the Rev. George McC. Fiske, D.D. The new organ, installed at a cost of $14,000, was used for the first time on Christmas day.

Pageant of the Nativity—A pageant of the Nativity was effectively given by the Sunday school of St. John's church, Providence, Rhode Island, on Sunday afternoon, December 23, in the parish church. The Sunday school choir was assisted by the church choir. Along the aisle stood white-robed candle-bearers. The rector, the Rev. John F. Scott, was narrator for the pageant and also made an address. Toward the close a Christmas tree blazed up with electric lights, and after the benediction gifts were distributed.

NEWARK

Almshouse Visitation—For forty years there has been a Newark Almshouse Committee of church women providing for service at the City Almshouse one Sunday each month and in Christmas week providing a feast for the inmates, now about three hundred in number. Miss Emma V. Gordon of Grace church, Newark, who died a few weeks ago, was the most active person in the society and a remarkable woman for her wide friendship and her fine spirit. Rev. Wynant Vanderpool has been the chaplain of the society. During these many years by the giving of small gifts a fund of $2,500 has been accumulated, and this year at the time of the dinner it was announced that the whole sum had been set apart with the diocesan trustees, the income to be used for the provision for the regular visitation by one of the clergy appointed by the bishop.

Diocesan House Maintenance—Mrs. DeCatur Sawyer, long president of the Woman's Auxiliary, recently deceased, left a bequest to the diocese of Newark of $2,000, the income to be used for the maintenance of the diocesan house of the future, in the meantime to be used for the provision of the rent of the offices for diocesan uses.

Cathedral Established—On the morning of New Year's day at the service of the Holy Communion, the bishops formally accepted Trinity church as the cathedral church of the diocese and an address was made by Bishop Stearly.

Personals—The Rev. C. W. Popham of Belleville has been given leave of absence to serve as an assistant Y. M. C. A. secretary at Camp Dix, taking the place of Rev. A. W. H. Thompson.

The Rev. Edgar L. Cook has leave of absence for six months from his parishes to be on the staff of St. George's chapel at Camp Dix with the Rev. Karl M. Block.

The acceptance of the rectorship of St. Paul's, Des Moines, Iowa, by the Rev. E. N. Owen after a very successful rectorship for nine years at Maplewood, is announced.

The Rev. Sidney E. Sweet has resigned the rectorship of St. Stephen's church, Jersey City, to accept that of St. Paul's, Columbus, Ohio. Nine years ago he found a small mission in a second story room, and he leaves a fine, large church with the first church a large parish house, with nine hundred communicants and seven hundred Sunday school pupils.

JOSEPH WILLIAMSON.

CHICAGO

A Beautiful Christmas Gift—During the Christmas season the Rev. Frederic Fleming, S.T.B., rector of the Church of the Atonement, received a letter signed, "A British Soldier", in which he mentioned the unusual joy brought to the world by the entry of the British troops into Jerusalem and Bethlehem on this Christmas, and adding that there was a peculiar joy to him in the fact that a regiment with which he was identified was among the British troops in that victory. In the letter was enclosed a generous check presented in memory of the above incident and in the name of his mother, with instructions for the purchase of a Processional Cross to be used in the parish church as a perpetual memorial of the various elements involved in the above incident. Special designs for the memorial are being prepared. All in all this Christmas was one of the most satisfactory in the history of the parish. There were three large congregations, beginning with the midnight Communion service, and the Christmas offering exceeded all previous records.

Christmas at St. Luke's, Evanston—The Rev. George Craig Stewart, D.D., the rector of St. Luke's church, Evanston, reports that the church was packed at the midnight service on Christmas Eve. Four hundred and thirty-four persons received the Holy Communion during the day. An "anonymous donor" presented the parish with a gift of $5,000 toward the new parish house. The offerings for the day were $3,800, making a grand total of $8,800, the Christmas gift of parishioners to the parish.

Chicago Schools to Help Crippled Soldiers—John D. Shoop, superintendent of Chicago schools, is formulating plans which provide for the utilization of the school buildings of Chicago as centres of instruction for crippled soldiers returning from European battlefields. Courses in arts and crafts particularly suited to crippled soldiers, in order that their lives may be made useful, are to be arranged. It also is planned to extend the social activities of the schools in order to provide healthful forms of entertainment for young persons and thereby tend to decrease delinquency, which seems to increase during war times, caused perhaps by the withdrawal from the sphere of home authority of fathers and older brothers.

Personals—The Rev. George Dudley Barr, after most efficient service for a year and a half at Senior Curate at St. Peter's church, Chicago, has been appointed by Bishop Anderson, as priest-in-charge of St. Ambrose's church, Chicago Heights, Illinois. Mr. Barr has accepted the appointment and will enter upon his new work on Sunday, January 13.

Sister Josephine, formerly missionary deaconess in the diocese of Quincy, and who has served as parish deaconess at Trinity church, Chicago, for the past two years, has resigned, and will enter a new sphere of labor early in the year.

The Rev. Norman O. Hutton, D.D., rector of St. Chrysostom's church, has accepted an appointment on the American Committee organized for the purpose of raising a contribution for the Endowment Fund of Keble college, the "War College of Oxford", and has begun the work of raising funds in this part of the country.

ALBERT EDWARD SELCER.

WYOMING

"Mother Cooper" at Work—The workers at St. Michael's Mission to the Arapahoes are rejoicing over the fact that they again have with them Mrs. B. S. Cooper of Philadelphia, whose services to the mission have been untiring. Mrs. Cooper's work has been from both within and without, for during the period that she has not been in actual residence at the mission working among the Indians there she has been traveling about interesting many people in the work and winning their assistance for it. Now Mrs. Cooper, or "Mother Cooper," as she has come to be called, is in charge of the workers in this most interesting and unique plan for the welfare of the Arapahoe. Since her return to Wyoming the teaching force has been reorganized, and the school has been graded. Each of the unit buildings now completed is full of enthusiastic Indian children under the competent supervision of skilled teachers and house mothers. The new staff of teachers is made up of some former workers in the mission and several newcomers. Miss Margary Downing is the principal of schools, and is grading the scholars, and also has charge of the older boys. Miss Bertha Adams is house mother in one unit building and has the work among the "A. B. C." boys.

Miss Cora Edwards is in charge of the kindergarten. The house mother of unit No. 2 is Miss Margaret Elliot, who also works amongst the older boys. The Misses Yarnell are teachers and house mother in unit No. 1. Miss Ethel George is on the teaching force. All of the teachers and scholars find a royal welcome in the Glebe House, where Mother Cooper resides, and which is the social centre of the mission.

Mr. Huston at Vocational Conference—The Rev. S. A. Huston, rector of St. Mark's church, Cheyenne, attended a conference of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, held in Washington, D. C., December 19, 1917. Mr. Huston went as the president of the State Board of Education in Wyoming, in the inability of State Commissioner Creager to attend. The meeting was called at the request of the adjutant-general for the co-operation of the federal board in outlining some plan by which the vast number of men called by draft may be trained along special lines to be of the greatest service to their country.

Gift—St. Andrew's church, Basin, has been presented with a handsome altar desk, the gift of Mrs. Guy Craig.

Debt Cleared—The energetic people of Rawlins surely must have enjoyed the Christmas season, in the consciousness of the fact that they had just cleared off the indebtedness on their new parish house and thus made the building ready for dedication, which will probably take place at no distant date.

Personal—The Rev. Rowland F. Philbrook, who is in charge of the work of Christ church, Glenrock, has been elected to the position of secretary of the Glenrock Commercial Club. LUCY M. TAYLOR.

LEXINGTON

A Christmas Box—The rector of Trinity church, Danville, the Rev. Henry P. Manning and his family, were the happy recipient of a most generous and comprehensive Christmas box, sent them by the Woman's Auxiliary of St. Paul's church, Duluth, Minn. The box, containing more than 150 articles of varying description both for the house and each of the three members of the family, reached Danville the Thursday before Christmas in plenty of time to add great joy on Christmas day, especially for the two-year-old member of the household. In the letter announcing the shipping of the box was a $30 check for the rector. The value of the box is certainly nothing less than $100. Too high praise cannot be given the Woman's Auxiliary of St. Paul's, Duluth, for its generosity, interest and Christian love. Arrangements for this box were made when the Rev. Mr. Manning was general missionary of the diocese of Lexington.

English Church News

Jerusalem—The Roman Catholics got ahead of us: within an hour and a half of the receipt of the news of the surrender of Jerusalem they were singing their Te Deum in Westminster Cathedral. Our own St. Paul's had theirs on the following afternoon. It was an expression of national gladness that it had been permitted by God that the British should have had the chief part in the deliverance of the Holy City from the Turk. It seems to be generally assumed that the deliverance is permanent, and that our Te Deum is not premature, like the bell-ringing over Cambrai. And we are all speculating on the future of Palestine. The Church Times warns us not to picture a Christian conquest of Jerusalem. It indicates that the most natural future for the country will be found in the rule of the enlightened Arabs: a Moslem government would be "just and necessary". The creation of a Jewish state would be the "substitution of one wrong for another".

Professor Burney of Oxford writes to the Times claiming that the Mosque of Omar on the ancient Temple site should be handed over to the Jews, a proposal which the Church Times describes as the worst suggestion of the kind. One might add that it is also a superfluous suggestion, as none of the Allies, and Britain least of all, could afford to offend the Mohammedan sentiment of the whole world by acting on it.

Dr. Henson Appointed to Hereford—It is easy to understand why Mr. Lloyd George has nominated Dr. Hensley Henson, dean of Durham, to the King for appointment to the vacant See of Hereford. From a certain point of view Dr. Henson comes well within the class of "efficients", which the Prime Minister has a way of discovering and of using in the national service. And a man of independent mind, fearless in his purposes, a brilliant preacher, and no mean scholar, is exactly the type which not only the statesman but the public generally desire to see occupying the highest post in the organization to which he belongs. Thus the Times asserts that "Dr. Henson represents a large body of Church people who rarely find their spokesman among the occupants of the Bishops' Bench". The newspaper further anticipates good results from his presence in the Southern Convocation: "he will bring to its deliberations a quality of statesmanship which must add to its influence in the Church at large". What is really interesting in this popular appreciation is that Hereford itself is forgotten. It exists only as a means to get Dr. Henson into greater publicity and influence in Convocation, and (when his turn comes for membership) in the House of Lords. That he will satisfy the public is doubtless true. That he is temperamentally fitted to be a father-in-God to an agricultural diocese is very doubtful. Some of his past acts, however conscientiously performed, are likely enough to give him trouble. He has on at least two occasions showed how it is possible to defy episcopal authority, and the lesson will not be lost on Hereford. There are many sore hearts in Hereford diocese today. They wanted a leader, not a brilliant and scholarly critic. Without the sympathy of his clergy he will accomplish as little in Hereford—whatever he may do in London—as his predecessor has done. It is open to him to try and win that confidence, if he can. If he can somehow catch the spirit of a much greater man than himself, Frederick Temple (whose appointment to Exeter, in the teeth of the opposition of the clergy, is recalled by the present circumstances), all may yet be well. But Temple was misunderstood: Dr. Henson is understood only too well.

The Future of the C. M. S.—From one point of view the recent trouble in the governing body of the Church Missionary Society is to be welcomed: all our missionary societies will have to set their house in order, with a view to the great opportunities after the War. On the whole, there is a very general feeling among Churchmen that societies which represent party sections ought to broaden their basis. That veteran Evangelical, whom everybody respects, Dr. Eugene Stock, claims that there is an advantage in having "men and women of one mind" in missionary work. He recently delivered a lecture on the history of the C. M. S. at Lambeth Palace, in which he very properly instanced the Universities Mission in Central Africa and the Oxford Mission to Calcutta as "signal examples of successful work on this principle". And there is no doubt that the High Church Missions are open to the same charge as is being brought against the C. M. S. They have always afforded a convenient means by which that section could in some degree do their missionary duty. And no doubt they would claim, just as Dr. Stock does, that the Bible and Prayer Book are their only standards. The C. M. S., he contends, has no creed of its own. But it is just here that the trouble comes in. Our mission fields are divided in the main between the two great societies, the S. P. G. and the C. M. S. The former has always been loyally content to be the Church of England without any party qualification. It has suffered for its loyalty, as enthusiasm is more easily kept going if people are, as Dr. Stock says, substantially of one mind. Meantime the Church of England is largely represented by the C. M. S. in the mission field. The other party societies are comparatively small, and are at least genuinely episcopal. But the C. M. S. not only practically imposes its party views on its agents, but has a way of moving them about, under orders from London, and often without reference to the wishes of the Bishop of the Missionary Diocese. It is not fair to the Church that a society should usurp its authority. The answer of the society would be that those who provide the funds are satisfied with its methods. But Dr. Stock himself has admitted that the Church has the remedy in its own hands. All subscribers of a certain amount are members of the General Committee. This has not, I think, been generally known. The C. M. S. has no written constitution, calling for party tests. So the remedy for the present state of affairs would seem to be a great increase of more liberally-minded subscribers, determined that the present narrow policy should be abandoned. JAMES CAIRNS.

Pipe Organ Given—St. Mary's church, this city, the Rev. Thomas L. Settle, minister in charge, has received through several of its communicants, the gift of a $1,200 pipe organ, equipped with electric blower. Mr. Pilcher, Louisville, Kentucky, maker and installer of the organ, worked night and day to have the organ ready for the Christmas service, when it would be used for the first time. It was in place and played the Sunday before Christmas. Mr. Pilcher's son was engaged as organist for that special Christmas service.

Clergyman Returns—The Rev. R. E. Abraham, rector of Holy Cross church, Brooklyn, New York, has notified Bishop Lewis W. Burton and the parishes involved of his acceptance of Paris, Cynthiana and Nicholasville. Rev. Mr. Abraham left St. Mary's, Middlesboro, this diocese, to go to Brooklyn in October, 1912, after faithfully serving that congregation for some seven years. A hearty welcome awaits Mr. Abraham upon his return.

Service for the Deaf—An interesting service was conducted recently by the Rev. B. R. Allabough, general missionary of the Mid-Western Deaf Mute mission, in the chapel of the state school for the deaf at Danville, Kentucky. The service was to have been held in Trinity church, but owing to poor light caused by damaged pipes, it had to be held in the school chapel. Good light is a very necessary element in a service for the deaf, where the eyes are used instead of the ears. This was Mr. Allabough's last service here, the reorganization of work among the deaf along provincial lines having removed the diocese of Lexington from his jurisdiction. The Rev. H. L. Tracy of Baton Rouge, Louisiana, is expected to succeed him here.

Dean's Health Improved—The Very Rev. R. K. Massie, D.D., dean of Christ Church cathedral, Lexington, Kentucky, who has been absent for some time owing to broken health, is now much improved and expected to return to his charge soon. Though it will be necessary for him to be careful, and go somewhat slowly for some time, yet he is assured that in time he will be well and strong.

HARRISBURG

New Building Opened—The new building at Natalie was formally opened for worship by Bishop Darlington on Sunday, December 23. He was assisted by the Rev. F. M. C. Bedell, rector of Trinity church, Shamokin, and the Rev. Frank R. Allison, minister in charge of Kulpmont, Natalie and Coal Run. A choir of twenty voices went there from Kulpmont in a huge sleigh. The Bishop made the address of the occasion. This building is one of several that have been built for use in the hard coal region. It is of wood and cost $650. This includes no furniture. It has a basement, finished, which will serve a good purpose in the way of a place for social gatherings. This is the only building constructed for the purposes of worship in the place. Natatie is a coal town exclusively. It is about two miles from Kulpmont and is accessible by wagon, sleigh, auto and chiefly by foot and walkers line. The building is known as St. Nathaniel's, Natalie.

NEW YORK

The Synod—With the improvement of the coal situation those who are planning the meeting of the Synod of the Second Province have taken courage, and are convinced that the sessions will be significant and valuable. The program has already been given considerable publicity in these columns, and the meetings will be reported by a staff correspondent in the next issue, so there is no need for me to comment here. Suffice it to say that a good deal of interest is being displayed in the informal and Hooveresque dinner in Synod House on the opening night, when New York Churchpeople will have an opportunity to meet the visiting delegates; that the special sessions have been planned with excellent speakers and programs; and that the women, although not organized in this province, are going to have several important conferences. The women of the Auxiliary provided at the time of the Albany Synod for the calling together of diocesan presidents and delegates at the time of any Synod. Miss Delafield has accordingly issued a call, and a meeting was planned at the deanery for eleven o'clock on Wednesday. The G. F. S. also are having a conference. Delegates from every diocese in the province are expected, in every case except one the diocesan president. These delegates are the guests of the G. F. S. in New York.

G. F. S. Fetes Sailors—Seventy-five sailors crowded into the G. F. S. Lodge on New Year's night and kept things so lively that the party was not over until midnight instead of at ten o'clock. The lodge always keeps open house on New Year's day. This year, at the request of the National League for Women's Service, fifty sailors were invited for the afternoon, and fifty for evening. But instead of coming as was expected, seventy-five poured in at about eight o'clock. "We were delighted with the behaviour of our girls", said one of the officers. "They did beautifully."

Help for Indian School—The Woman's Auxiliary two years ago undertook to raise $3,000 to build one of the units in the school which Bishop Thomas and Mr. Balcolm are planning to build among the Arapahoes of Wyoming. At their monthly meeting on January 3 the members of the Auxiliary had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Balcolm, on account of his unique work. The offering made at the meeting brought the amount in hand up to $1,000; efforts are now being made to complete the promised sum. New York women have actually sent Bishop Thomas a great deal more than the amount needed for the New York house, but these sums have not been designated and have not passed through the hands of the New York treasurer, and for that reason have not applied on this pledge.

Guild Procession—On Epiphany night the annual festival service of the Guild was held in Trinity church. The little girls of the Good Shepherd Guild and the tiny boys of St. Ambrose, the girls and women of St. Agnes', St. Ursula's, St. Mary's and St. Monica's Guilds, then the boys of Holy Cross and St. John The Evangelist's Guild, the men of the Men's Committee, and the women of the Missionary Society and the Auxiliary followed the choir, crucifer and banner-bearers in procession round the church, singing the Epiphany carols. The girls and women all wore veils. Each guild was designated by its banner.

St. George's, The Bronx—The Girls' Friendly Society of St. George's chapel, Bronx, presented to the chapel a beautiful red leather bound Nelson Bible with marginal readings, for the lectern. The new Bible was first used on New Year's Day.

Letters to the Editor

Bishop Jones and Reaction on the Church

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

A certain paragraph was omitted from my article, published in your Christmas number. I fully understand your editorial responsibility, and the excited state of public opinion; moreover, the recognized conservative bias of THE CHURCHMAN makes the suppression entirely natural. I submit, however, the right of the author to put her full views before her readers, and I trust that you will be willing to cite here the suppressed paragraph:

"All the time we fight Germany, we know if we are honest how much reason Germany has for despising our claim to a kinder and more just civilization than her own. We prefer our ways to hers—but we cannot pretend that we have advanced far in building our "rumoring city" of Brotherly Love—the name of Philadelphia remaining rather a satire than a promise. It is arguable, though the writer does not believe it, that the last man, the poorest man, has a fairer chance under the Kaiser than with us. Certainly many Germans are sure of the fact and the assurance is at the root of their stubborn loyalty. What use in self-deception? The standard for which we shall fight to the end is ragged—riddled with injustice, stained with cruelty."

By this paragraph I stand. It is needless to say that in speaking of Germany's claim to a kind and just civilization, I am not conceding that claim, and that I have in mind not her war policy but her domestic conditions. I distinctly state my own disbelief that the poor man has a better chance with her than with us. But I consider it of highest importance that we remember steadily that the German people believe these things, for their honest belief is the crisis of our power to live on fraternal terms with them—some day. That they can believe may be strange to us—but Humpty Dumpty in "Alice" could believe in impossible things before breakfast. The conviction that their "Kultur" stands not only for efficiency but for kindness at least toward fellow-countrymen, is, I am sure, deeply embedded in the minds of plain German folk.

Thank you in advance for printing the paragraph. And now let me say that this small matter sinks into insignificance in my mind beside the profound distress caused me by the action in regard to Bishop Jones. I do not write as a pacifist, but as a believer in this war.

The worst of the action of the committee is their assumption to represent the unanimous opinion of the Church. They need this assumption if they are not to renounce the dignity of the Free Church in the free State; but it is false to the core. A minority exists, small, perhaps, but passionately in earnest. I quote from two letters received this last week. The first is from a person of distinction in the Church, now busy with war-service in France:

'Really, I can't tell you what a horror this whole thing is to me and how everything seems to fail me. The Church . . . There are times when my soul loathes her, with her flaunting banners and her battle hymns. What has she been doing all these ages, that the doctrine of war has not long ago become incredible? I don't go to church very much and am seriously thinking of joining the Quakers. Of course, I don't want to, but I feel that I must put myself where I belong—and also I crave sympathy. This is a stupid war, a futile war, a nightmare of unreality. There is a great deal of sheer humbug about it, and those who are in earnest are incredibly blind."

The other letter is from a Deaconess: the friend of whom she speaks is a well-known social worker:

" . . . and I are deeply concerned this morning over the verdict about Bishop Jones. It seems incredible to us that the Church should be committed to what can be at most only the belief of a part of its membership. . . . is so hot that she is all for resigning at once and entirely. It would be cowardly to do nothing, yet of one thing I am convinced, and I think I am getting . . . to agree, and that is that to withdraw from the Church is not the way. It is no more the way today than it was in St. Catherine's time. And schism is no more Our Lord's way than was war. (I'm not sure you agree as to this latter.) We know that He never cut Himself off from the synagogue or from temple worship. It is so facile and so delightful to contemplate kicking over the traces and running free of all this impediment of conservatism. I'd love to do it—but, we need the Church—more today than ever. And we need a Church purified from within; we do NOT need more sects."

These two letters perhaps suffice to show a strong undercurrent of feeling among Church people. The writers are mature persons. But my chief anxiety, as a teacher, over the Bishop Jones situation is the evil reaction I know it will have on many young people. The troubled ferment of thought in the colleges and among young graduates is too little recognized; I am largely occupied in meeting it. My first correspondent is not alone in considering joining the Quakers. One of my girls, brought up faithfully in the Church, did it the other day, solemnly in her own mind renouncing her Baptismal vows, from sheer outraged pain over the tone of the New York pulpit. Others, one is trying to hold patient. This action makes the task more difficult, perhaps impossible.

The religious majority is doubtless enthusiastic for the war. But should the Church not do some shepherding of the minority whose patriotism, equally ardent, takes another form? Every minority expression helps those who, like myself, have a responsibility toward thinking youth. May we not hear more of them?

Alcohol and the War

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

The astounding statement made by Dr. Parks at the recent Convention of the Diocese of New York that "we must not put a law on our books which will deny stimulant to our boys when they need it. We must conserve those boys and not deny them that which nature needs, and their doctors demand they have," should not go unchallenged. We notice that Dr. Parks almost "swept the convention off its feet" by the force of his eloquence. With all due respect for "eloquence," the influence of the drug called alcohol upon the human system is not a matter of debate. The matter has been taken out of the hands of orators and put into the hands of careful scientific investigators and we are bound to respect their conclusions. The effect of opium or cocaine or alcohol upon the human system is a matter that has been decided in the experimental laboratory. And when the conclusions of the public speaker run counter to the assured conclusions of science, to whom shall we give our confidence?

During the past twenty-five years certain facts have been established, are taught in our schools, and are at the finger-tips of any one who takes the trouble to investigate. The first of these is that alcohol is a poison in either large or small quantities, and while some of its effects upon the human system are yet to be traced, sufficient information has been unearthed to take this question out of the realm of declamation into the sober and exact atmosphere of scientific conclusion.

Dr. Parks speaks of alcohol as a stimulant, whereas in its final effects it is to be classed among the narcotics and anesthetics; that's why when a man has a quarrel with his wife he goes to the saloon as a refuge to drug himself into insensibility!

Instead of increasing muscular activity and efficiency, its effect is just the contrary, and by the most careful experimentation it has been demonstrated that a bottle of wine a day will decrease muscular activity by eight per cent. and efficiency ten per cent. In addition the cumulative effect of moderate drinking of the same amount persisted in for thirteen days has been known to amount to a loss of power to add of forty per cent. and of power to memorize of seventy per cent.

The problem today is not merely one of the elimination of drunkards but of the banishment of moderate drinking; in other words no one familiar with what science has disclosed would be content to work for anything less than National prohibition.

Let me ask a question of the man who believes in moderate drinking but not in intemperance. Where do the drunkards come from? Are they not recruited from the ranks of the temperate drinkers; and do not the temperate drinkers support the saloons, and they in turn graduate the drunkard? The drunkard is the alumnus of the saloon, and the moderate drinker is the undergraduate.

I had thought that the ground work of correct information in regard to the effect of alcohol in moderate quantities upon the human system had been done, but it is evident that a great deal of patient labor must yet precede any intelligent understanding of what science has discovered and demonstrated.

I confess to a feeling of chagrin when I read that the great diocese of New York refused to go on record for total abstinence of the clergy for the duration of the war. It was a patriotic opportunity which does not often recur. One can not but feel the contrast (as a bishop of one of the southern dioceses pointed out the other day) between their action and that of the province of Sewanee where, without an adverse vote, the clergy of the Southern Church laid aside personal preferences and went on record as favoring total abstinence for themselves during the period of the war. One feels a distinct pride at such far-sighted and patriotic action. The country at the present time is wasting 60,000,000 bushels of barley in the brewing of beer. Mr. Hoover assures us that it would feed an army of six million men for a year to the extent of one load of bread per day. And surely the housewife saving the scraps and cutting the bread on the table may be justified in feeling irritation at this vast waste of our resources at such a crisis in history as this. The province of Sewanee has set an example of leadership to which the rest of the Church might profitably give sympathetic heed.

A Challenge on the Dearth of Clergy

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

Will you be kind enough to write an article for an early issue of your valued paper, stating the parishes and missions now vacant and in need of priests, together with the means in the hands of the parishes and bishops to support "resident priests"?

I have often read in church papers of the need of clergymen, but upon questioning some of the bishops, it is not men, but means, that are the chief need. An authorized and careful list of vacancies and men with required qualifications needed to fill them would be a valuable addition to THE CHURCHMAN. Why not have such a list rather than the pathetic advertisements of men who want "jobs" defining themselves "Catholic" or "Protestant," "High" or "Low," as the case may be?

Mr. Editor, I only ask for information. If it is lack of men and not of means, let us hear so from the bishops, or let him who asserts such to be the case name vacancies and bishops who, with vestries, can and will fill same. In this time of war and upset conditions, I believe men's hearts are sound, and the Church can have her demands filled if she will attend to her "business affairs" as honest business men must do. This she must do, if any improvement is to be made in filling your so-called "dearth of clergy" in the Church.

Help for Italy

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

Mrs. Whipple, the widow of the late Bishop of Minnesota, has been living for several years in Italy. When the Italians entered the War she devoted herself to the care of the sick and wounded Italian soldiers and their families. She has been devoting everything she has to this purpose. Now, when the need is greatest, she finds that she must have help from without or cripple her work.

I have known Mrs. Whipple for more than twenty years, and I can assure anyone who does not know about her how able and wise she is in all her benevolent undertakings. We all know what it means for the whole cause of the Allies to sustain Northern Italy in this bitter hour. Many of us, I am sure, have wished that we might know a sure way of helping. This is a real opportunity, and I shall be grateful to receive, acknowledge, and forward at once to Mrs. Whipple any gifts which are entrusted to me. (My address is 804 Broadway, New York.)

CHARLES LEWIS SLATTERY.

Grace church, New York.

Casa Bernardini
Bagni di Lucca-Villa-Italia
December 1, 1917.

My dear Doctor Slattery:

Into your busy days I shrink from thrusting concerns from over the sea, but for the first time in my life I am impelled to ask help. My story shall be as brief as possible.

You know the circumstances which brought me to Italy—the illness of my brother which kept me here for several years. When the war broke out, duty kept me here. From the grim day of that midsummer of 1914 when I consecrated myself to the cause, my one thought has been for the soldiers and their families. I began with England and Belgium, and then with Italy upon her entrance into the struggle. I did not go into the hospital work at Rome or Florence, where the numberless flocked to offer their services in the more stimulating asmosphere of town-life, but decided to remain in this little town of Bagni-di-Lucca, which includes many of the surrounding mountain villages, and where the people are brave, industrious, and patriotic, knowing that I could do far more useful work in direct contact with the people, employing them in work for the soldiers, while helping and encouraging them in other ways.

I have been employing a large band of the poor women whose husbands and sons are at the front in war-work. Of course the expense of heating, lighting, and stocking the workrooms has become a serious matter as prices of everything are more than double. Especially is this so with wool, which must be used constantly.

You will have read of Italy's setback, of which I need not speak. The refugees from the invaded places, like Corizia, have inundated us like a tidal wave, and the care of them is now added to the other burdens. They were obliged to flee in haste, and most of them are destitute of almost everything. Children in arms are constantly seen with nothing but a thin strip of old shawl to keep them from the biting cold. The difficulties of the food and fuel question; as of everything else, make the situation tragic. Shoes are now like rubies, but they are necessities in this climate.

Now I am helping to employ the refugees in my rooms, and work goes on at high pressure for the military hospitals in Lucca, at this moment. For example, within four days we have finished five hundred mattresses for the wounded soldiers who are being rushed in from the fields. In a case like that, however, the Government supplies the material, but I have to pay for the making and all else. Besides the hospital work, the women work steadily in knitting for the soldiers, and now I am trying to supply clothing for the refugees. Never was help so vitally needed. You understand that I am speaking of my especial undertaking. Of course, the Sindaco (the mayor) and Pro Patria are doing everything in their power, but they are overburdened, for in a country already reduced to extremities by the long war there is never enough. This will give you a faint idea of what I am trying t do. I hope that I do not seem to be blowin my own trumpet! Far from it, I fe insignificant indeed in this great sea o sorrow and want.

Now comes the raison d'être of my le ter. I know my countrymen well enoug to know that could they realize one-tent of these necessities, not one hand would b withheld. I am asking you, who kno something of my ways and sympathies, i you think that there may be some gre souls who would help one. If you shrin from asking this, in addition to the hom demands, you must not do it. If, on th other hand, you have tried and generou hearts upon whom you count in times stress, if you would echo my appeal fro this gallant Italy, now fighting at whi heat for honor and victory, it might brin me help for which my gratitude would b eternal.

Rose Cleveland and I are living togeth here, the other member of our household being Miss Ericksen, the writer of mar charming books on Italy. Miss Clevelan whose voice is a power among the people, all that you would expect her to be this time. Miss Ericksen is doing splend work in sustaining loyalty in the villag and factories of this province.

At home, while you had been admirin the almost superhuman accomplishment the Italian fighters in the fearful Alpi regions, I have been giving many of the their woolen outfits, and receiving lette from hundreds of them from the trench for the men of the mountain villages this Province of Lucca have had a not record for bravery and high courage, fro the beginning, many of them having r ceived medals. But after these years hardship and constant fighting, and the an iety of their suffering families, the brav hearts must droop if not sustained by e couragement and so much of that can done here. If I have to give up or cu tail any part of it, it will break my heart.

Gratefully and sincerely yours,

EVANGELINE WHIPPLE

Knitting

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

May I hand you herewith a clipping fr page 653 of your November 24 issue "Knitting" and quote from a letter Henry White, manager Potomac Divisi American Red Cross:

"Washington, November 21, 1917

"I cannot too strongly impress upon the Chapters of the Potomac Division t very urgent need which now exists f sweaters, and which far exceeds the su ply, even though the Red Cross has pu chased all that are available.

"I venture, therefore, to hope that many as possible of those who are go enough to devote their time to knitt may see their way to the production sweaters. By doing so they will be co tributing to the comfort and health of soldiers far more than by other forms knitting".

The "feverish play of needles" has p duced many articles of comfort and ben for our brave defenders. Why should y not direct an inquiry to Washington bef a pro-German-like attack is made up praiseworthy activities of knitters?

Shall the United States Turn Back to Sectionalism?

By THE RELIGIOUS WEEKLY PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION

ONLY WITHIN the last fifty years has the United States become a really united country.

Sectionalism well-nigh prevented the creation of a stable government after eight years of war had gained our freedom from overseas political control.

Sectionalism was largely responsible for the pitiable and almost fatal weaknesses in our second war for independence.

Sectionalism helped to bring about the only war in which our nation has engaged for which we feel any possible apology is necessary.

Sectionalism brought on a social and political crisis in which the issue had to be settled forever by the most terrible was ever waged on this continent.

Sectionalism, slowly dying, is responsible for many of the political evils and much of the wasteful and harmful legislation enacted by the federal Congress.

Sectionalism divided great religious denominations, and where it survives still divides them.

THE GREATEST FACTORS in overcoming sectionalism have been the development of transportation and the GENERAL distribution of good reading matter in the form of periodicals, read SIMULTANEOUSLY throughout America.

The newspapers, too, have helped greatly by the dissemination in their own limited fields, of information regarding the conditions, the happenings and the prevailing opinions in other sections.

But a newspaper, even with the best news service, must first of all deal with the affairs of its own community. Its editorial viewpoint is influenced by local considerations. Any one who confines his reading to a newspaper, three-fourths local in character, will not easily resist (even if so disposed) the provincializing influence of his environment. Every one should read a good newspaper, but no good national citizen can afford to STOP at that.

It is not enough, either, that a paper should be broad in character, when it is read only within a limited field.

It is the good publications consciously edited for the great mass of the population THROUGHOUT THE NATION that do most to unify our people.

The feeling on the part of the reader that people all over the country are reading WHAT HE IS READING has a powerful psychological effect in overcoming suspicion and prejudice, and it develops a sort of esprit de corps with relation to national responsibilities that is invaluable in our national life.

SOME SECULAR PUBLICATIONS of large national circulation have not a good influence. Some are actually bad. But there are many that the nation could ill afford to handicap or to destroy.

There is a considerable group of religious papers that, though not possessed of tremendous circulations, reach into the churches of their denominations THROUGHOUT THE UNION. They are the best possible agency for decreasing narrowness and sectionalism in the churches and preventing misunderstandings by creating a common intelligence. Already they have been most seriously affected by the great increase in cost of paper, printing and first-class postage.

Only a few national secular periodicals—possibly not over a score of them—make large profits for their owners. Practically no religious papers make private profits.

The tremendous development of periodicals provided for the public at modest cost has been made possible by the wisdom of the Congress in 1885 in making a nominal rate for the transmission of such publications through the mails. Truly national periodicals cannot be maintained on any other basis without a most difficult and dangerous readjustment in which the public will be chief sufferer. Through the development of large circulation and a moderate cost of distribution it has been made possible to furnish high class reading matter to the people at a charge FAR BELOW THE ACTUAL COST of providing the reading matter, the cost being met principally by advertising.

APPARENTLY with the main object of striking at a few secular publications that are presumed to be highly profitable, the United States Congress included in the war revenue bill passed last October a "zone system" of second-class postage that will practically DENATIONALIZE the periodicals of the country. Under this provision there seems no escape from the effect that the family in California that reads The Century Magazine, for example, will have to pay from 50 to 100 per cent more than the citizen of New York. The postage cost of providing The Churchman to a subscriber in California would be at least three times as great as that for the Ohio reader. This puts a penalty on nationalization.

It is not necessary to point out what this means. It is true than an exemption clause provides that OFFICIALLY OWNED religious papers and some others shall pay a less rate. But there are great churches that do not have and cannot have officially owned national religious weekly newspapers.

The whole provision had no place in a war revenue bill, and it was forced through only by threats of delay. The periodicals of the country are right now the most efficient, the most influential, and the cheapest medium for reaching the general public with inspiration to patriotic service and timely information needed to secure prompt action. The government could better afford to LOWER postage rates and facilitate distribution of this material than to handicap one of its best agencies in time of emergency.

IF THERE WAS any reason in 1885, and during the 32 years since that time, for carrying current periodicals at a nominal rate, THAT REASON STILL EXISTS. Even if government financial necessity dictated a change not required in normal times, the question has not been handled frankly. For example, free handling by the post office of newspapers within the county in which they are published, was still provided for in the revenue law, which is fair evidence that the Congressmen who sponsored this provision were not willing to apply their standards where political influences IN THEIR OWN DISTRICTS were affected.

However, the readers of these national periodicals are in EVERY DISTRICT. They are the ones who will suffer first; the nation as a whole eventually. The post office department reports a surplus this year. The religious periodicals and their publishers are subject to the general taxes that apply to all businesses. The dangerous zone system has no logical relation to war revenue. DON'T YOU THINK it is a mistake to deal a deadly blow to 800 or more religious publications, practically all non-profit-making and maintained for altruistic purposes, in order to collect more money from a dozen or more big secular magazines?

This section of the law does not begin to be effective until July 1. A bill to repeal it has already been introduced in the senate. WILL YOU NOT WRITE YOUR TWO SENATORS AND YOUR CONGRESSMAN a letter telling them you don't believe in the zone system and do believe in keeping the second-class postage requirements just as they were before this law was passed?

have been effected by any series of sermons, from every pulpit in the city, on church unity.

The failure of its purpose, however, reveals a fallacy in the method. Anyone who saw the advertisement knows that the copy was brilliantly written, and would pass muster with any advertising agency as good copy. The fallacy lay in advertising the shop that had the goods for sale instead of advertising the goods.

When clergymen and church governing boards get far enough away from the primary longing to fill their pews and treasury we shall have community and national preaching through not only the paid advertising pages of newspapers, but through those of the magazines, that will touch the minds and hearts of thousands of people who never get within sound of a clergyman's voice. The first example of this kind of advertising was that which appeared in the Times the day before Christmas. Ultimately there will be full pages, paid for by federated churches, crying out to the four winds of heaven, not the appeal to go to church, but the fundamental truths of religion and of the Gospel, as they should be applied to every-day life.

The society butterfly, luxuriously drowsy over the pages of her magazine of exceedingly light Summer fiction, and who has never known the meaning of an unselfish act, may be moved to think, and to think twice, as she turns the page, and is confronted suddenly not with fashions, but with religion—and religion put into words that drive home. The "down and out", searching for a job in a cast-off newspaper, may feel his loosening grip on things tighten some Winter morning as he reads the "good news" in a full-page advertisement, and arrives at the conclusion that those thousands of people who sign themselves "Federated Churches" may care for him after all.

What the effect of this kind of publicity will be on the man who thinks of the church as an archaic organization, saturated with superstition, a pernicious incumbrance to progress, is graphically revealed in the comment made by such a man after reading the advertisement in question. "If that is the sort of thing the church teaches," he said, "I am going to church."

But what makes this kind of advertising Christian is that the advertiser asks no "result" for himself or his particular church. He is satisfied with the privilege of presenting broadcast the Christian interpretation of life.

Some Recent Books

The Wanderers. By Mary Johnston. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin Company. 1917. Price $1.75.

A feminist novel, with an excellent theme but rather fantastic treatment—this is what Mary Johnston offers to the public in The Wanderers. In a series of nineteen chapters, each chapter a complete story in itself, yet all strung together on the single theme, the author works out the changing position of women through the ages of the world. The original dominance of women, those who bore children and by virtue of this distinction had the upper hand; their gradual relinquishment of the prerogatives of hunting, warring, traveling, to the men who were free from the care of the young; the eventual bartering of their rights in order to secure for their children the advantages of male succession and inheritance; dependence, slavery of mind and body; gradual reassertion of intellectual, economic, political equality—these are the subjects of the various episodes which pass in review like the episodes of a pageant. The chapters are unequal in interest and in the power to convince. The first three or four dealing with prehistoric times are exceptionally good. History receives in places rather fantastic treatment. The style, moreover, is a bit cubist. Why the author stops with the French Revolution is not altogether explicable. On the whole, however, The Wanderers is an interesting and sane treatment of a vital theme.

The Alaskan Churchman Calendar for 1918. May be procured for 50c. postpaid by addressing The Alaskan Churchman, Box 6, Haverford, Pennsylvania.

Again the attractive calendar published annually by The Alaskan Churchman is delighting old friends and new with twelve charming pictures of "The Great Country", its missions and its children. Those three bundles of fur in the first picture, the shy, smiling little girls and the still fatter boy sucking his thumb in bland unconcern, are enough to make anyone want to hang the calendar over his desk. The clear type, the conveniently labeled feasts and fasts, and the attractive pictures that follow, confirm the first impression; and the fact that the proceeds of the sales go toward the maintenance of the missions that produce the smiles and the air of comfort in those aforementioned bundles of fur makes the impulse to own a calendar before the limited edition is exhausted quite irresistible.

Medical Research and Human Welfare. By William Williams Keen, M.D., LL.D. New York: Houghton, Mifflin Compan 1917. Price, $1.25.

To Pasteur, Lister an others who wrought miracles for the ra Dr. Keen pays due tributes. The autho sees behind all medical advance the nob motive of serving human welfare. The boo is silent on drugless methods of treatin disease and emphasizes particularly the a vances of human welfare through bett surgery. at the Watch-night service. The G. F. S. also gave a priest's Prayer Book and hymnal to match the new Bible. It is the Society's intention to give the Altar Book at Easter. At the annual Sunday school Christmas tree the congregation of the chapel presented to its vicar, the Rev. L. A. D. Edelblute, a purse of $30 in gold. At the last meeting of the trustees of the mission it was decided to begin immediately the rebuilding of the window over the altar. In the new window frame will be placed a three-panel stained glass window. The subjects treated in the window will be St. George, St. Patrick and St. Andrew. The design is taken from the great window in Napier cathedral, New Zealand.

At St. Mark's in-the-Bouwerie—At St. Mark's in-the-Bouwerie last Sunday Dr. Guthrie delivered the first of a series of sermons on "The Greater Parables". The series bears the general title of "Right and Wrong Independence", and the sub-titles indicate that the sermons are intended to have definite bearing upon the present social, moral, and spiritual needs of the nation, the community and the individual.

Y. W. C. A. Drive—Four bands of soldier musicians from the national arms at Camp Upton, and a chorus of 300 girls of the Young Women's Christian Association and the Community Chorus, attired as Red Cross nurses, and in the colors of the allied nations, grouped to form the letters "Y. W. C. A.", gave a patriotic impetus to a mass meeting Sunday afternoon at the Hippodrome, in starting a week's campaign by the Y. W. C. A. to raise $1,750,000 for women's war work in France and Italy. A letter from President Wilson to Mrs. James S. Cushman, Chairman of the war work of the Y. W. C. A., was read.

Mr. Fosdick presided at the meeting. Dr. Karl Reiland of St. George's church delivered the invocation, and Bishop Greer pronounced the benediction. A number of interesting speeches were made, patriotic songs were sung, and the drive was launched with considerable enthusiasm.

During the week there have been talks on war activities at the Y. W. C. A. headquarters. Classes to enable young women to prepare for service are being held at the Ballard school. Among these are classes in citizenship, advertising, languages and salesmanship, all of which have had crowded attendance.

Death of Mrs. J. J. Smith—On Christmas morning died a well-known New York churchwoman, Mrs. John Jewel Smith. She was buried from her parish church, Zion and St. Timothy's. There and in her country parish, the church at West Park, New York, she was known for her devoted work, her deep interest, and her generous gifts. She and her husband, who died some years ago, were deeply interested in the Seamen's Church Institute, towards the support of which they both contributed generously.

What and Why is the Internal Bath?

By C. GILBERT PERCIVAL, M.D.

Though many articles have been written and much has been said recently about the Internal Bath, the fact remains that a great amount of ignorance and misunderstanding of this new system of Physical Hygiene still exists.

And inasmuch as it seems that Internal Bathing is even more essential to perfect health than External Bathing, I believe that everyone should know its origin, its purpose and its action beyond the possibility of a misunderstanding.

Its great popularity started at about the same time as did what are probably the most encouraging signs of recent times—I refer to the appeal for Optimism, Cheerfulness, Efficiency and those attributes which go with them and which, if steadily practiced, will make our race not only the despair of nations competitive to us in business, but establish us as a shining example to the rest of the world in our mode of living.

These new daily "Gospels," as it were, had as their inspiration the ever present unconquerable American Ambition, for it had been proven to the satisfaction of all real students of business that the most successful man is he who is sure of himself—who is optimistic, cheerful, and impresses the world with the fact that he is supremely confident always—for the world of business has every confidence in the man who has confidence in himself.

If our outlook is optimistic, and our confidence strong, it naturally follows that we inject enthusiasm, "ginger," and clear judgment into our work, and have a tremendous advantage over those who are at times more or less depressed, blue, and nervously fearful that their judgment may be wrong—who lack the confidence that comes with the right condition of mind and which counts so much for success.

Now the practice of Optimism and Confidence has made great strides in improving and advancing the general efficiency of the American, and if the mental attitude necessary to its accomplishment were easy to secure, complete success would be ours.

Unfortunately, however, our physical bodies have an influence on our mental attitude, and in this particular instance, because of a physical condition which is universal, these much-to-be-desired aids to success are impossible to consistently enjoy.

In other words, our trouble, to a great degree, is physical first and mental afterwards—this physical trouble is simple and very easily corrected. Yet it seriously affects our strength and energy, and if it is allowed to exist too long becomes chronic and then dangerous.

Nature is constantly demanding one thing of us, which, under our present mode of living and eating, it is impossible for us to give—that is, a constant care of our diet, and enough consistent physical work or exercise to eliminate all waste from the system.

If our work is confining, as it is in almost every instance, our systems cannot throw off the waste except according to our activity, and a clogging process immediately sets in.

This waste accumulates in the colon (lower intestine), and is more serious in its effect than you would think, because it is intensely poisonous, and the blood circulating through the colon absorbs these poisons, circulating them through the system and lowering our vitality generally.

That's the reason that biliousness and its kindred complaints make us ill "all over." It is also the reason that this waste, if permitted to remain a little too long, gives the destructive germs, which are always present in the blood, a chance to gain the upper hand, and we are not alone inefficient, but really ill—seriously sometimes, if there is a local weakness.

This accumulated waste has long been recognized as a menace, and Physicians, Physical Culturists, Dietitians, Osteopaths and others have been constantly laboring to perfect a method of removing it, and with partial and temporary success.

It remained, however, for a new, rational and perfectly natural process to finally and satisfactorily solve the problem of how to thoroughly eliminate this waste from the colon without strain or unnatural forcing—to keep it sweet and clean and healthy and keep us correspondingly bright and strong—clearing the blood of the poisons which made it and us sluggish and dull spirited, and making our entire organism work and act as Nature intended it should.

That process is Internal Bathing with warm water—and it now, by the way, has the endorsements of the most enlightened Physicians, Physical Culturists, Osteopaths, etc., who have tried it and seen its results.

Heretofore it has been our habit, when we have found, by disagreeable, and sometimes alarming symptoms, that this waste was getting much the better of us to repair to the drugshop and obtain relief through drugging.

This is partly effectual, but there are several vital reasons why it should not be our practice as compared with Internal Bathing.

Drugs force Nature instead of assisting her—Internal Bathing assists Nature and is just as simple and natural as washing one's hands.

Drugs, being taken through the stomach, sap the vitality of other functions before they reach the colon, which is not called for—Internal Bathing washes out the colon and reaches nothing else.

To keep the colon consistently clean drugs must be persisted in, and to be effective the doses must be increased. Internal Bathing is a consistent treatment, and need never be altered in any way to be continuously effective.

No less an authority than Professor Alonzo Clark, M.D., of the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons, says: All of our curative agents are poisons, and as a consequence every dose diminishes the patient's vitality.

It is rather remarkable to find, at what would seem so comparatively late a day, so great an improvement on the old methods of Internal Bathing, as this new process, for in a crude way it has, of course, been practiced for years.

It is probably no more surprising, however, than the tendency on the part of the Medical Profession to depart further and further from the custom of using drugs, and accomplish the same and better results by more natural means: causing less strain on the system and leaving no evil after effects.

Doubtless you, as well as all American men and women, are interested in knowing all that may be learned about keeping up to "concert pitch," and always feeling bright and confident.

This improved system of Internal Bathing is naturally a rather difficult subject to cover in detail in the public press, but there is a Physician who has made this his life's study and work, who has written an interesting book on the subject called "The What, The Why, The Way of the Internal Bath." This he will send on request to anyone addressing Charles A. Tyrrell, M.D., at 134 West 65th Street, New York, and mentioning that they read this in THE CHURCHMAN.

It is surprising how little is known by the average person on this subject, which has so great an influence on the general health and spirits.

My personal experience and my observation make me very enjoyable on Internal Bathing, for I have seen its results in sickness as well as in health, and I firmly believe that everybody owes it to himself, if only for the information available, to read this little book by an authority on the subject.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

The Rev. Guy Emery Shipler, our managing and news editor, brought to "The Churchman", when he joined the staff in September, valuable experience in daily journalism. Before he was ordained he spent six years in daily newspaper work in Rochester, Buffalo, Boston and St. Louis. His article, "New Publicity for Christianity", is in substance an address made before the New York Churchman's Association at their meeting in December.

The Very Rev. Howard C. Robbins, D.D. preached a sermon early in Advent to the members of the Woman's Auxiliary in his former parish, the Church of the Incarnation, New York, which has so wide a message that the Church Missions House is planning to print it in pamphlet form for distribution through the country. "The Churchman" is glad to be able to offer this sermon to its readers in the present issue.

The Rev. Wallace E. Rollins, D.D., Professor of Church History in the Virginia Theological Seminary, delivered the sermon entitled "The Significance of Jerusalem in World History", which we publish in this issue, in the Bethlehem Chapel of the Holy Nativity, Washington Cathedral, on the Fourth Sunday in Advent at a special service of prayer and thanksgiving for the recovery of Jerusalem.

D. H. Allen is a new contributor whom we welcome to our columns. She is a Philadelphia Churchwoman.

The Rev. Paul Roberts has been a missionary in South Dakota since his ordination in 1912. He is now in charge of the work in the college town of Brookings. In sending the article on the problem of the missionary in a small college town for which "The Churchman" asked him in order to present this matter to our readers, Mr. Roberts writes: "The greatest hardship, perhaps, to be faced here is such a big work to be done and so little of equipment with which to do it. I have not mentioned the fact in the paper that we are now building a church to meet the situation. We have it started, but we are still badly in need of help to equip it with pews and other furniture. I did not want to make the article an appeal, but merely wished to use Brookings as an illustration of what is true in a good many places. I know of a college with over 5,000 students that has not even a resident minister, though he comes to the town every Sunday."

Mabel Eleanor Stone is Fellow in Religious Education in the diocese of New York. She is studying at Columbia University and Union Seminary, and is doing as her field work religious work among the young women in the University who belong to the Episcopal Church. Before taking up this work Miss Stone was engaged in Y. W. C. A. activities. Miss Stone's work among students is only a part of the student work that is being done in the diocese of New York.

The Rev. James Empringham, S.T.D., is the general superintendent of the Church Temperance Society.

CLERICA'S FIRST MEETING HELD IN WORCESTER

A new and interesting organization of clergymen's wives of the diocese of Western Massachusetts was formed at the time of the Diocesan Convention held at Christ's church, Fitchburg, last May. The first meeting of the "Clerica" took place this Fall, when Mrs. Lewis C. Morris of All Saints' church, Worcester, invited the members of her parish for the festival of All Saints. The guests were entertained by women of the parish overnight. Tea was served at the parish house on their arrival. In the evening the festival service was attended. A program on household economics was given next morning and lunch was served. The purpose of the organization is to foster a spirit of friendship among the wives of the clergy and to give them an opportunity for being mutually helpful.

laws. If we do that in any deeply sincere way we shall learn the attitude which becomes us as carriers of the Gospel. We cannot go in any loftiness, in any consciousness of superiority, in any Pharisaical pride. What have we to be proud of? We must go humbly to those who have not yet known Christ, and ask them to look, not upon us, but upon Him. We go to preach, not ourselves, but Christ crucified. All the sins of Christendom have been committed in spite of what He has said to us. Disobedience of Him has had exactly the consequences which he foretold. He told us that to hear His words, and assent to them and then not do them, is perdition. We have built our western civilization upon the sands of worldly interests and ambitions, and the rain has descended, and the floods have risen, and the winds have blown, and it has fallen, and great has been its fall.

This brings us to the new hopes and new incentives. When penitence is real, and when it is thorough-going, it softens and opens the heart to the divine grace. God can use the penitents for the bringing in of His kingdom. He can use them because they let Him use them; they do not oppose to His will and purpose the obstacles of their self-sufficiency and pride. It is a new world which will confront us after the war. It will be open as never before to new influences. Men and women will no longer be hide-bound by old traditions. They will be willing to try things which they have never really tried before, but only talked of trying. Young men will be coming back from the War, steeled to a determination from which all things will be possible if the Church of Christ makes itself ready for them, ready to use them, ready to use for Christ their stern young realism, with its scorn of compromise, of temporizing measures, and of all conventional and artificial things.

Then will come, I think, the greatest opportunity for Christian missions that the Church has known since the Day of Pentecost. We ought to be making ready for it. We ought to be making large preparation for it. When our soldiers come home to us let it be to a Church which has found itself at last, which is pulsing with generous life, which is glowing with the spirit of the earliest missionary ages, the belief that this world belongs to the Blessed One who died for it, and that by the faithfulness of His disciples it shall be won and given back to Him.

THE CHURCHMAN

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JANUARY 19, 1918

WHO shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? * * * Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus, our Lord

THE WAR AND THE CHURCH

TO ARMS! (La Veillée des Armes)

Translated from the French of Marcelle Tinayre by Lucy H. Humphrey. Introduction by Dr. John Finley. In French it has reached its forty-eighth edition. Net, $1.50

Dr. Finley says of this inspired book in closing his Introduction: "As one passes from the early chapters of this book with their petty homely incidents and their simple dialogue to the later chapters, sees all France moved by tenderness and brought suddenly into one great family, sees 'selfishness melted in the pure flame of universal sacrifice,' one can hardly regret, despite the bloody cost and the tragic folly of war, that France was called to this Veillée des Armes in a cause that exalts every defender."

MARCHING ON TANGA

The Perils and Beauties of Campaigning in Africa

Already in its Third Edition in England. By Captain Francis Brett Young. Net, $1.50

The story of a British Campaign in German East Africa bringing out with equal vividness the wonders of the African tropics and the unique character of the extraordinary military undertaking.

Westminster Gazette:—"It is hard to recall any book about this war of a quality at once so imaginative and so real."

Everyman:—"A magical book."

The Globe:—"It could not have been done better."

The Scotsman:—"As engrossing as any romance."

A CRUSADER OF FRANCE

Translated from the French of Captain Ferdinand Belmont. Introduction by Henry Bordeaux. Net, $1.50

Miss Katharine Lee Bates in a letter to the publisher says: "I have read every word of 'A Crusader of France,' moved to the depths of my soul by its poignant spiritual beauty. It gives, too, the clearest picture of actual war conditions, day after day and week after week and month after month, that I have ever seen."

THE LOST NAVAL PAPERS

By Bennet Copplestone. Net, $1.50

London Punch says:—"Mr. Copplestone has shown unusual boldness in connecting the activities of his super-policeman, Dawson, with the more prominent events of the War. We earnestly desire that he should devote another volume—a whole one—to the inimitable Madame Guilbert; but whatever he writes about will be welcome, provided it be written in the vein of the volume before us."

UNDER FIRE

THE GREATEST OF ALL WAR BOOKS

By Henri Barbusse. Net, $1.50

The Brooklyn Daily Eagle says:—"It is a terrible and a beautiful book. It is terrible because it is so patently true—and to tell the truth of this war from the soldier's point of view is to recount the terrible. It is beautiful also because it is true—true to humanity and human nature, unswerving, unbiased, unemotional, honest and sympathetic. It aims to plead no cause, to point no moral. But it does both. And it is beautiful because it is beautifully written."

George Bernard Donlin in the Dial says: "'Under Fire' is like a panorama which must be taken in at a sweep; its impressive bigness depends upon the cumulative effect of a host of small impressions. To review such a book is obviously impossible; one can only recommend it. It is the sort of book which everyone who wants to know what war is actually like will have to read for himself."

The Bellman says:—"This book, if one may risk a sweeping generalization, is the most notable contribution to the enduring literature of humanity Under Fire that has appeared since Tolstoy's 'Sevastopol'."

A STUDENT IN ARMS

By Donald Hankey. First and Second Series. Each Net, $1.50

Current Opinion says:—"One of the outstanding books of the War Is 'A Student in Arms.' It has its own peculiar quality—a blend of realism and tenderness—and it penetrates the soldier's nature with touching fidelity."

Chicago Post:—"As a descriptive writer the author 'puts it across' in an unusually effective manner. More than most of the war books which have come to us this one is to be read and re-read."

BOYD CABLE'S WAR BOOKS

Books That Make An Epic of Battle and Heroic Deeds Each Net, $1.50

Punch says:—"Boyd Cable is already one of the prose laureates of the war. No one can describe more vividly the fierce confusion of trench fighting."

GRAPES OF WRATH Based on the fighting of the great Somme battle, it tells what four chums in an infantry company, one of them a Kentuckian, saw and did. A vivid and thrilling narrative.

ACTION FRONT "Before one has finished the first story he is right in the thick of fighting, and there is no laying down the book until the last of these wonderful stories has been read and enjoyed."—Phila. Press.

BETWEEN THE LINES "Every line is readable and at the same time convincing. Every aspect of war as it involves the individual is seen here in clear outline."—Times Picayune.

THE COMING DEMOCRACY

By Hermann Fernau, Author of "Because I Am a German." Net, $2.00.

Springfield Republican (in a review filling a whole page):—"The book forms an almost perfect sequel to President Wilson's demand that the German people find some means of expressing its will so that its word may be guarantee of things to endure."

WHAT YOUR GOVERNMENT DOES FOR YOU

By Alissa Franc. Net, $1.50.

Telling every man, woman and child within its protection about the American Government, as it operates to-day. How the government helps each one, how each one can help the government.

MAN'S SUPREME INHERITANCE

By F. Matthias Alexander. Introduction by Professor John Dewey. Net, $1.50

The Failure of Civilization and the Crisis of 1914, the Universal decision for reconstruction and readjustment calls for causes and a solution. The author puts forward a convincing and original thesis which gives at once the causes and the solution. He demonstrates a practical and tested system of conscious guidance and control of the human organism and of human conduct which meets all the demands of an advancing civilization.

ON THE THRESHOLD OF THE UNSEEN

By Sir William F. Barrett. Introduction by James H. Hyslop. Net, $2.50

James H. Hyslop says in his introduction. "It is the best work of the kind that has ever appeared in English. Every aspect and difficulty of the subject is canvassed and evidence produced for the claims made in the book." New American Edition.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

OSWEGO PARISH SERVES MEN AT FORT ONTARIO

OSWEGO, NEW YORK.—During the past Fall and Winter Christ church, Oswego, has been doing a great deal for the men at Fort Ontario. For several months there were nearly 800 men at the post under the command of Col. Thomason, a devout Churchman. The Rev. Dr. Gesner, rector of Christ church, speedily inaugurated a series of receptions for the men at the parish house, at which several hundred were present as well as many parishioners. Dr. Gesner visited the men in their tents at the fort and there was a large attendance of officers and men at the parish church on Sundays. The men at the post call Oswego the "White City" because of the fine treatment accorded the boys in khaki. The rector opened the parish house for the use of the men and they were invited to the dances and entertainments given by parish societies.

Although there are only about 300 men now left at the fort, which has become General Hospital No. 5, the men who remain have made many friends and at Christmas time the homes of the city were freely opened to the boys, whose Christmas would otherwise have been a lonely one.

SOME WAR BOOKS

GERMANY'S ANNEXATIONIST AIMS. By S. Grumbach. Translated by J. Ellis Barker. New York: E. P. Dutton & Company. $1.50 net.

At last the long-looked-for English version of this important work is at hand. If Messrs. Lenine, Trotzky & Co., Dealers in Political Junk and Social Tommy-rot, had chanced out of the profound depths of their Bolshevist misinformation to have discovered this book, they might have saved themselves much perspiration from their recent bumpings and shoutings for the delectation of the German Junkers.

Unless yes means no, and gold means brass, and patriot means traitor, and Theodore Roosevelt means La Follette, and everything in speech is turned topsy-turvy like the happenings of Alice in Wonderland, the official records herein contained prove that the German aim in originating this war was and is the earth if they can get it, and if not, as much of it as they can possibly steal.

The original documentary work of Herr Grumbach, Das Annexionistche Deutschland, was too voluminous for popular reading. Mr. Barker has wisely condensed the contents of 500 pages into 150, retaining, however, the most essential documents. His volume is of great interest and of great value. It is unanswerable, and will take its place on the same shelf with William Archer's Gems of German Thought and Dr. Bangs' Hurrah and Hallelujah and Mr. Thayer's Out of Their Own Mouths and others whose outgivings will tend to make Germany an outcast nation for the next fifty years. G. T. D.

HOW TO LIVE AT THE FRONT. By Hector MacQuarrie, B.A. (Cantab), Second Lieutenant, R.F.A. J. B. Lippincott Company. Philadelphia. 1917. Price, $1.25 net.

These tips for American soldiers from an English comrade-in-arms are manly, realistic and practical. Lieutenant McQuarrie speaks from experience in the camps and trenches of Europe and in a training camp in the United States.

He hits right out from the shoulder about things not noted in military text books nor in the literary accounts of staff reporters. He wants to help every comrade to be a better soldier and a better man, but he does not lecture or preach. He is not a "goody goody". He just talks along with a dash of humor, abundance of common sense, and with a knowledge of men that makes his book convincing whether he is reminding the soldier to take an extra shirt with him in route to camp or describing one's first night in the trenches. He frankly admits the things that he and every other Tommy Atkins has had to learn or unlearn, and gives some straight tips to the American soldier about discipline and fitting into the machine, about trench life, about understanding the English and French soldier, and finally about the folks at home, and "a curse of war", in which he gives in his own delicately refined but thoroughly manly way a warning that will go home to every reader. This is a book for every American soldier and his mother whose love follows him into the war world of great possibilities for making or unmaking manhood. A. L. M.

The Churchman

SATURDAY - JANUARY 19 - 1918

IF the people of this country have any question or suspicion that we have entered upon an unnecessary or unrighteous war, we are indeed in a sorry plight. We have staked our all with everything to lose and perhaps nothing, not even an acre of land or a German thaler, to win.

We, the people of the United States of America, are sure that we have entered upon a war in behalf of righteousness and humanity. The very fact that we have not an acre or a thaler to gain is our strength. It may seem foolish for a nation to waste thousands of the noblest lives and billions of treasure for an ideal. We are, however, going to do it, and with our eyes open. Idealism is still a dominant power with us—thank God!

As Mr. Fulton Cutting pointed out in THE CHURCHMAN two weeks ago, thrice in the past twenty years this people have deliberately withheld their hands from conquests which were theirs by right of war and all the traditions of history. The liberation of Cuba, the return to China of her war indemnity and the upbuilding of a civilization in the Philippines are tokens of our idealistic spirit. Sins we have—shortcomings and weaknesses too; and we may well repent of them.

When, however, we as a people respond to the challenge for a crusade against brutality, dishonor and inhumanity, we may buckle on our armor and tighten our belts in the firm confidence that we are right, and enter the battle with the serenity and cheer of the warriors of the Faith.

IN such a war, where will the Church be? Will she stand aside and, because she has soldiers on both sides, watch the battle in sad neutrality? Will she keep to the rear and say nothing, lest she be accused of encouraging violence and of violating the principles of the King of Peace? There can be no peace while brutality and injustice stalk the world. Hence, the Church will be at the front, on the battle line. And she is.

We mistake when we think of the clergy as the Church. The men who form our army, men from Christian homes and parish churches, men baptized in the Faith of Christ and living in the power of Christ, officers and men in the ranks, admirals and sailors, they represent the Church and the power of spiritual forces. Kindled with the love of righteousness, pitying with the pity of Christ, the tens of thousands suffering and starving under an iron hand, they count nothing too dear to give that these people may be redeemed. Even though there were no chaplains, nor service, nor altar in all the camps, they are still the forces of the Church. Christ is within them.

Is it, however, fair to them that they, when in the stress of cold and privation, of trench and sickness, of wounds and death, should be cut off from the ministrations of the Church, the spiritual supports and forces which have built up their characters and have sent them forth? Have we who remain at home a right to monopolize the services of the Church and not give them what we enjoy? Shall we gather at the Lord's Table on Christmas and Easter and say to our brothers and husbands in France: "You shall have none of this"?

THE Nation has partially answered the question in sending out army and navy chaplains; the people have sent forth the Young Men's Christian Association. Both are doing noble work. The Y. M. C. A. is a laymen's organization. When death comes into our homes do we send for a Y. M. C. A. secretary or for a minister of the Church? The number of commissioned chaplains is at present entirely inadequate, and even for those that are in service the Nation gives no equipment. Hence the call for strong men in Holy Orders to supplement, as far as military discipline allows, the work of the chaplains.

A thousand hearts at home may be yearning to do something for the moral and spiritual help of a thousand boys at the front. A thousand boys may be yearning for the reinforcement of their characters by the forces of their homes. Through a central organization the Church may gather these forces and influences, and be the means of connecting those at home with those in the trenches, through the personal touch and word of the chaplains, through the spoken message or the silent subtle influences which pass across the world in the common fellowship of faith and the Communion of the Church.

The War Commission of the Church is the agency through which many of these spiritual forces may be brought into service. Its plans for work, its work already accomplished, justify its call for $500,000. The Church has her definite, big and spiritual duty to her boys and men. It is religious, it is patriotic; for every ounce of spiritual power which possesses a young man, making him pure, true and righteous, adds to his fighting power. He is a better soldier because he is a better man.

WILLIAM LAWRENCE.

Endurance

THERE are people who think that it is more Christian to pray for peace than for victory. While they desire with all their hearts victory for their country's arms, yet they somehow feel that victory over one's enemies is a carnal desire that ought not to be talked about in church and upon one's knees. Though we are struggling with might and main to win the war, God must not be told that we want to win it. He would, some of us think, have us talk only of peace, and when we pray for peace, any kind of peace, we feel that we are on sure Christian ground; consequently, if we talk about victory at all in our churches, we do so timidly.

There is something wrong about that kind of half-hearted prayer; it comes from a divided heart. If the German feels that his war is a righteous war, he is right in asking God, wholeheartedly, unreservedly, for victory. If America believes that her war with Germany is a righteous war, she ought to be asking God wholeheartedly for victory. It were a sin to be fighting, unless one feels that victory is a thing worth fighting for. For, if we believe that we are fighting for a right cause, our prayer for victory merely reiterates our wish that the right may prevail. No such prayer, in fact, no reverent prayer, presumes to dispute God's right to give or withhold the good we ask; nor does it affirm belief in the infallibility of our judgment of what is best for us.

But why review these elementary facts concerning prayer? We do so because the pacifist's interpretation of Christianity has more or less confused our thinking when the subject of war is brought into our prayers. There are apparently no more pacifists in America. We do not mean that they have been suppressed; but they have overhauled their definitions. None of them any longer believes that it is better to submit passively to evil forces. In America our pacifists have acknowledged that our cause is just, and that if war is ever to end we must fight against militarism. That conviction brings the pacifist into the common camp—apparently. If logic controlled human impulses, you couldn't tell a pacifist now from the rest of us who hate war but are willing to fight to the death for victory. But logic does not control human affairs, and the pacifist is not as converted as his acquiescence would imply. Though no longer a pacifist in word or deed, his prayers are often the prayers of a pacifist. He is afraid to pray for victory. His heart is in the prayer for peace, not peace as another name for victory, but almost any peace that will stop pain and death and all the things that make war hurt. If that is the extent of the pacifist's conversion, he is not converted at all, and the ardor which he is likely to show will not be a large asset for winning the war. In the stern days of discouragement that lie ahead, our Valley Forge days, he is likely to be a dangerous element to reckon with.

A prayer for peace may not be a Christian prayer at all; it may be the deserter's prayer. "He that endureth to the end shall be saved." Have we the courage to endure to the end? There are multitudes of people all around us who will fight for the right, but they will not fight long and hard. At some point, they cry quits and give up. These men pray timidly: "I want to win. I want to come through clean and true, but don't let it cost me too much." Hardly have they taken up arms against temptation before they begin to pray for rest. There is nothing admirable in such prayers. They are not Christian. They do not breathe the endurance of the Cross.

Some of our prayers for peace need to be rewritten in the spirit of St. Paul. They are timid and lukewarm. They lack the ardor of energetic consecration. The very things that loom so large in some people's minds—hardship, starvation and death—are the infirmities in which a Christian glories. In all these things he is more than conqueror. Endurance is the measure of a Christian's loyalty.

If this War is right at all, praying for peace for the sake of peace is cowardly. When Germany threw down the gauntlet to the world, peace would have been a shameful disloyalty to Christ. It would have lacked every element of chivalry and kindness. If that was true of peace three years ago, it is true of a German peace today. If the War was right at the start, some kinds of peace are dastardly wrong now. Most of us are perfectly clear in our minds about the righteousness of this War, but the pacifist doubt is still in the heart of some Americans. As a release from further sacrifice, they are grasping at every peace straw.

Nothing sublime that the race treasures has ever been won in that timid way. You cannot give your all to Christ and then begin to count the cost. A consecration that calculates limits God's power to bless. The world's finest work has been wrought with a lavish hand. Brave men do not ask to be spared; they ask only for victory. The price of that victory is God's concern, not ours. Let us dare to pray for victory.

THE $500,000 asked for by the War Commission is for the general war work of the Church, such as the equipment of all Church chaplains, the work overseas, and the re-enforcement of war work in the dioceses where the camp responsibilities are so great and the financial limitations so keen that the diocese is compelled to turn to the Commission for help.

Stronger dioceses will, of course, carry their own war work and give generously to the half million. Dioceses with comparatively little war work of their own will be able and glad to give the more in order to compensate for those that are heavily burdened.

The War Commission.

Prayers for Victory

IF there has ever been a war when Christians had spiritual right to pray wholeheartedly, unreservedly for victory, it is the War that America is waging against Prussia. Early in the War a German general affirmed that the War would be a contest of nerves. The event is likely to justify the prophecy. Two antagonistic biological species are in deathly grapple for the mastery. Prussia's God is not our God. His faith is not our faith. This is not a question of toleration. We can't divide the world between Prussia's God and Christ. One will succumb. Prussia's creed is clear to the world. For fifty feverish years it has inspired her national development and expansion. It has waged three successful wars; it is waging the fourth for world dominion. Prussia's wars have paid. It is hard to relinguish sins that pay. Prussia must know failure. She must be taught failure at the hands of those that hate war. Her conversion will not be hastened by letting fall in her lap the fruits of easy victory. It is kindness to the war-ridden people to let them suffer retribution for the sins of their rulers. This is not the doctrine of hatred; it is the Christian doctrine of love.

Prussia's creed is as obvious as the nose on one's face. She teaches it in her journals, in her diplomacy and schools. Her ministers preach it, her universities defend it, and her arms enforce it. It bears not one atom of resemblance to the Gospel of Christ. It is cruel, sly, covetous and materialistic. It believes in force, not in kindness; exalts egotism, not humility. It teachers the extinction of the weak; not the law of mercy.

For fifty years Prussia has presented a clear-cut picture of this lupine species that must either destroy or be destroyed. If Prussia cannot be converted she must be made helpless. The race must not forever be imperilled by a wolf foraging in Europe. It is a biological anachronism.

Prussianism and Christianity are mutually exclusive creeds; one or the other must go under. Music, literature, scientific achievements count for nothing when weighed in the balance with values sacred to every freeman, and very Christian. Christianity at the beginning cast her ot with the man of chivalrous heart. Our faith tells us hat Christ will win, but faith in victory presupposes en- lurance in the fighters.

The finest, the bravest deed we can do is to fight—fight n to the end with all the strength of our bodies, our minds and souls. To be good soldiers we must be single- minded. We can't be longing for peace for peace's sake nd still have our wills steeled for victory. If ever a Christian had a right to pray for victory he has that right n America today. Such prayer must be made in humil- ty and penitence, but contrition need not abate our nergy or weaken our determination. We will not turn he world over to Prussia. If America shows Christian esolution we may rest confident that Christ will not exact ur sacrifice in vain.

In the last war messages of Mr. Lloyd George and our President there flashed before us the vision of a better, indlier world—a world that even in the waste and agony f war is taking a giant stride forward with Christ. Let he faint-hearted, who dare not trust Christ when He sked hard, brave deeds of them, lift their eyes to that ision growing brighter every day. Even in war, Christ s preaching peace to them that are far off and to them hat are nigh. God speed the day of victory for the boys who are willing to die in the glory and strength of youth nat this earth may be a better place for the children of nen.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

Massachusetts and the Coal Famine

AS we go to press, word comes that Bishop Lawrence has sent a letter to his diocese urging co-operation of eighboring churches of different Communions for the aving of coal. The letter will be published in full in ur next issue.

The Synod in New York

THE coal famine of course has nothing to do with the constitution of synods, but somehow the unavoid- bly zero atmosphere of Synod House was very charac- eristic of the temper of the gathering. The delegates at bundled up in their overcoats and listened to brilliant ddresses. The elements of pedagogy teach us not to tir a child's enthusiasm without providing an outlet in ppropriate action. The synod as constituted at present rovides no such outlet. It is a waste of time for busy hen whether lay or clerical to travel several hundred iles to listen to addresses which they can read at home n the Church papers. All of which emphasizes the im- ortance of giving careful attention to the report of the ommittee on enlarging the legislative powers of the rovince as embodied in the Rev. Dr. White's careful ddress which will appear in an early number of THE CHURCHMAN.

We couldn't help contrasting the Student Volunteer onference in Northfield just held, when the privilege f sending a delegate was made by those who managed he meetings so coveted a thing that students were crambling for the opportunity to go. Many a college as told it could send one delegate only, and then two ays before the meeting received a telegram "Room for ve", and the four "extras" boasted "We have been tele- raphed for". That past master of conferences, John . Mott, managed his program as the course of events d him to think best. Each speaker was called on when he psychological moment arrived. Everyone was on the ui vive all the time.

The Worth of a Mission

WE hope that all of our readers will read Bishop John- son's admirable article in this issue: "What Is It Worth?" The communicant trained in the obscure little Missouri mission and now somewhere in France gives as eloquent testimony as any we have read of the worth of a little mission.

"Our religious opportunities here are of a very unsat- isfactory sort. . . . My thoughts often go back to the little mission at ———, and I have asked my banker to pay my pledge to the mission the same as when I was at home. . . . Some of us may not come back. But so long as the old flag comes home unstained by defeat, the other things do not matter much."

Those simple words ought to give heart to every mis- sionary bishop, every missionary, struggling against dis- couraging odds to keep his little mission going, and to the rector of every country parish. Have we in America been quite Christian in our estimate of numbers? It is natural that we should overemphasize bigness and budgets; but it is very shortsighted and it isn't Christian. There is many an unrecorded martyrdom in the obscure corners of our great dioceses as well as in our missionary dioceses. The men who cling to their posts refusing to be starved out are the spiritual empire builders. But the Church that lets them starve has much yet to learn of the Spirit of his Master.

In the Name of Religion

THIS is not a fight in a saloon; it is the Rev. William Sunday teaching religion in Washington:

" 'We were a peaceful people', he shouted, with his hands to his lips and one leg lifted almost to his chin. 'All our paths were peaceful until that God-forsaken, wiener-wursting, sauer-krauting, miserable gang of——.'

"The rest of his words were lost in a roar of laughter, cheers, and cries of approval that broke over the taber- nacle.

" 'The weasel-eyed, hog-jowled, beetle-browed, liberty- hating crew will go down to inglorious defeat before our arms', he exclaimed a little later. 'Just as this Govern- ment, using the powers vested in it by the people, declared war on that most vile, damnable, rapacious carcass of blood-thirsty imperialism, so I today, here in Washington, in the shadow of the Capitol, declare war against hell and all its emissaries and all its cohorts.'

"Taking a moment's breath, he clapped his hands and then shook his fist at an imaginary enemy.

" 'You can't shoot your cursed kultur and your dam- nable Hohenzollernism down our throats,' he said. 'You can't spit on the Stars and Stripes, you can't erase a star from that pure field. We're not a quarrelsome bunch. Oh-h-h no, but woe betide anybody who gets us started!' "

The House of Bishops

A MEETING of the House of Bishops has been called for April 10. The purpose announced is to appoint missionary bishops and to take action upon the resigna- tion of Bishop Jones.

There is apparently only one thing to do with that resignation. But we sincerely hope that the House of Bishops in the action which they may take in the case will not repeat the unfortunate phraseology of the report of their committee appointed to act in the matter. The wording of that report has given grave anxiety and not a little chagrin to many people.

World Crises and Prayer for Unity

CHRISTIANS of every name throughout the world are asked to observe the octave January 18-25 as a season of special prayer for the visible manifestation of the unity of all the members of the one Christ.

It is a fortunate hour for this observance. Statesmen are now daring, without incurring ridicule, to phrase in the language of diplomacy the faith of our Prayer for Missions, which is at once the most beautiful prayer for missions and for peace that has ever been written.

If statesmen dare speak of the brotherhood of nations, Christians may well pray their Master to hasten the com- ing of the brotherhood of churches. The Octave of Prayer for Unity falls at a most solemn and wonderful hour in the world's history.

The Church and the Camp

By THE REV. C. J. DAVIS

THERE is one fact which must be deeply impressed upon the mind of every thoughtful Churchman at the present time. It is that although this Nation of ours is pre-eminently a religious nation so far as Church membership denotes religion, however widely separated Church and State may be, and although we are a democracy of which the primary principle is that the Government is merely the executive of the mind of the people, nevertheless the mind of the people as regards organized religion has not sought to be recognized in our military preparations, and therefore has not been recognized and expressed by the Government. I say this not in criticism of the Government but in criticism of the Churches.

Organized religion is at the present moment on the outskirts of the Army seeking indeed what it may do here and there with results that must be small, instead of being within the Army, an agency recognized officially by the Government as expressing the belief of the American people that religion is at last as essential to manhood as food or recreation. Someone will say, of course, that this is not so, because chaplains are appointed by the Government. But I answer that chaplains as they work today, however they represent by their splendid character and sacrifice, religion, do not adequately represent organized religion. For in the first place, to quote from the bulletin of the War Commission, not enough chaplains have been appointed. "Today in the great cantonments of from 25,000 to 50,000 men, there are only from two to six chaplains." This does not represent adequately organized religion, which would cover such a parish by twenty or more clergy.

But in the second place, the work of a chaplain is a purely individual work. It is not co-ordinated with the work of other chaplains; it is subject to no ecclesiastical supervision or direction save of the vaguest kind; it is not in touch with the great organization, the Church of which it is theoretically a part, nor is it in vital touch with other like efforts. In this day when organization is needed especially, this is a real weakness. That it is so has been proved in the past when the chaplains of the regular army were too often rightly regarded as a necessary evil. No man can do his best work standing wholly alone.

In the third place, chaplains are not equipped. I do not mean by this, equipped with moving picture machine and instruments of social work, but with the tools of every parish priest, more especially a Church and an altar. Of course, in the field this is impossible, but we are dealing now, not with movable camps, but with military cities. For a place in which to conduct services the chaplains are dependent upon the Y. M. C. A., which is officially recognized by the Government. And although the co-operation of the Y. M. C. A. is given most gladly, it yields only the shack in which the men write their letters and play their games; a place necessarily without any suggestion of reverence, a place where it is impossible for a man to be by himself in the presence of God. While not one of us would say that these things are essential at all times they are certainly essential to the culture of religion where they may be obtained.

Finally the position of the chaplain is anomalous. He is a commissioned officer, and between him and the enlisted men there is a gulf fixed, a gulf which only the most tactful and devoted of men can bridge. It is a fact, I think, that the whole system of religious work in the Army by means of chaplains commissioned and solely under military authority may be questioned. Too much of the effectiveness of the chaplain's work depends upon extraordinary gifts and the attitude of the commanding officer of the regiment. I have an idea that as Neville Talbot says, Jesus of Nazareth in the Army would have been a stretcher bearer or something of the sort, rather than a chaplain. The system certainly falls behind in efficiency, other auxiliaries to the fighting force of the Nation, such as the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A.

So I return to my proposition, that notwithstanding the appointment of chaplains the mind of organized religion is not adequately expressed in our military organization.

The winning of this war is shown to depend upon two things, organization and spirit. Autocracy is theoretically rich in the former; democracy in the latter. The effort of democracy, therefore, is primarily to create an organization capable of focusing wholly and efficiently the spirit of the Nation. The strides that have been taken by America in this respect within the last eight months have been little short of marvelous. An army of a million men has been created, officered, and partially trained and equipped; provision has been made to transport this army with food supplies 3,000 miles overseas when such transportation shall be needed. Provision has been made for the care of sick and wounded and destitute at home and abroad; provision has been made even for the morale of the Army so far as proper recreational and social opportunities support it. The material resources of the Nation have been and are being mobilized to the fullest extent. This has all required a wonderful organization. The method has been two-fold. First, commissions and councils of experts have been created, often composed of men who have left large business interests to answer the call of the Nation. And in the second place existing organizations have been utilized where they were capable of expansion to bear the additional burden. The Red Cross was called upon to do the humanitarian work and is the admiration of the world for the way it is doing it. The Y. M. C. A. was called upon to do the social work and is no less the admiration of the world for the way it is doing. Only in the case of the religious work was no commission organized and no organization called upon. Whereas in every other department it was recognized that this is a war between peoples, a war of resources which must be mobilized by modern methods most carefully devised and organized by experts, in the matter of the religious resources

For Loyalty

ALMIGHTY God, grant me thy gift of loyalty. For my Home give me love and obedience; for my Country, sacrifice and service; for my Church, reverence and devotion; and in everything make me true to thee; through thy Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

For Patriotism

OUR Father in Heaven, make us true lovers of our country. Help us to keep the promise which America has made to the world, to be the home of freedom and brotherhood and justice for all. In our happiness and in our strength put us in mind of the pleasures and the rights of others. Make us brave and truthful and fair. In our play and in our work keep our successes free from boasting and conceit. And when we fail and are defeated, give us a higher courage and a stauncher strength. Help us to become noble and great-hearted citizens, an honor to our nation and a spring of hope to our neighbors; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

the Nation, methods were left as they were. I repeat this is not a criticism of the Government but of organized religion. For if the Church with one voice had asked for such organization it would have been formed, and today organized religion instead of being a "beggar at the gate", would be a recognized agency of the Government for the upbuilding of the morale of the Army. It is not too late even now. We are still at the beginning of our military preparations. The Administration is sympathetic with every good and ennobling influence; it is especially desirous of expressing the mind of the Nation. Can not organized religion with all the force at its command ask that a council on religious work in our military forces be appointed by the president, comprising officers of the Army who are sympathetic with religion in order that the prerogatives of the Army may not be infringed, and religious leaders from various Churches, including the Jewish, to plan for and direct religious work in an adequate way amongst our armed forces at home and abroad?

Certain things stand in the way. The first is "our unhappy divisions". A British officer said to me the other day, "We have in our brigade, a Churchman, a Roman Catholic and a 'fancy' for chaplains, but we don't care much about the differences; we go to the man we like". In the face of the awful realities which confront us, are the Churches, like Ibsen's heroine, still to go on playing with their dolls while the house burns? If we cannot unite at the call of the Nation, enough, to work togther in such a general way as this, then organized religion will come out of this war discredited as failing to perceive the difference between essentials and non-essentials, as exalting the form above the spirit, the organization above the crying need of men. And as a matter of fact I believe a similar cooperation amongst the Canadian forces is in existence fully and efficiently.

But the second thing in the way is the old spirit, "Let George do it". The Y. M. C. A. and the chaplains we are told look after the religious life of the men. The handicaps under which the chaplains work we have already considered. As to the Y. M. C. A. no one thinks more highly and enthusiastically of it than I do. Its social work is invaluable. As the arm of Christianity for this purpose, it is vastly effective. But its raison d'être is to do institutional work. It is not a Church. At the present time, indeed, it is endeavoring to supply the lack of the Church in our camps. It holds services at which visiting clergymen preach; it conducts Bible classes; it gives the use of its huts to chaplains for services and sacraments, and in doing this it gives a commentary upon the chaplain system as at present in operation. But all of this is extraneous, a side issue to its main purpose, which is social. As Mr. Kipling's old seadog says, "there is a power of virtue in keeping things separate".

I am a believer in institutional work. For many years I carried on a large settlement house besides building and maintaining a parish house in connection with my church, but my experience has all gone to prove to me that these things, however necessary, are not the primary object of the Church, nor can they keep alive and increase the spirit in men. As one of my boys said to me the other day, "Let's make the club a Bible class; the fellows are tired coming around just to play pool or billiards". We did, and it is a great success. Our young men are living under frontier conditions, free from familiar restraints, irked by an unfamiliar discipline. They are lonely and yet they can never be alone; they are meeting different standards and will meet others much more unlike what they have known; they are dimly seeing certain ideals of service, certain necessities of self-sacrifice for principle. I cannot believe that recreational and social opportunities, hostess houses and canteens, of themselves, will nurture a spiritual life within them sufficient to bring them back to us clean idealists, who will solve the problems of peace with the same selflessness with which they are going to solve the problems of war. There is only one thing that will do that, namely, religion. Has organized religion lost sight of that fact in the inspiration of clubs and classes? Has it forgotten the invisible in ministering to the visible? If so, it may as well go out of business, for as far as social work goes the Y. M. C. A. and a hundred kindred organizations do it much better than the Church.

But as to the religious work of the Y. M. C. A., that, in my opinion, is another story. All honor to it for what it is doing, but more shame to the Church that the Y. M. C. A. must do it. There are certain facts which the centuries have proved true in the religious life of society. One is a trained ministry, trained not only in institutional work but in the knowledge of religion and the human soul. Another is the supreme value of continued personal contact between such a trained minister and his people: the pastoral and the prophetic functions are intertwined. Men do not grow in grace by virtue of sermons so much as they do by virtue of personal contact with holiness, and a sermon makes a lasting impression largely when its hearers know and love its preacher. The occasional preachers of the Y. M. C. A. cannot do the good that a man can who is permanently preacher and pastor too. And again, a building devoted to religious purposes is an essential where it can be had. It not only bears its constant silent witness to the reality of God; it also brings into worship, reverence and dignity, which religion if true must have; and it affords a place where a man can feel himself alone with God. I cannot feel that religious work of the Y. M. C. A., at present lacking these elements, is an adequate expression of what ought to be the mind of organized religion. Hand in hand with the workers of that splendid organization and on the same footing with it, with as powerful a backing must go the trained minister of religion.

After all, organized religion, whether it know it or not, is today undergoing the final test along with a lot of other institutions which have been regarded as divine. We need have no fears for the fate of Christianity as a result of this war, save that it may find for itself another and less worthy body. We do (Continued on page 93)

*A Hymn for the Time

By THE RT. REV. ARTHUR CLEVELAND COXE, D.D.

WE are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time;
In an age, on ages telling,
To be living is sublime.
Hark! The waking up of nations
Gog and Magog to the fray!
Hark! What soundeth is creation's
Groaning for its latter day.

Will ye play then, will ye dally
With your music and your wine?
Up! it is Jehovah's rally!
God's own arm hath need of thine.
Hark! the onset! Will ye fold your Faith-clad arms in lazy lock?
Up, oh up, thou drowsy soldier
Worlds are charging to the shock.

Worlds are charging; Heaven beholding
Thou hast but an hour to fight
Now the blazon'd Cross unfolding
On—right onward for the right.
Oh! let all the soul within you,
For the truth's sake go abroad!
Strike! let every nerve and sinew
Tell on ages, tell for God.

*Written by the late Bishop of Western New York in 1840, these verses have been a household word with many people, but now are difficult to find. So appropriately do they express the patriotic spirit of the hour, that many friends of the great writer have been anxious to find them again.—The Editors.

An Interview With Bishop Lawrence

By A MEMBER OF THE STAFF

"THERE'S a chance for someone to write a good strong article on the Church's lack of organization for national emergencies." That was Bishop Lawrence's reply when I asked him to tell me the story of the birth of the War Commission for the benefit of readers of THE CHURCHMAN.

Evidently the various phases of that story were very fresh in the Bishop's mind. He gave me the details of it from behind his desk in Wall Street—when he wasn't answering the telephone, or talking over poster designs and general publicity for the great campaign of the twenty-seventh or telling a stenographer how to reach every rector east of the Mississippi in the quickest fashion, or saying to President Hadley, of Yale, that he was ready to see him!

"Before the war there were two Commissions", he said, "that had responsibility for war work. One was the Commission charged with looking after legislation that concerned the appointment of chaplains, of which I happened to be chairman. When the United States went into the War the Church was faced with an emergency and no machinery with which to meet it. The first definite problem was presented with the advent of the officers' reserve camps. I had no authority to act, but when the Plattsburg camp opened, I sent a clergyman there from the diocese of Massachusetts, with the consent of the Bishop of Albany. Later I sent another man to Camp Niagara. He got there and was ready for work before the troops arrived. I did the same in other cases. I felt that the Church ought to be on the ground".

BISHOP LAWRENCE

So, because the Church was fortunate enough to have a Bishop Lawrence, it was on the ground. It was on the ground so emphatically, in spite of being split up into little groups, with no national functioning centre, that some of the men in other churches got the idea that the Episcopal Church was running the camps.

"The Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches came to me down in Washington", said the Bishop, "and wanted to know if they had any right to do anything in the camps. He thought we seemed to be in control of the situation. What had been done, of course, had been done without any such authority as someone in the Church ought to have had".

In August Bishop Lawrence wrote to the Presiding Bishop, stating the problem and asking for some sort of authority to be given to someone. A temporary arrangement was effected, but within a few weeks Bishop Lawrence again wrote, urging the appointment of a War Commission, with power to act. It was at this time that the Presiding Bishop appointed the War Commission, defined its purposes, and made Bishop Lawrence its chairman. Bishop Perry was appointed is executive officer.

Immediately the wheels of this war machine began to turn—a war machine with purposes quite alien to those of the German Empire's Juggernaut. As it has gained momentum with the passing months it has ruthlessly crushed down every obstacle, and from its present position is reaching out tender hands to the boys in khaki, for this is a machine with a heart of love, though it is love backed by efficiency.

"Yesterday a man came in here and wanted to know why it was necessary to raise all this money and do all this work", said Bishop Lawrence. "He thought the Y. M. C. A. was doing all that could be done for the boys. I said to him, 'If someone is sick in your home, or some one dies, do you send for a Y. M. C. A. secretary'? The man said he had never thought of it in that way. When he left we had his check for $10,000.

"The program of the Commission is a very definite one. Its work is divided as follows: First, the equipment of chaplains. It is well known that the Government furnishes no equipment. If there is a man who has been a chaplain for ten years, and has not had adequate equipment, the Commission undertakes to supply him with everything necessary. Second, we are placing voluntary chaplains. We were forced to do this in the officers' reserve camps, if those camps were to have any chaplains. Under the law commissioned chaplains cannot be placed with any of the forces that are not organized into regiments. There were no regimental organizations at the officers' reserve camps, but we had to have chaplains there, and we put them there as volunteers. The recruiting camps present the same problem. Possibly 10,000 men may be gathered in such a camp, and they must have chaplains, though there are no regiments. Furthermore, in cantonments of from 40,000 to 50,000 men there are but four to eight commissioned chaplains. This situation must be met. We now have voluntary chaplains in every cantonment, and are rapidly placing them in every small camp.

"Third, the Commission is reenforcing the parishes located near the camps. Many situations have arisen where one of the great cantonments has suddenly been set down alongside a small parish church, with only one clergyman as its staff. It is necessary to give that clergyman help, and, if his plant is too small, it is necessary to enlarge it for him. Fourth, the laymen working as secretaries of the Brotherhood are paid by the War Commission, as the Brotherhood war work is a part of the Commission's service.

When it came to the "fifthly" I found myself even more impressed with the program of the Commission. It will impress many a mother and father whose son is somewhere in France or who will be there later on. Little as we care to face the fact, it is none the less true that many of our Church boys will be sick "over there" and many of them will be wounded. It will not be pleasant for them during the days of convalescence, though Uncle Sam's medical forces do all that medical science in a modern army can do. They will long for the "home folks" who will be thousands of miles overseas.

"We have in preparation a card index in which will be registered the name of every boy in the national service. Already there are 12,000 names on that index. Whenever word comes back that one of our boys is in a hospital, word will immediately be cabled to Bishop McCormick. Within a few hours a chaplain of that boy's church will be at his bedside. He will know that his home church is watching over him".

Bishop Lawrence likes the phrase "on the job". It is often on his lips; it is constantly in his heart and in his action. And the War Commission is on the job, and it's going to stay on the job and put it through—the biggest job this Church of ours ever tackled. The Church is with the boys over there and it's going to stay with them until the cause is won.

On January 27 every man, woman and child in the Church will have a chance to keep the Church on the job.

At the great Red Cross meeting at the New York Hippodrome in December, Mr. Henry P. Davidson said:

"Let us look forward a few months—I don't know how many. I can see that circle (Continued on page 109

Home Service

By MARY WILCOX GLENN

THE United States has been at war for nine months. During this period of national preparation the American Red Cross has conceived and put in motion a social program of which the country as a whole has been made conscious. There are many parts to the program, but in thinking of these each separate item seems to fall into an appropriate place in a scheme of service which, though characterized by bold, decisive strokes, blends to produce a composition of extraordinary balance.

A $10,000 campaign for funds launched in the early, bewildering days of the War, which resulted in collecting an amount of money greatly in excess of the figure set in advance. The sending of experienced, resourceful men and women to France, Italy, Russia, Serbia, to devote talent, professional skill, financial and other forms of material aid to relieve intolerable living conditions in vast devastated areas. Pageants, symbolizing the spirit of consecrated service, which were witnessed by large groups of people and were afterwards brought to the attention of innumerable households through the medium of the pictorial page of the Sunday papers. The speeding up of the production of knitted garments and surgical dressings and using to this end the organization for personal service to be found in religious and social institutions. The calling of mass meetings in important centres throughout the country, at which Mr. Henry P. Davison and other members of the War Council could inform the people of the United States as to use made of the entrusted funds. The sending to Halifax of trained social workers, nurses, doctors, supplies of all kinds in quick response to her need of succor. The carrying through in the weeks before Christmas of a campaign to raise the membership to 15,000,000 one dollar members—an effort which exceeded the goal by about 5,000,000. This last big stroke emphasized the fact that the Red Cross is the enterprise, not of the few, who can give much money and much time, but of the whole people, who through membership participate in its universal demonstration of service. If one study the composite scheme, other achievements will force themselves upon one's notice. Through this closer scrutinizing one can detect, forming a background against which the bold strokes stand in high relief, a fine network of effort in behalf of the homes of our own men in the service and of the homes of those others who for more than three years have been fighting "over there".

MRS. WILLIAM K. DRAPER, Chairman Women's Advisory Committee, National Red Cross War Council

It has been possible in these few months to organize Home Service from one end of this country to another, because the Service has drawn to itself groups of people who value thoughtful work for families suffering under adversity and have learned quickly to impart their knowledge to earnest, eager bands of volunteers. In each of the thirteen divisions from which the Red Cross work in this country is conducted, a man or woman has been placed as director of civilian relief. They have been selected to organize the service in behalf of the families of our soldiers and sailors because they had previously made good in an enterprise similar in character if not in scope. Each of the thirteen is trained to make nice approach to the problem of the individual; to work for co-operation between forces, religious and social; to use the energies of the expert and of the untrained. From city to city, from town to town, they have gone to stimulate the formation of Home Service Sections. Under their leadership groups of volunteers have been mustered to form classes to study and practice methods of effective treatment. These groups have been called on to put their brief training to immediate use. As our men have enlisted and been drafted, the families of many of them have needed to turn to the Red Cross for aid and advice. By January first, 2,500 families had come under care of the section receiving the heaviest number of applications, while but half a dozen had been brought to the attention of some section established in a community where the draft had hit only those who were financially and socially prepared to make their own readjustments. This service throughout the country has stood with the Federal Government in urging the passage of the War Risk Insurance bill. By January the Bureau had 100,000 families on its registry of claims. When the allowances began to be paid, the Home Service Sections knew that they would be freer to devote energy to the dual tasks of lessening the mental suffering of those on whom separation bears so hard (because to the dread of loss of fellowship is added the fear lest the home cannot be maintained) and of safeguarding the family life through thoughtful consideration of the real interests of the women and children. To the man at the front, on the high seas, in cantonment, assurance must be given that his hearth is safe while he takes part in the fight for democracy.

A letter written "At sea en route to somewhere in France" speaks of what a Home Service worker had meant to a soldier. "She really helped me to be more efficient than I thought I'd be when I left my family and answered the call. I have had a letter from home telling me how wonderfully she has taken care of my family and home. That alone is enough to spur one on to use the best that is in him." It warms the heart to think of helping to steady the morale of a soldier who, in another part of the same letter, gives an insight into his fine appreciation of his wife. "The one to make the greater sacrifice in my case was my wife, as she has two children to take care of alone, besides worrying about me".

Perturbed human beings, those left forlorn at home and those going forth to meet strange and awful experiences, feel the need of being spurred to develop the best that is in them. Their call is for the service of men and women who desire to consecrate themselves to meet this demand for fellowship. The answer made by those who, under the pressure of the demand, are doing effective work, makes glorious the development of the Home Service. It is a rallying of social forces, and a submitting to the discipline of service. What it means in the way of a deepening consciousness of our common humanity was emphasized for me late in the afternoon of New Year's Eve. A young volunteer, whose husband had recently entered active service, and I were left alone in a Home Service office. She had conferred with women of different nationalities, who felt the strain under which they lived. "One doesn't have to talk about democracy", she said. "One feels it in the presence of these other women".

Flashlights from Camp and Front

YOUNG men are the greatest asset of the Church. Hitherto they have been scattered in business, in college or in their sodalities. Today they are massed in camp and ship. We must go with them. One of our voluntary chaplains writes from a great camp: "I have twelve thousand men close about me; every one of them open to personal influence. My work is appalling in its magnitude. From the time I sweep my room and make my bed until 10 p. m. I do not know an hour when men are not in my room".

THE NATION, the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A. are behind the men and they know and feel it. Seventy thousand Churchmen are in the army and navy. What are they going to think of the Church if she does not let them know that she is behind them? When they come home will they care for her if she has not cared for them?

THOSE WHO return home at the close of the war are to be the leaders of national life in the next generation. Is the Church going to lose them or is she going to guide and inspire them, making the country strong in spiritual force and the Church effective through their strength?

THE CHURCH will never be the same that she was before the War. We shall have new heavens and a new earth. These men who have faced death, looked into the other life, have asked and answered deep questions and have deep spiritual problems. Has the Church no message for such men? Spiritual leadership is needed at the front as well as military leadership.

OUR CHURCH has a contribution to make to the religious life of the army. The order of the Church, its reverence and dignity of worship, its sacramental spirit, its traditions of personal, pastoral work fall in happily with the habits of soldier and sailor.

A CAMP or a ship is a great, systematized organization. Officers and men have hearts. A chaplain can be the human, sympathetic, invigorating force.

> GO, Western Warriors! Take the place
> The ages have assigned you in a strife
> Which to have died in were enough of life;
> For you there waits a quest
> Such as no paladin or hero knew
> Of all who lifted sword or wielded mace
> Since George the Dragon slew;
> For you a sacramental feast
> Too rich, too happy, too fulfilled
> Of all that man e'er craved or God hath willed,
> Too blessed to be offered save to you.
> —From an Ode on the Sailing of Our Troops for France, by John Jay Chapman, in the North American Review.

An incident: "Why are you drinking so heavily?" says a chaplain to a soldier in the guard house.

"I've had bad news from home, wife is sick and worried. I had to drink and forget it".

WE AT HOME have the blessings of the ministry, the services and sacraments. Why should the men in service go without them? Why should not soldiers and sailors have the living ministrations of their Church?

THE GREAT impulse of patriotism brings the Churches together. Chaplains and laymen of all faiths are working in spiritual sympathy. We must have a part in this.

A navy chaplain of our Church said, a few days ago: "On Christmas Eve I asked the Roman Catholic chaplain in another ship to come over and pass the night with me. He got up first and had his early mass with the men. Then I had the Holy Communion. And through the day we both worked for the Christmas celebration".

A CHAPLAIN is not only a pastor and priest, but postmaster, censor, letter writer, banker and man of all work.

"What did you hear from home today?"

"My boy is sick", is the reply and the chaplain has his chance for a helpful word. Pay day: "Chaplain, take my pay and send it to my wife." Without the chaplain that pay might have been wasted.

IN THE TRENCHES, on the battle front the chaplain goes with the men. He is beside the wounded and the dying. He takes their last messages. He administers to those who are offering their lives for us.

THIS IS SURE: The work overseas and on the ocean is the work of the whole Church. Every diocese and missionary district, no matter how heavy its military responsibilities, will make contribution towards the general fund of $500,000.

JAMES DE WOLF PERRY, JR., Chairman, Executive Committee.

From Our Chaplain's Letters

WHEN these drafted men went into the strange and barren home which a barracks provides, their eyes fell upon the only notice posted at that stage upon the barracks' notice boards, a notice which read, "The Camp Sherman Episcopal Church, Columbus Avenue and Section A. Services every Sunday: Holy Communion 8 a. m., Morning Prayer and Sermon 10 a. m. A place to rest and pray every day. You are welcome". There wasn't a Churchman in camp from the moment of his arrival who did not know there was an Episcopal Church in camp and a clergyman whose services he could command. Whether I personally get in touch with these men or not, there was comfort and help in the mere knowledge of the fact that the Church was there for the men who cared and needed her".

II. The Sunday in October which the President designated as a "National Day of Prayer" I spoke to about five hundred men in one of the huts. I concluded by telling them of the President's request and saying that I intended to offer some prayers. "But if it were simply a matter of my saying prayers", I told them, "I could do that just as well at home. I want you to be with me. How many of you will give me a hand? Two or three hundred hands went up in an instant. My breath was fairly taken away. I offered a series of short prayers for the President, the army and navy, Congress, our Allies, the Y. M. C. A., the German people, and some others, and you could have heard a pin drop throughout that whole building. Afterwards several of the men came forward to express their appreciation personally".

III. It is in the hospital that you come closest to the men, and they seem to hunger for friendship.

This young manhood is taking its religion in dead earnest. After this war are these men coming home to us to find their fathers sitting on the same old back fence of religion; or shall they find that we have marched beside them in spirit and found God the surest strength and refuge that human souls can claim?

IV. Last night called out at 9:30 to go to hospital to tend two dying boys—pneumonia. There will be a lot of it this winter. The climate is wet and cold. Rains more than anything else. This is really the biggest ministry I'll ever have. Conditions are so trying. Men are so homesick.

V. Yesterday I had the funeral of the first man in the regiment to die. He had a bad attack of pneumonia. In the cemetery in which this young man was buried there were graves of Russian, French and Algerian soldiers. I saw the American soldiers wounded at the front in the first brush with the Boches. Several of them were suffering rather severe pain, but they were bearing it with a stout heart and a cheerful countenance.

VI. I know you would have enjoyed the service. How they sang! It was in a leaky Y. M. C. A. hut, floor covered with slippery mud; benches from the two mess shacks, so they were seated; could therefore prolong the services over the customary time. There was a pelting rain without, so the men could not drill or work, and they were glad to remain. Then some asked for Communion, so I delayed going on to the next station for half an hour. About thirty received. It was mighty impressive to see them come forward, three or four at a time, kneel on the muddy floor, bow their heads and reach out their hands, and all the time the wind howling outside and the rain dripping in.

Making Americans in a Public School

By NANCY GARY BLACKWELL

FIVE thousand of them, all loyal and most of them new, for at least 80 per cent. are of foreign birth or parentage, representing the countries of the globe, a world within itself. Prior to our entrance into the War sympathizers with either side were to be found and the head lines in any paper were sufficient to reveal on one group of faces rejoicing, quite as plainly as consternation on the other.

In April, 1916, we asked ourselves as did the leaders in all great organizations, What can we make for Uncle Sam and his Allies? Instantly came back the answer—Americans. And we set ourselves joyfully and with determination to the task, realizing that our work of teaching various subjects, academic and otherwise, must go on as before, but knowing also that the use of all subject matter must be consistent with the purpose for which the school exists and that our apparently double aim was not impossible. If the highest purpose of our school is, as we believe, to make Americans, then it seemed to us that we should interpret all our subject matter in the light of patriotism and citizenship. In this way the Washington Irving High School, New York City, became a great plant for the production of the country's choicest article.

On April 26, the Tri-color, our first Allied flag, was presented and the collection has grown rapidly, each presentation being a fitting occasion for restating our reasons for entering the War. Each time distinguished speakers increased the growing enthusiasm for our Allied cause.

Thousands strong, Washington Irving girls trouped down Fifth Avenue in patriotic parades. One of our treasured possessions is the memory of Joffre's radiant smile as the Tri-color was borne past carried by our girls. They have set their fresh young strength to work for the land of their adoption and through doing this they are becoming real Americans. It is our aim, in which we are succeeding, that in every East-side foreign family from which comes a girl to our school a new centre of Americanism with far-reaching influence shall be found.

Then came the ambulance, our ambulance. It was asked for in assembly on a Monday; it was bought the next Thursday and straightway sent to France. With it went the rest of the fund, an order for over 1,000 francs, for additional comforts for our fighting men. Each girl now felt that her forces were enlisted, for when one lives to the southeast of Fourteenth Street and Fourth Avenue, as do the large majority of Washington Irving girls, each quarter of a dollar invested for the comfort of the "boys over there" means self-denial productive of a real thrill of patriotism.

Washington Irving girls have done their part in each war activity. Through the school bank, $41,950 worth of Liberty Bonds were subscribed for. A Liberty Bond button was a much-prized bit of personal adornment. Several classes are buying bonds on installment for the school relief fund.

Every department in the school has mobilized its forces. One tries now to speak and write the best possible English because it is the language of one's country and it would be painful to be taken for a foreigner on account of faulty English! History and civics give as never before acquaintance with our Allies and their aims, as well as food preparation for citizenship. One does not have to wait until school is out to know the latest from the "front", the bulletin board in the library tells the good or bad news immediately upon its receipt. French is becoming so much more real, now that brothers and cousins are "over there". One needs to know about France and the most direct way is to learn the language. First term French classes are not content with making comfort bags for the soldiers; they must know exactly what a French soldier would call the bag and each article within. After our own Star Spangled Banner, La Marseillaise is the favorite at Washington Irving. From the commercial arithmetic classes you may learn the value of a Liberty Bond at any given date and the W. S. S. scale in the foyer rises perceptibly each day; girls can tell you, too, how the interest accumulates.

In the department of hygiene and physical training sound bodies are being built to stand the strain of war privations. Last Spring gardens were planted under the direction of the biology department. Should you go to the end of the south corridor, on the first floor, you would find bright faces bent over boiling paraffin; trench candles are being make in the bookbinding department.

All patriotic work is artistically advertised and illustrated by the art department. First came a fine exhibit in the foyer of patriotic posters; then the advertising for the entertainments: The patriotic pageant given by the English department, the soirée dramatique, etc. When the town of Tillaloy in France shall be rebuilt, it is to be done by the proceeds of the sale of a tag to be put on French imports and that tag was designed by a Washington Irving girl.

In the school restaurant is observed the wheatless as well as the meatless day. The domestic science girl can tell you just how to get the greatest number of calories with the least expenditure of money. A food conservation exhibit was held in the foyer and food pledges were taken home for parents' signature.

Economy is our slogan. To fail of promotion and have to repeat a grade of work, so say the members of the Patriotic League of the French Club, is doubly reprehensible now that we are at war, for by so doing a girl wastes public money when Belgian and Armenian children are starving. Washington Irving girls are growing in power of concentration, for its takes all one's attention to use irregular French verbs in original sentences and not drop stitches, yet the knitting must go on and exams are sure to come. Discipline is simplified, for while there are still countless opportunities for happiness and fun, there is little time for silliness when one is striding toward citizenship in the greatest and dearest of countries. In room 316 is our honor roll bearing the names of all in active service who are members of the immediate family of anyone connected with the school. The school poets can sing of war and patriotism only. The December number of the Washington Irving News gives us a most creditable collection of school girl verses, prayers, songs of victory, the flag. Even the "Sunny Side" is all about war activities and "camouflage" is not neglected.

Our greatest achievement is our Red Cross Unit No. 23. There are 300 senior members and 5,265 juniors, every girl in the school! Red Cross Auxiliary No. 11 has given us some materials and much has been bought with our own funds. The dressmaking department has proved itself worthy of all the city has spent on it. Up to date there have been made 800 comfort bags, 5090 hospital garments. From the scraps left from the robes, 514 pairs of bed socks and the

With Bishop Israel In France

By THE REV. ROY I. MURRAY

"HE travels fastest who travels alone"; but he who travels alone is likely to miss certain thrills which are inevitably to be got by one travelling with the Bishop of Erie. Apart from that, speed, as such, is hardly to be hoped for on French railroads under present conditions.

No matter the place, no matter the distance, one snatches such fragments of petit dejeuner as are vouchsafed and lumbers to the station at the crack of dawn. Follows the inevitable, and inevitably courteous examination, by the military authorities, of safe conducts, and lately, the purchase of billets militaires, military tickets of astounding cheapness and minute proportions, so small that, once ingulfed in the fastness of one's trench-coat pocket, their discovery, at the day's end, is usually a matter of involved and embarrassed search. I say "at the day's end", for, again no matter the place or the distance, it is always after dark before the one is reached and the other covered.

When we left Paris on October 11 it was still possible, under certain conditions, to travel on military passes. Recently, however, in accordance with the familiar French proverb, "We have changed all that", and elaborate identity books are now necessary, containing one's photograph, of carefully prescribed size and character, an itinerary, a safe-conduct and a paper which must be seen and stamped by designated authorities whenever a stop is made over night.

We were making this time for the sea, the bishop having been "loaned" by the American Red Cross, in which he is chaplain of Base Hospital Number Twenty, at the request of the Y. M. C. A., to add to his appointed work addresses to soldiers on "the line". The train was as cold as usual — colder, we thought, as we left the suburbs of Paris to cut north and west across Normandy. We arrived at night, as usual, and, again as usual, in a blinding downpour of rain.

There was one room left at the hotel, a room of three beds—an embarrassment of riches, for madame, in the office below stairs declined to rent the room unless we could manage to include a third member in our party. Presently we were again outside, breasting the rain for the next port of call, where matters were satisfactorily arranged. One falls naturally into naval phraseology; the town was blue with sailors, American sailors, everywhere. That and the smell of the sea down below the great fortifications—the sound, too, of American slang—made the next day's sunshine all the brighter.

The bishop began at once to inspect the recreation and other quarters provided for the men. Most homelike of all, perhaps, was the restaurant, with typewritten menus in English, and food wonderfully good and reasonably cheap—happy combination—at the hands of two or three young Belgian women, refugees of invaluable bilingual accomplishment. The Bishop was advised to try for peach jam—did try for it—got it, and was glad. Peach jam, asked for in English and eaten in the company of one's own people, crowded elbow to elbow, a corner of home in a town so old that the handiwork of Julius Caesar's soldiers is still pointed out to wondering American eyes from over the sea!

One had to push through groups of French children to get to the door of the recreation building, just up the street. Inside were the usual rows of tables covered with well-worn magazines; the usual French railway posters, wonderfully done, many of them, seen on the walls across clouds of smoke; the usual groups gathered around the piano at the far end of the room. Everywhere men in navy blue—all, that is, except a few—survivors of the gun-crew of a merchantman torpedoed fifty miles off the coast in last night's storm of wind and rain. They told it gravely, simply—the shock to the ship, the explosion, then the lifeboats, and worst of all, how they heard across the darkness cries for help which could not be answered. We saw them later in another town—these same men—not barefooted this time, not in mufti of necessity, but smart in new uniforms, about to leave again for their appointed work, the convoying of another ship out across those same treacherous waters. It brings the War nearer home to meet men like that! And they are here by thousands, with more coming continually.

It is to reach these men with his message of encouragement and good cheer, his frank, earnest exhortation to our soldiers and sailors that they uphold here in the old world the splendid traditions of our young America—it is for this, in great part, that Bishop Israel is going from camp to camp along the "American Front". Following a carefully worked out schedule, he has made over sixty addresses in as many crowded huts. Some central town or village is chosen as a sort of temporary headquarters, and from there, by touring car, by ambulance, sometimes by army truck or motor sidecar, the Bishop makes his way to neighboring points where the men are collected.

This town where we are, now for example—the last on the present schedule—is the centering point of five roads, along which, each afternoon and night, the Bishop has been making his Apostolic pilgrimage. For it is that. Most of his Erie friends would perhaps fail to recognize their bishop in the person who climbs out of a mud-covered motor at one of those points which, at night, seem, each of them, situated exactly in the middle of nowhere. Designedly or not, they are very much alike, these "Somewheres in France", especially at night. In place of the pastoral staff of tradition these present sheep are sought out by the light of a modern electric torch. But they are not far to seek. One of those low darkened buildings will be the recreation hut, and the men have heard that he is coming and gathered there, often in hundreds. The shepherd adventures confidently through the mud—one goes through mud in France, and not across it—arrives at the door and enters.

There they are, gathered about the inadequate stoves playing checkers and dominoes at the tables, reading writing their letters, listening to familiar phonograph records or to such music as can be wrenched from the long suffering piano; listening sometimes to both, and to both at once! A rough counter at the far end marks the canteen, and behind it, rows of shelves—American tobacco chocolate, chewing gum, candy (Continued on page 110

For Victory

LORD God of Hosts, guide, we beseech Thee, by Thine infinite wisdom, those who lead our fleets and armies and those of our Allies against the foe. Keep them watchful in danger, resolute in conflict, undismayed in adversity, and honorable at all times; that, led under Thy protection to swift and final victory, they may establish peace on a foundation that cannot be moved; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

For Peace

INTO Thy loving and all-wise care, dear Lord, we commit this world of ours; and we pray Thee, in Thine own time, and in Thine own best way, to bring about a lasting peace; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

What Is It Worth?

By THE RT. REV. FREDERICK F. JOHNSON

A LETTER dropped on my desk in Christmas week from a surgeon whom I have learned to care about these last six years in rural Missouri. He is with the American Expeditionary Forces in France. He left a wife and babies behind him when he volunteered. He is one of the six or seven faithful communicants who have always gathered for the Holy Communion on a week-day morning whenever I have gone myself or sent a minister to the little Missouri town where his home is. We have no chapel there and no organization there. Our Holy Communion services are held in the cottages of our friends. Our preaching services are held in churches which are placed at our disposal by kindly affectioned pastors and people who are not of our Communion. The record shows that we have had about twenty-five services in this particular little town during the past five years.

It costs money to journey there, at the end of the railroad, and to journey back. Once when I was coming home the engine went through a burning trestle to the dry bottom of what is a creek when the streams are high; and it never came back. Another twelve inches and we, who were in the coach, a dozen of us, would have gone where the engine went.

The Church sends me out as a missionary in rural Missouri. She asks me to give an account of my stewardship. She wants to know where I am placing men in the field, and who they are, and what they and I are accomplishing by reason of the offerings that flow through the treasury of the diocesan Missionary Board. That is as it ought to be. And we, all of us, have streaks of wondering whether it pays for the Church to minister in fifteen or twenty places that I might name, where our people in each place can be numbered without using up the fingers on both hands and where the future of the Church is hopeless.

No, is doesn't pay, not if we must hang the dollar tag on all that the Church does or tries to do. But measured by the kind of measuring line that the man in khaki learns to carry with him in the trenches, those twenty-five services during the past five years in that little town had a value that can't be marked on any tag! This is what my friend the surgeon writes me from the front in France:

"Our religious opportunities, here are of a very unsatisfactory sort . . . My thoughts often go back to the little mission at ———, and I have asked my banker to pay my pledge to the mission the same as when I was at home . . . Some of us may not come back. But so long as the old flag comes home unstained by defeat, the other things do not matter much."

Our little mission stations and our cottage services are worth while, aren't they, if from the trenches, thankful "thoughts often go back" to them! And if the man who is sacrificing home and comfort and income for his country and humanity writes back from the trenches and tells his banker to pay his pledge to the Church "the same as when he was at home" and charge it to account, surely we who stay at home, our lives and our homes and our dear ones and our properties defended and protected by the surgeons and the nurses and the soldiers at the front, our earning ability not impaired but rather enhanced by war conditions—surely we will not make the war conditions a convenient excuse for cutting down our pledges to the Church's missinoary work! Surely we will not fail to "go over the top" with our money as better men than we "go over the top" with their lives! Surely we will not fail to give as liberally as we can to rebuild the altars of God that are fallen down and to keep alive the Church's supplications until the day break and the shadows flee away!

For Those Wounded in War

O LORD, we pray Thee to have mercy upon all who are this day wounded and suffering. Though kindred and friends be far away, let Thy grace be their comfort; sanctify them, cheer them, and, if it be Thy good pleasure, restore them to health again; but chiefly give them patience, and faith in Thee. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

A Prayer for Germany

GIVE Thy Blessing, O Father, to the people of that great and fair land, with whose rulers we are at war. Strengthen the hands of the wise and just, who follow charity and look for justice and freedom, among them as among us. Drive away the evil passions of hatred, suspicion and the fever of war, among them as among us. Relieve and comfort the anxious, the bereaved, the sick and tormented, and all the pale host of sufferers, among them as among us. Reward the patience, industry, loving-kindness, and simplicity of the common people, and all the men of good heart, among them as among us. Forgive the cruelty, the ambition, the foolish pride, the heartless schemes, of which the world's rulers have been guilty. Teach us everywhere to repent and to amend. Help us so to use our present affiliations, which come from us and not from Thee, that we may build on the ruins of our evil past a firm and lasting peace. Grant that, united in a good understanding with these who are now become our enemies, though they are our brethren in Christ, they and we may establish a new order, wherein the nations may live together in trust and fellowship, in the emulation of great achievements and the rivalry of good deeds, truthful, honest and just in our dealings one with another, and following in all things the standard of the Son of Man, whom we have denied, and put to shame, and crucified afresh upon the Calvary of our battle-ground. Amen.

BISHOP GORE, of Oxford, England.

John Masefield has done a service to history by writing the description of The Old Front Line (New York, Macmillan Company, 1917, $1.00). "All wars end", he says in the introduction. "Even this War will some day end, and the ruins will be rebuilt, and the field of death will grow food, and all this frontier of trouble will be forgotten. In a few years' time, when the War is a romance in memory, the soldier looking for the battlefield will find his marks gone." Occasionally, however, there are bits of human interest like the following: "The chalk scarp on which they stand is by much the most beautiful thing in the battlefield, and the sight of Mesnil church tower on the top of it is most pleasant. That little banner stood all through the War, and not all the guns of the enemy could bring it down. Many men in the field near Mesnil enduring the mud of the thaw, and the lice, wet and squalor of dugouts near the front were cheered by the church tower."

Can We Have 5,000 for the Ministry?

By THE REV. WILLIAM E. GARDNER, D.D.

THESE are days crowded with rare experiences. One of the choicest that has been given to me has come from correspondence with a soldier boy who has expressed his desire to study for the ministry and is now training in the air service.

I pass bits of the correspondence along, hoping that every clergyman who has not cultivated correspondence with some soldier candidate for the ministry will begin at once. He will not only help a lad to preserve his ambitions under fire, but he will receive a message from the divine youth of our Nation that will keep his thinking buoyant.

(We regret that we have room for portions of only two letters from this interesting correspondence.—The Editors.)

January 11, 1917.

"I hope to go into the ministry some day. The running up against all the types you would encounter at the front, being on your own resources, with real responsibility, learning lessons of being on an errand of mercy, and how to help fellows, ought to be a very considerable help later on, especially if I should be a missionary. I would learn how to get on with and handle a class of men I am not likely to meet here, and which I might well run up against later on. So much for the training.

"I do want to be of some use to the world. So far, I have had a wonderfully happy and pleasant life, but I have never done a darned thing for anyone else. I doubt if ever again I get such a chance."

December 27, 1917.

"As to what you say about the future of the Church, I think this war will have a great effect as an emphasizer of men's positions. There won't be so many luke-warm Christians, so many who profess to believe in Christ and all his teachings but yet try to tone down His moral doctrines and smooth over some of His statements; or on the other hand, of those who agree to His system of ethics, but yet won't accept Him. War is a great maker of decisiveness, if you see what I mean. If a man enlists, and says he will, to the best of his ability, uphold the Constitution, obey lawful authority, etc., etc., and then at some period decides that he will at one time acknowledge his officers and choose his own line of action, it won't be long before he finds himself backed up against a wall, with a stern-faced, little squad of expert riflemen in front of him.

"On the other hand, those who don't believe will, I think, openly come out, and then it will be a fair, square scrap, not a great army going ahead with near-loyals, semi-traitors, waging a sort of guerrilla warfare. I may be all wrong, but I think there will be less sitting on the fence hereafter.

"Further, that men will have become more admiring than ever before of the great qualities of courage, fighting against odds; that they will more readily agree that this is a battlefield of right again wrong, that there are no two ways to a thing or action, but that one is right and the other isn't done by an officer and a gentleman; that all things must be judged by one standard. There will be less 'toning down' by some parsons, less trying to adapt a set of stern rules to a lax state of affairs, but a greater upholding than ever of the indisputable, unescapable laws or right and wrong, a greater preachment of hero-worship of the noble, uplifting type. And since men will have learned of the supreme importance of co-operation and discipline, that these must be held sacred, inviolable, absolute beyond any possibility of peradventure, they will be more willing to apply these principles to everyday life. You can't be thrown day and night with men, share with them hardship and danger, help them and be helped by them, without getting to think that there must be something in them after all, that what they stand for in civil life must have some worth.

"So how will Private Capital and Labor, after being side by side for months, after owing their lives each to the other, be able to go back to civil life without feeling closer to each other and desirous of coming to a mutual agreement, so that they may continue to be allies and friends, and cease to try to cut the throat of him to whom they owe their lives. It seems to me that this is a time for preaching a higher obligation, a greater sense of duty, a more exacting standard, a faithfuller allegiance than ever; of insisting that there can be no two ways, that he who is not with Me is against Me. It appears to me that Nietzsche did Christendom a great service when he said with all his power that Christian principles without the Christian faith is a contradiction in terms, that one is or is not.

"A good clergyman, a man, standing four-square to all the winds that blow, certainly can do incalculable good as a chaplain; but a poor one, a weak-wad, is worse than useless—he's a danger; for he is subjected to a very close scrutiny; and let him fall down, and the men will not only condemn him but all that he stands for. Let a naval officers fail to have the proper firmness and officerness and men will think his orders useless, dangerous folly; but let another man give the same directions and they are obeyed instanter, cheerfully, confidently."

The War Commission tells us that we have 71,31 men and boys in the service of our country.

Will the War Commission tell us how to clair 5,000 of them for the ministry?

Immanuel—God With Us

By ELIZABETH J. WOODS

GOD is always, always with me,
Though I cannot see His face,
Yet His love is round about me,
Goes with me from place to place.
If I live in His dear presence,
As the Master did of old,
I shall prove the sure protection
Which both me, and mine enfold.

God is always, always with me,
Though I seem to stand alone,
He is ever in the shadow,
Keeping watch above His own,
Keeping watch though others fail me
Watching, through the nights and days,
Till my heart rests in His keeping,
And my life is filled with praise.

These verses were found on the body of a young Ca dian recently killed in action.

For Those Who Have Given Their Lives

O LORD, we pray Thee to have in Thy holy keepi all those who have given their lives in the service f our country, and to give them cleansing and rest; that e good work which Thou hast begun in them may be p fected unto the day of Jesus Christ. Amen.

War Work of Brotherhood of St. Andrew

By F. C. TITSWORTH

IMMEDIATELY after the fateful Good Friday when this Nation decided to enter the Great War, the National Council of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew made plans for a constructive program of Christian work in the Army and Navy. E. H. Bonsall, the Brotherhood's president, called the secretaries in from their fields of work and after many conferences with all the leaders in the movement, it was decided to engage several Army secretaries, who would travel about from camp to camp searching out members of the Church and inciting them to faithfulness in the discharge of their Christian duty. Mr. Bonsall happens to be also a member of the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A., and in discussing the problems of the hour with Dr. Mott and Mr. Brockman mentioned the plan of the Brotherhood. They received it with enthusiasm but urged that it did not go far enough. They felt that the work which could be done by Brotherhood men was so important that they should be placed in permanent residence in every one of the camps. After further consideration of this enlarged plan it was decided to place the whole matter before the presiding bishop. He gave his hearty endorsement and steps were immediately taken to raise an adequate fund to cover necessary expenses.

A strong Army and Navy Council was immediately formed, composed of bishops, clergy and laymen and plans laid to appeal at once to the Church at large for $100,000 to finance the budget for one year, placing a secretary in each one of the forty-two larger camps. About this time Bishop Tuttle appointed the Church's War Commission, especially directed to co-ordinate all the work of the several organizations of the Church in order that there should be no duplication of effort, and that each might the more efficiently do that which it was best qualified by previous experience to accomplish. The Army and Navy Council of the Brotherhood was delegated to develop the laymen's side of the work in the military training camps. Its efforts have produced results far beyond the expectations of its most ardent supporters.

The task of securing men of consecration and ability to leave their homes and business and live with the men in the camps was fraught with much difficulty. Some said it could not be done and when the work which these men would be expected to do was announced others said even if you get the men they will not be able to accomplish it. But the day of the doubter and skeptic is past and every one who has had an opportunity to observe the work the Brotherhood secretaries are doing is satisfied that they are making it possible for the Church to keep closer in touch with her faithful sons who have obeyed their country's call. Through them the influence of the chaplains and clergy is largely increased and multiplied. Men who are allowing their faith to become dim and are falling away from the Church are brought back into active touch with their former religious life. Many who have never seriously considered their religious obligations are acknowledging their dependence on God and looking to Him for guidance and strength to fight their battles against sin in all its alluring forms. The unbaptized are being brought to Baptism and the unconfirmed to Confirmation. Moreover, all Churchmen are being led to receive with regularity the sacrament of the Holy Communion.

You say this sounds very well and is very wonderful work if true, but how can one man single-handed and alone in a camp of 40,000 men do more than personally touch an infinitesimally small number? How can he make his influence felt among so vast a multitude? The answer is simple and complete; it is because the Brotherhood is following the plant of the Master. His mandate was to go into all the world and teach the Gospel. It was because He taught the eleven disciples and sent them to teach others, that Christianity exists in the world today. What glorious progress has been made, notwithstanding the scoffer's claim that Christianity is dead. It was never more alive than it is today. Every civilized nation in the world is at present justifying every move it makes by an appeal to Christian standards of righteousness. No one now disputes the charge that we are our brother's keepers. And so the Brotherhood has proceeded in its work on the proven theory that God's Christian is the sort of a man who acknowledges and accepts his responsibility for the other fellow. If we would be Christians we must be missionaries. This is the sort of doctrine the Brotherhood secretary drives home in the hearts and minds of the men they meet. His business is to search out and confer with the earnest Christians in camp. Of course his touch is chiefly with Churchmen because he has a list of their names which have been furnished him by the headquarters office of the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood, but he is not limiting his contact to Episcopalians alone. Every man he is able to reach is reminded of his obligation to work for the Master. He is urged to seek out the other Churchmen and Christians in his company and, with them, form a personal worker's group. The first duty of this group is to see to it that their own individual lives are straight and clean. This cannot be accomplished by their individual strength and therefore they must realize that God is strength and power and they must call on Him through prayer and guidance and help. They must also know that their souls to be nourished must be fed through regularly partaking of the Holy Communion. The next duty of the group is to acknowledge and accept its responsibility for the other men in the company. Without being "sanctimonious" or assuming a "holier than thou" attitude they will be "faithful witnesses".

Does this plan work? you ask; is it not too ambitious in expecting too much of the men already overburdened with military duties? The true answers can only come from the men in the field—clergy and laymen—who have had an opportunity to test it in actual practice. The opinion is unanimous. It works. We have also received scores of letters from the men themselves testifying, without solicitation, that the plan is workable and pledging their co-operation.

This will give you some idea of the type of laymen needed to live in the camps to carry on this work. Men of consecration, of vision, of ability and above all a great love in their hearts for young men and a willingness to make substantial sacrifices for His sake. So far thirty-seven such men have answered the call, who will be numbered among the lucky thirteen yet to be selected.

Were is not for the scissors of THE CHURCHMAN'S censor we would like to go on and tell you in detail of the results that are being accomplished. A few instances must suffice for this time, reserving for a later article more of the encouraging stories we would like to tell you.

Two young divinity students, who enlisted, adopted the Brotherhood plan and by persistent effort succeeded in transforming, in a few weeks, their barracks from a place where profanity and obscene talk was the rule to where it is the rare exception. It was suggested to a key-man at Camp Dix that maybe the men at his mess would like to have grace said before meals. He replied that he had never thought of that but would ask the sergeant to put it to a vote of the men. When this was done at his request the men voted for it practically unanimously, with the result that now a blessing is always offered before the men sit down to the table. One group has succeeded in establishing the rule that the man who uses profane or indecent language shall receive an extra detail of washing kits after mess. Another writes us that their group is getting men to attend divine worship regularly, who have not been inside a church for years. A report just received from one of the Brotherhood secretaries tells us that one of the groups which he organized sought out and brought to him two men whom he was able to present to the local civilian chaplain as candidates for Confirmation. And so we might go on. It is glorious work.

Three Days at Camp Upton

By THE REV. CHARLES LEWIS SLATTERY, D.D.

BY invitation of the Young Men's Christian Association, I spent three days in December at Camp Upton. A good many years ago, when I passed the summer in the Canadian Rockies, I spent a week in Calgary to get the sensation of what was bound to be a great community coming into life. One could literally see the town grow in the midst of a wilderness. The same feeling came over me as I made my way on a cold December morning into what is really a city—a city of forty thousand men. The unpainted buildings look like shoe factories on the frontier, with here and there the neat, painted buildings which are called huts of the Y. M. C. A. Wagons and soldiers make the roads busy. One instantly had the impression of active order and intense purpose.

A Boston clergyman whom I had long known by reputation was a fellow guest at the Y. M. C. A. headquarters. We were both there to speak in various huts at the mid-week religious meetings planned by the secretaries; and we talked over together what we should say to the men.

On my first evening the secretary in charge began the service by the singing of hymns. The writing tables were crowded, and men were scattered upon the benches between. The singing was not very good, though the men themselves called for certain hymns. The secretary made an admirable prayer, and then introduced me. By the advice of the secretary and all the other workers, I made my address as religious as I knew how to make it, appealing for allegiance to Christ, asking that they know about Him through reading their Testaments, that they believe in Him, yield to Him, obey Him, and try to feel His presence. When I had finished, the secretary instantly asked assent by the raising of hands to the various points which I had made. To my amazement many hands were raised. When he asked how many had not Testaments, again the hands went up, and men came forward to receive them.

The next night, in another hut, the secretary, much younger, was of an entirely different type, but equally earnest and alert. The evergreens were grouped about the platform, and it was evident that Christmas was within a week. I think every seat was filled, and one could not have wished more attentive listeners. The secretary made the transition from smoking, letter-writing, and conversation, by beginning with songs of fellowship and patriotism, concluding with "Rock of Ages". The singing was exceedingly good. He then turned the meeting over to me. After the meeting, without my seeking it in any way, I had conversation with a number of the men. I was struck with the frank and wholesome outlook which these men revealed to me. One man told me that he always tried to come to the night service at Grace church, when he was near enough to do so.

During the time of my visit the Dominican monks were having a mission in the Knights of Columbus Hall. After the first of my own meetings, I dropped in to hear an excellent address by one of the fathers on The Sins of the Tongue. "I would like to remind ye", said the preacher, "of a certain common expression, 'Swear like a trooper'. I don't wish to insult ye, but I'd just like to have ye think it over". After denouncing the sin of bad stories, he made his way towards the denunciation of slander by saying, "There are some true things that ye have no right to repeat; for instance, ye may know something that isn't at all to me credit, but ye have no right to tell it." There was no doubt that his words struck home and did much good. The service closed with a hymn, the beauty of which was marked, as the kneeling soldiers sang it.

On another evening, in passing by the great central hall, I heard the playing of a band, and looked in through the glass door. The hall was crowded, but the door was unlocked by a soldier who asked if I wanted to come in. I found it was filled with one of the regiments. The colonel was just announcing that the generous friend who had supplied pianos for the regiment was giving a pipe, tobacco, and candy to every member of the regiment. "He is a shy man", said the colonel; "but if you give him three times three, and call for 'Joe', I think he may speak to you". After a bit of wild excitement, when many hats must have been lost as they went up into the top of the building and down again, "Joe" appeared upon the stage, and with fine modesty said, "I have done nothing; you are making the sacrifice and doing everything; and I am not going to spoil it with words". Whereupon the shouting and the tossing of hats became wilder still. I moved on, because I felt that I did not belong to the family, and must not intrude; but in the minute or two I stayed, I had the impression of a real family life, with the colonel at the head of his men having in these few weeks won their affection, introducing Santa Claus to his children on their festival night.

One afternoon an officer of the Y. M. C. A. took my brother parson and me to see one of the soldiers' mess-rooms and the barracks. There was in everything the suggestion of readiness for life in a foreign camp. We followed companies of soldiers marching out into the open fields and had the pleasure of seeing a tank in action. It made its way over trenches, mowed down the trees as if they had been weeds, and was embarrassed by no other obstacles. In the officers' mess, where I ate, a captain told me that he had been talking with the English captain who was in charge of the tank, and who had been over the top, I think he said, eight times. He had asked the Englishman how he exercised his office as captain of a tank. When he answered that each captain was in charge of several tanks, the American asked how he went from one to another in a battle. "Oh", said the Englishman, "one would, of course, like a runabout; but, as a matter of fact, one walks".

From those who had a right to speak from experience, I learned that the men feel the risk which is before them, but that, though there is seriousness, there is no morbidness, rather a sort of joyful determination each to do his part in the cause, the righteousness of which is every day more clear. As I went through the streets of the camp, seeing the Y. M. C. A. huts every fourth block; as I saw the great central hall, the Knight of Columbus building, the Jewish building, and the common church now being erected, I felt how impossible it is to escape the care which the moral and religious forces of the nation are throwing about the soldiers for their protection and inspiration. And as I saw the faces of both officers and men, in every way far above the average of the faces one meets in any city street, however prosperous, I knew that the response to this higher leadership is real. I came away from Camp Upton with a new hope for my country and a new trust in the men who are making ready valiantly to defend it.

A Prayer for All we Love

ALMIGHTY God, give us grace to trust to Thy never-failing care and love those who are dear to us, for this life and the life to come; knowing that Thou art doing for them better things than we can desire or pray for; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Church War Commission will assist parishes near cantonments. $50,000 is needed for this purpose. Great camps of 40,000 soldiers are sometimes set alongside a village or small town. The parish church is naturally overwhelmed. The Church through the War Commission must come to the rescue; we must help the Bishop give the rectors of those churches assistance.

What the C. P. C. Did for One Chaplain

By MARY E. THOMAS

"COLONEL," said the chaplain to the commanding officer, "I see that the battalion has vacated that barracks around the corner. Would it be possible to assign it for a recreation hall? The men need such a gathering place." "The room is at your service, chaplain", was the prompt reply, "but how do you propose to provide equipment?" "Leave that to me", said the chaplain, "the Church Periodical Club has already sent me books and magazines, and has offered other material. With its help I think I can secure what is needed."

In this wise did the —— Infantry become possessed of a recreation room that is the joint expression of the initiative of its chaplain and the response of the Church Periodical Club. The chaplain knew what he wanted and made known his requests with military definiteness; his own interest and enthusiasm aroused a like spirit in those to whom his appeal was made. Books and magazines arrived and continue to arrive from C. P. C. branches in many dioceses. The general Committee on Chaplains' Welfare Work supplied games and lantern slides, not only of familiar hymns and patriotic songs, but of religious and historical paintings, while writing materials were sent by one who had herself known many years of garrison life as the wife of an army chaplain.

As the regiment filled up to war strength, the chaplain discovered men who had had little or no opportunity for even the most elementary education. He started a school. Would the C. P. C. send books for reading, spelling, geography, American history and French? The C. P. C. would and did. The room seemed bare with nothing on the walls. How about pictures of our own great men and the colored reproductions of scenes from American history appearing in one of the women's magazines? They would give unconscious training in intelligent patriotism. Most of the pictures were found in one diocesan office, and a Southern officer gladly added the portrait of General Lee to complete the list of "our great men".

Put in touch with one of the best of the good fairies whom the C. P. C. counts among its members, the chaplain found a friend, indeed. What has she not done for him! New books and magazines, curtains made according to specification for the twenty-three windows, paper napkins for Thanksgiving dinner decorated with the regimental title, and knitted garments for his men. She feels now as if she had adopted the whole regiment. The subtle compulsion to give the chaplain whatever he wants is shown in the case of one C. P. C. worker who was inclined to scoff at the request for good artificial flowers to brighten the tables, but who returned in an hour or two and exhibited somewhat shamefacedly a bunch of very good-looking poinsettias. Is it any wonder that the chaplain writes: "The men are most devoted to the games, and many an hour otherwise spent in idleness or worse has been occupied in the delights of the games and in reading your books and writing letters home on your tablets, transcribed with your pencils. As a result of your most generous contributions I am able to say that with room, reading matter, games, etc., I am the most fortunate and best equipped chaplain in the army".

Let no one conclude from the foregoing that every chaplain should be provided immediately with portraits and poinsettias. It simply illustrates the cardinal principle of the C. P. C., the principle of personal service to meet individual needs. Just now many chaplains want nothing that the C. P. C. can give, but such requests as are made should meet with prompt response. If a chaplain at the front asks for copies of the Old Testament because the men with whom he talks want the whole Bible, let us send them to him promptly. If another writes that the books he took over are almost worn out, should we not see that he has a fresh supply? When a chaplain calls up the central committee at nine-thirty and asks that reading matter be at the transport dock by twelve, there should be suitable material to send. When Bishop McCormick, our War bishop in France, emphasizes the need for picture puzzles, should we not get out our jig saws or scissors and set about making them?

Other special requests reach the C. P. C. through the very co-operative Army and Navy department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Here is the commanding officer of a small detachment who is thankful for any printed page, new or old, they are so entirely without reading matter; another in the commissary department would be helped by a regular copy of Table Talk, and a third wants "a history of the Episcopal Church". All simple, reasonable requests. Should not the C. P. C. be enabled to meet them? This can be done by the whole Church working together.

The Arrow

By WM. REED HUNTINGTON

ATHWART a clearing edged with densest yew,
An arrow speeds. I note its instant flight
From dark to dark, from night again to night.
But the grim forest, barring out the view,
To whence or whither gives nor hint nor clew,
Only against that stinted space of light
The swift intruder flashes into sight,
Then leaves unflecked the still, far wall of blue.

Even so the soul: Across a bounded span
Observed it fleets, then out of ken is fled.
"Into the world," they cry, "is born a man!"
Again a cry, "Alas, the man is dead."
Yet make I bold, when all is done and said,
To trust the Archer. Hath He not a plan?

The Church and the Camp

need to fear for the fate of the Church. Men who have touched reality, as men do who play with death and suffering for the sake of an ideal, are going to be not very patient with an organization which emphasizes shibboleths and is overfond of the trappings of religion. And it is only as the Church today shows itself to be of use as the purveyor of a religion that makes men better able to serve and serve in a better way, with a clearer vision, only as she loses her life in such effort, will she keep it after this war is over.

A Buffalo man has painted a poster for the Red Cross which is striking. A Red Cross nurse and a soldier stand side by side, while back of them is a wooden cross with the figure of Christ dimly outlined upon it. Underneath are the words, "Help them to bear their Cross". And how can the Church help better than by making nurse and soldier conscious that back of them is Christ bearing His cross, which is also their cross. For this world will be safe for democracy only when men know and love the God of Jesus Christ, the Founder of Democracy.

Some Soldiers' Letters

By THE RT. REV. CHARLES FISKE, D.D.

BELOW are several letters from soldiers who have written me, as their Bishop in Central New York. They are merely samples of scores of letters which I have received from men in the Army and Navy and are selected because of the light they throw on the character of our citizen soldiers.

I have been keeping a list of all the men in the diocese who are in service, so far as I have been able to secure their names, and to every man attached to any of the parishes in my care have sent a personal letter, worded in a friendly spirit that invites and encourages a response. This letter has brought almost 200 replies and in some cases has led to extended correspondence. All sorts of matters have been dealt with. I have had messages to forward, words of thanks to send to the Red Cross, and in one case a man made what was practically a confession and asked for counsel and advice. Such letters would indicate that men everywhere, in and out of the service, respond quickly to friendliness and are hungry for real pastoral interest.

Some half dozen men have written plainly of morals and two have asked for help in combating the low views of others in their companies. Naturally, such letters are too confidential for publication. They do not, of course, reflect upon the Army or Navy, nor do they indicate a condition worse than that in civil life. They simply reveal fully and frankly the actual moral opinions and practices of men in more open speech than the clergyman usually hears.

Other letters have given vivid if somewhat crude pictures of camp life. Like George Ade's young woman, who "was a sloppy dresser, but she had a good heart", the men are not skilled in literary expression, but they show the finest of spirit and their letters have been useful to their bishop in many ways. It may be assumed, of course, that those who write are the more serious-minded and conscientious of the men, though I have had many letters from country boys who write just because, apparently, they are a little homesick or lonely, and a letter from me has meant something to them. This, of course, because the letter was a personal one; not merely a printed circular, but typed and signed.

To begin with the ordinary type of correspondence, purely friendly in spirit, here is an extract from the letter of a regular who is with the Expeditionary Force in France. His unit is probably quartered in a village where, to use the vernacular, there is "nothing doing", in the way of the usual amusements, but as the earlier part of the letter shows that he is within sound of the guns there is "richness" in the closing paragraph:

"Well, I must close, as it is time for me to study my French lesson, and then there is nothing to write about anyhow, as this is the quietest place I have ever been in, believe me. So hoping these few lines will find you well, as they leave me in the best of health, except for a wisdom tooth that is about to arrive, with the best wishes for a Merry Xmas and a Happy New Year.

"Yours truly.

Quite different in type is this note from a young reserve officer whom I confirmed just before his departure:

"I want to say that I am ashamed that I was not confirmed before. I did not know that my example would mean so much, especially to boys, and I suppose I never got down to tackling the whole subject seriously. I am glad I came, though I hated to do it just at the last minute like that, and it made me feel conspicuous and nervous. What fetched me was two little books by W. J. Carey that the rector loaned me*; also your own book. I wish more of the clergy had them to hand around, or better yet, to learn how to preach straight like that themselves. Nobody "ragged" me about joining the Church. The men you know respect you for belonging, even if they don't join themselves."

Another letter, from a regular army captain, a young man whom I confirmed, has this sentence: "I am sorry I put this off so long", and adds that had he known how much it would please his mother he would have been confirmed years ago. Then he continues: "I think that a soldier's religion ought to mean that he fears God—and nothing else."

Here, by way of contrast, is a letter from a private at Spartanburg, which shows a manly religion expressed with simple sincerity:

"I want to thank you, Bishop, for your letter, and to say that it means a lot to us men that you are thinking of us and praying for us. Tell everyone you talk to that the Y. M. C. A. is fine. God knows what we would do without it. We have here three priests of our Church, _____, _____ and _____, in Y. M. C. A. work, and two of our ministers you know are chaplains. The fellows all like them well.

"I have been a member of the National Guard since 1904, and of course I came, I wouldn't stay out if I could. I am willing to give my time, and, if necessary, my life, that God's righteousness may prevail on earth. The thing that makes it hard is when I think of my dear wife and little girls. Then I say my prayers and ask God to bring us home safe; but I know that we can't all come back, so I always say, 'Thy will, O God, be done, not mine'. It is hard to say it, but I always do.

"I thank God my dear parents taught me to say my prayers and to receive Communion regular. I guess a good many men have never been taught how to pray; they would be glad to pray, but nobody ever showed them how to pray. Every father and mother ought to do what my parents did for me, when they taught me to say my prayers and go to church and to Communion regularly and not to miss my Church any more than I would miss going to work regular. I am not what I ought to be, but if I did not go to Communion every month I would be a worse man than I am. The Y. M. C. A. is all right and I say, God bless it, but when a man is up against it he wants the old Prayer Book and the Holy Communion."

Almost by the same mail—probably because the chaplain had held a Communion service, largely attended, at Christmas—came another letter, with this paragraph:

"I felt like a new man, after I took Communion, and I am thankful Mr. _____, one of our rectors, is here to give us the Sacrament. He is a fine man. I don't know how you will like it put this way, Bishop, but I think ministers should teach their people to 'get the habit'. I mean, say your prayers, go to church and take Communion. I think we ought to have sermons just to tell us plain things like that we ought to do and to explain in a plain way what we ought to believe. We had a dandy sermon here the Sunday before we got our pay that made the men sit up and think."

All of the men speak in the highest praise of the Y. M. C. A., which gives them just what they need in the way of hospitality and a meeting place. Now and then there is a discordant note, as in this from an old regular Army sergeant:

A Prayer for Chaplains

O GOD, give grace and power, we beseech Thee, to the ministers of Thy Word in all fleets and armies; inspire them with patience, kindness, and wisdom, that they may reveal to those whom they serve that in all times and in all places Thou carest for them; through Jesus Christ our Saviour. Amen.

*These were: Have You Understood Christianity? and Prayer and Some of Its Difficulties.

"I will do all I can to meet the men you mentioned in your letter, but am afraid I will not meet very many of them, as the Y. M. C. A. is a place I seldom ever go to." In explanation it should be said that in former days some of the soldiers regarded the Y. M. C. A. as a religious institution, run by men who seemed to consider it one of their chief missions to set forward an anti-smoking crusade and discourage the purchase of tobacco. The men who are in the work now are not men of that type, but are a manly, upstanding, liberal-minded lot, who feel that they are receiving as much as they give, in their intercourse with the men, and are learning while they teach. And some of the ministerial visitors are also learning—the kind of minister, who once ranked smoking as only second to "booze" in the list of deadly sins and is now having his eyes opened to the good in men who are not over-pious. Meanwhile, when they have once "caught on", such men are themselves growing accustomed to feel at ease while they preach a straight talk on fundamental morality in an atmosphere where men have puffed out cigarette smoke, to the near-suffocation of the parson, only a short time before. Hardly a letter fails to speak of the good work of the Christian Association and more than one uses the same expression, "God knows what we would do without it". Almost all speak particularly of those of our own clergy who are chaplains—always as appreciating the man as a man, though occasionally showing deeper "Church feeling" and gratitude or pride at the fact that one of their own clergy is with them.

In my own visits to the camps (at Syracuse, Sackets Harbor, Fort Niagara, etc.) I have found the men of a fine type, earnest and sometimes serious minded. After preaching I have had boys from the country come and sit near me, shy and silent, but evidently anxious to get into conversation. Several times they have told me all about their own church at home (usually Methodist, or Baptist, or "Christian", in the case of boys from the country) and their pastor, etc. Whenever any of the boys have women visitors, you will see some of these shy, retiring fellows move up and sit near them, evidently getting a little comfort, in their loneliness, from the mere fact that there are women around.

From Spartanburg one boy who had been baptized by the chaplain wrote himself (and that took a lot of courage for him) to ask if the Bishop could confirm him when he came home on furlough during the holidays. At Wellsburg I confirmed a young soldier whose case is especially interesting. He was a National Guardsman, on guard duty there before going into camp. One of our faithful laymen became interested in him, brought him to church, and afterward when Chaplain Jaynes arranged for his baptism at Spartanburg (he was an unbaptized Baptist) this layman traveled all the way South to stand as a witness at the service. This lad also was confirmed while on furlough and took half his holiday to travel to Wellsburg, where his friend lived, to be presented in the class there. Finally, here is a letter from a young Greek, which shows that the war is making a loyal and united nation out of peoples of many kindreds and tongues. The man had been enroled as a communicant in one of the smaller parishes of the diocese. He wrote:

"My dear Sir and Reverend Father in God:

"Your favor reached me in due time and I was pleased to hear from you. I do love to get letters, no matter what or where it comes from, and I like much getting a letter from my Bishop. I have no one in this country to care for me, and it makes me really homesick when I don't get any letters to read or write; but I have a large number of friends in B——— and they really think of me. I think, like my own father and mother, and Rector C——— called on me three times when I was home for Christmas.

"We have been having very cold weather here and I have been on guard duty. While on guard all night I pray for the Red Cross women, for God bless them. They give me sweater, helmet and heavy socks. We got good clothes, but some would not be warm but for Red Cross. Otherwise I would freeze to death.

"Well, my officer ask me New Year's morning if I want to go to France or stay here. Of course, I answer, I will go anywhere the country wants me. Now we receive many new modern guns and all new outfit clothing and expect in near future we will move from here to France. I pray to Almighty God to give us a great and brave spirit against our enemies and to come home victorious in the way our forefathers done for liberty and democracy before us.

"As for me, I am very proud that I am an American soldier. As a Greek, my forefathers fought for liberty and democracy for thousand years, but I am an American soldier and I love the country I am in and I want to develop to a good soldier.

"Believe me

"Your faithful friend and son, ever,

Mission of the Church in the War

By THE RT. REV. JAMES DEWOLF PERRY, JR., D. D.

THE Church and the Nation have one purpose in common. It is to win the War. The victory for which we are praying and preparing will, however, be more than a military triumph. "Munitions will win the War." True; but force of arms will be the instrument of another Power that sometimes disregards "the strongest battalions".

"Food will win the War." True again, and important for every loyal citizen to heed. Yet conservation of food will serve best to measure a people's power of self-control. It is because the issues at stake are ultimately spiritual that the Church has the sacred responsibility of making clear to herself and to the world the cause for which the War is waged and the purpose short of which it shall not stop. For the realization of this object the religious forces of a whole people are to be enlisted. The sacred principles which we are defending at the cost of life and treasure have their sanction and support in the faith of the Church.

But the mission of the Church in the War cannot end there. It must find expression in the heart of the soldier and the sailor. For the task in which they are engaged these men need more than physical preparation. They must be rendered spiritually fit. This is the reason for the presence of the Church in camp and battleship and trench. Whatever other agencies may have been organized and equipped for the material, social and moral well-being of our fighting men, the Church will stand among them in personal ministrations and sacraments, by spoken word and silent sympathy, bearing witness to the Power which alone can keep them true to their cause and strong to maintain it. The final strength of a man is his will. The will can be purified and fortified against the supreme test only by Jesus Christ and His Spirit.

For Soldiers

O HOLY Spirit, who sufferest me to be tempted that I may be strong; Take from my heart all self-pity and excuses; enlighten my mind with thy vision of purity and honor and love; and give to my whole being the power so to fight my besetting sin that, though I be scarred, I may win the victory of my Master, Jesus Christ; to whom with thee and the Father be all the loyalty of my life for ever and ever. Amen.

War Work in the Church Schools

By THE REV. LESTER BRADNER, D.D.

ARE the Church schools, or, as we once called them, the Sunday Schools, helping to speed up the home support of our army and navy? They certainly are, all over the country. Figures are not yet at hand, but the schools are at work. Not all of them are working as schools. In many cases the members of the Sunday class perform their week-day patriotic service through the public school, or the scout patrol, or the parish guild or club. Others are using the system suggested by the new Junior Auxiliary plan, whereby the school meets in grade or department groups on weekdays. After all, it matters little how the work is done, so long as it gets done.

There is a zeal and willing self-sacrifice about the work which are notable. School after school has gone without candy or gifts at Christmas in order to apply the money to causes which the war has brought into the foreground. The neglected child-life in the devastated areas has had a tremendous appeal. Christmas Eve is a fairly busy day on which most regular engagements are avoided in favor of a freer time. But when the question arose in one Church school group whether the regular session for patriotic work, which happened to fall on Christmas Eve, should be put over there was instant objection. One child voiced the thoughts of many as she said: "The children in Belgium and France don't stop being cold because it's the day before Christmas, so why should we stop working?"

It would be very difficult to sum up what the schools have accomplished in food conservation. It is a field in which it is especially easy and at the same time valuable to secure the co-operation of children. Small self-denials, frequently repeated, are the best possible means of building up the exercise of self-restraint for the common good. It is fair to assume that much valuable education has been imparted to Church children along the lines of food conservation.

The movement for patriotic service in the Church schools began last summer, when the General Board of Religious Education sent out a call, asking, first of all, the observance of the Sunday nearest the Fourth of July as "Patriotic Sunday", and later furnishing a definite graded program of war-work activities, suitable for the different ages in the Church school. This program was widely distributed all over the Church and copies are still to be had from the Board.

What can a school do to make itself useful along these lines? It is not in the least difficult to find occupation. Boys may make trench candles, scrap books for hospitals, collect literature or games to be forwarded to chaplains through the Church Periodical Club. They may write letters to individual soldiers in the camps, or keep them supplied with parish or local papers. They may organize a messenger service for the parish, to be called on for all parish co-operation in war work, or in ministering to families of soldiers and sailors. Again, under careful leadership, they may take part in campaigns and drives of various sorts. The boys of one Church school succeeded in selling $46,000 worth of Liberty bonds. Other groups raised money to support the work of the Church at camps in their vicinity. Oftentimes the boys will lay out their own program, based on local circumstances, and make it an effective one, too.

With the girls, knitting is universal, as well as sewing of hospital supplies, and the older ones render effective service under direction of the Red Cross, making surgical dressings, bandages, etc. Some are taking courses in home nursing and in dietetics. Here and there troops of Girl Scouts are assisting in various community enterprises of a patriotic nature, ready to be called on at a moment's notice. In the neighborhood of camps they assist in serving Church suppers to the visiting "boys" from the camp. Yes, the girls are responding usefully and generously in hundreds of ways.

Something should be said, too, of the very widespread interest in the Relief Fund for the Armenian and Syrian sufferers. For this, in a way, is war work of a very practical sort. Through the General Board a call was sent out for a Christmas offering for this object from every school in the Church. Hundreds of schools responded to this appeal. The cheques are still flowing in, and the total amount given, now over $3,500, is steadily mounting. Many a small school found a new impetus for generosity in the thought of helping these homeless and starving children in Bible Lands. One rector, sending $5.00, writes: "My school is very small, but they have never before given so large an amount to any appeal."

What is it going to mean? Shall we count merely the money raised, or the sweaters and wristlets supplied, or the candles made, or any other total of objects furnished? No, the result is something far greater than any of these. Never before in the history of religious education has there been an opportunity like this for training a new generation in the true self-sacrifice of citizenship. Never before has there been a chance for doing such small things as boys and girls are able to do and making them all count in a great national movement which is as much for the Kingdom of God as it is for democracy. The motive which we are cultivating in the lives and emotions of these young people is by far the greatest factor in the case. Never in all their lives, if we who are in command do our work rightly, will they forget what it means, what it feels like, to give for their country, and for their community, and for the common good of all. We are imparting a definite "set" to their Christian characters, by an actual experience suitable to their ages, toward a social expression of Christian faith. The Church of tomorrow in which these

A Boy's Prayer

O GOD, give me clean hands, clean words, clean thoughts. Help me to stand for the hard right against the easy wrong. Save me from habits that harm. Teach me to work as hard, and to play as fair, in Thy sight alone, as though all the world saw me. Keep me ready always to help others even at some cost to myself; and send me chances every day to do a little good, and so grow more like Christ. Amen.

Fortitude

By MALTBIE D. BABCOCK

Be strong!

WE are not here to play, to dream, to drift;
We have hard work to do, and loads to lift.
Shun not the struggle, face it, 'tis God's gift.

Be strong!

Say not the days are evil—who's to blame?
And fold thy hands and acquiesce—Oh, shame!
Stand up, speak out, and bravely, in God's name!

Be strong!

It matters not how deep intrenched the wrong,
How hard the battle goes, the day how long;
Faint not, fight on! To-morrow comes the song.

The Church Mission of Help

By LAURETTE EUSTIS PEASE

OUT of the upheaval of social conditions born of the War has come to the Nation at large a quickening of the social conscience. In the face of thousands of our young men, uprooted from the protecting habits of home and settled traditions and flung into the melting pot of the Nation's need, people are being startled into an awareness of the problems of youth.

This new spirit abroad is a challenge to those of us who are already, by the nature of our work, alive to the problem of youth's exposure and, although the Church Mission of Help is handicapped by a limited force of workers and the obligations of a task already undertaken, yet we are convinced of the essential wisdom of not counting too closely the cost where the gain is service and the wider vision born of surrender for common ends.

Since October we have been represented on the Consultation Committee of the Red Cross Home Service and on the Mayor's Committee, to which we have also given two volunteers, and have turned over to the Girls' Friendly Society the notes of an investigation made in Westchester County during the late summer. Because of the limited force at our command and the necessity we were under of not neglecting our own work of protection and rescue, we contented ourselves with this small contribution. But with the wearing on of the months the feeling grew that however much our normal work was in its essence war work, yet the need to take a definite part in the new measures being planned was not to be denied. When in October the War Commission of the Church asked us for a statement on our possible contribution if called on for war service, we offered some trained visitors of our staff for work in the neighborhood of the camps.

This offer was accepted. At a meeting of our Board of Directors in November the Commission, through Bishop Perry, agreed to finance 50 per cent. of the salaries of three such workers in any field chosen by the society. New Jersey was selected as one objective and in January a meeting under Bishop Matthews was held in Princeton to discuss the placing of a Church Mission of Help worker in the towns near Camp Dix. A Woman's Committee on War Work was formed, composed of the heads of the various Church societies and other women prominent in the diocese. The committee agreed to employ the Church Mission for Help for its rescue work in the neighborhood of the camp.

The committee hopes to raise the remaining 50 per cent. of the worker's salary and her travelling expenses, so that we may put our visitor in the field before many weeks are passed. Should this first experiment prove successful we plan to place a second visitor at a camp, either in New Jersey or Long Island, to co-operate with all other agencies, Church or lay, that are working for the protection of girls.

But the workers are to go as workers from the Church Mission of Help. Great as is the need for co-operation the society feels that the work should be done in the name of the Church. Our appeal is to Church men and women to recognize the work as theirs. We cannot finance our worker alone, for her place at home must be filled in order that our work may not suffer, but assisted by those who believe with us that in this Nation-wide movement to safeguard the youth of the country is the Church's great opportunity, we purpose to go out in the name of the Master.

For Purity

O LORD JESUS CHRIST, Redeemer of our race; Grant unto us, men and women, so rightly to understand our relations to one another and to Thee that we may abide in perfect purity of heart and life; and may also instruct and strengthen Thy little ones to resist the corruption that is in the world, that they may attain at last to Thy glorious kingdom of light and love; who, with the Father and the Holy Ghost, livest and reignest, one God, world without end. Amen.

War Problems and Social Service

By THE REV. FRANK MONROE CROUCH

WHEN America entered the war it was obvious that problems would arise which though outside the scope of its charter, yet were germane to the task of the Joint Commission. With these we have not hesitated to deal.

In May, 1917, was issued the first of a special series of War Service Bulletins, urging upon the Church the claims for assistance of the various "stricken fields". Some contributions were received directly by the Commission; others went straight to the agencies indicated. A "certified" list of one hundred "reputable" war relief agencies was sent out, together with information concerning such agencies as had "sermon material", lantern slides, etc. A War Service Program for the Church, also issued before the appointment of the Church War Commission, called attention to the Church's obligations to aid war sufferers at home and abroad; to safeguard the health and morality of the Nation's manhood in military training camps; to conserve the Nation's food; to maintain the present industrial and educational standards; to promote the equitable distribution of the costs of war by prevention of excessive profits; and to safeguard the ideals and institutions of democracy in our own land.

The third of the Commission's War Service Bulletins (July, 1917) urged the co-operation of provincial and diocesan commissions in attacking, in co-operation with governmental and voluntary agencies, local churches, and army chaplains, the three-fold problem of vice, intemperance, and gambling, and in enabling the soldiers-in-training to use their leisure time profitably and wholesomely. In this connection the secretary of the Commission visited several training camps in the East and South, and met representatives of organizations engaged in this work.

The Commission, in co-operation with the U. S. Food Administration and on the direct request of the Church War Commission, undertook the enlistment of the Church in the seven weeks' Conservation Campaign (November 11-December 30). Many responses were received to the circular letter sent in the Commission's name from the Washington office of the Food Administration, and the parishes throughout the country have apparently widely participated in the campaign—some having enlisted nearly 100 per cent. of their membership.

Even more pressing than the problem of our soldiers and sailors is that of our 30,000,000 industrial workers, on whose willing efforts our military success ultimately depends. We must not forget the men undergoing or about to undergo, hardship, suffering, and death on land and sea; nor may we ignore similar hardship, suffering, and death which are visited, under well-known working conditions, on our soldiers of industry. Especially must we be concerned with the (Continued on page 109)

The War Emergency Work of the G. F. S. A.

By EDITH M. HADLEY

FORTY years ago, in one of the southern counties of England, the Bishop of Winchester called a meeting for the purpose of organizing a society for rescue work. While listening to the discussions a young woman of keen intelligence and broad vision raised the question of the possibility of organizing a society for preventive and protective work among the girls of the land to conserve the purity of womanhood. The Archbishop of Canterbury endorsed and supported the movement, and the society was organized in Lambeth palace in May, 1874.

This was the inception of the Girls' Friendly Society, its first nucleus a handful of girls gathered together from the surrounding hillsides in a cottage on a lonely heath for work, while an older woman read aloud to them. But the society outgrew the little group on the heath, and when the girls were obliged to leave their homes, because of labor conditions, it followed them into towns where they had gone to work in factories, to cities where they were employed in shops and offices; when they traveled it followed them with station cards directing them where they should go, and gave them letters to friends; it built boarding houses for them, which it called by the old Brotherhood name of Lodges, and Holiday Houses where they could spend their vacations, and it followed them across the sea to America, where the methods, activities and atmosphere were changed to meet the requirements of a more democratic land, but where the principles and ideals remained the same. The basic principle is friendship—fellowship, the ideal, upbuilding of character by the practice of purity, duty, faithfulness and thrift. For forty years the society has been teaching the girls of our land these objects, and in the year 1917, 51,755 girls and women, the membership of this society in the United States, have been emphasizing these ideals. Now that the Government and the Church have asked the Girls' Friendly Society what it will do for our country at this time, we can only answer that we will do what we have always done, only more—we will do our utmost.

War work in several dioceses was started in the Spring of 1917, and the War Emergency Committee of the Girls' Friendly Society in America was organized in October, its program was submitted to and endorsed by its Central Council and by the War Commission of the Church, and work is actively under way in various parts of the United States. The plan of work falls naturally under three heads: (1) Organizing girls' work in cantonment cities and in communities in the vicinity of camps; opening headquarters. (2) Supervising the housing and recreation in connection with munition and other war provisioning factories. (3) Establishing new lodges, cafeterias and rest rooms.

Organizing girls' work has been started in the vicinities of the aero training station at Mt. Clemens, Michigan; Camp Devens, Massachusetts; Jefferson Barracks, Missouri; Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio, and Fort Slocum and Pelham Bay in Westchester county. Intensive surveys of work for girls have been made in the Middle West, in the diocese of Newark, in Westchester county, in New York, and in Burlington county in New Jersey, and field secretaries have been engaged to spend all their time in places where especial protection is needed, until work is established. Patriotic Leagues have been promoted, with "follow up" work, community centres have been opened in Washington and San Francisco, and war service headquarters in Chicago and New York.

In the Spring of 1917 it was learned that two aeroplane factories were to be established in Elizabeth, New Jersey, which would bring into the town throngs of girls to work. The Girls' Friendly Society started an investigation as to housing conditions for them, which were found to be totally inadequate. Through the arousing of community interest, and help from the War Emergency Committee, a lodge is to be opened which will house a few of this army of girls, who have invaded Elizabeth, and it is hoped and planned that the housing and recreation of the others may be supervised by this committee. Work has also been started in Dover, in the diocese of Newark, where girls are employed in the munitions factory.

For the last ten years one of the most important pieces of work undertaken by the Girls' Friendly Society in America has been the housing of girls. The G. F. S. lodge in New York City was the first of a chain of lodges which now extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast. The policy of these houses is to provide for the girls as comfortable a home as care and thought can give them, to give them the best that can be had for the money they have to spend, and to make the houses entirely self-supporting, i.e., to carry themselves, after the first initial expense of starting. The G. F. S. lodge in New York was thrown open on New Year's day for an old-fashioned New Year's party, and seventy-five young sailors came to the dance in the evening. Since the War, the girls in the San Francisco lodge have overflowed into apartments next door; the lodge is now a community centre and a "recruiting station" for the girls of the Patriotic League, who have formed themselves into trade units of the league.

In Washington a new lodge has been opened as a war measure, and a happy home created for some of the girls who have flocked to Washington for work. Sunday afternoons this lodge entertains soldiers and sailors, and tea is served to all who come. The society has a secretary in the Business Woman's Exchange, who keeps lists of good boarding houses for girls; but the congestion in Washington has outgrown all comfort, and is so great that we are hoping, as a national organization, through our War Emergency Committee, to go to the relief of some of the girls by starting cafeterias and rest rooms.

The work of the G. F. S. A. will in no way conflict with or duplicate the work of other organizations. We hope to co-operate with the Y. W. C. A., as we have already done and are doing, where we may be mutually helpful. We have worked with and under the direction of the Federal Commission, and, so far as we are able, we will co-operate with the Church Mission of Help. First and last our work must be for girls, for all girls, for their health and fitness, for their moral well-being and spiritual growth, and this directly touches the boys and men of our country, the winning of the War and the future of our beloved land.

To Our Girls

By AMELIA JOSEPHINE BURR

OUR country gives the young men she has treasured
To suffer—and to die, perhaps—for you.
By God's own standard let your gifts be measured
And to their highest hold your champions true.
To keep our country free, our children fearless,
Our women clean, they face the hell of war.
Arm them with memories pure to courage peerless—
Give them a womanhood worth dying for!

The Sky Pilot Afloat

By THE REV. ALBERT C. LARNED

A GREAT deal is written in these days about the Army and Navy; and articles on these subjects are read with keen interest by thousands who have husbands, brothers, sons in the service. In the interest that is felt for our soldiers and sailors, and for the new life which so many are called upon to live in order that the world may be made safe for democracy, and that Christian civilization may be preserved for all times, it is often asked what provision does the Government make for the spiritual welfare of her sons. As far as the Navy is concerned I am glad to have an opportunity to set before the public the important work of a United States Naval Chaplain in war time. I must, however, ask my colleagues in the service who have held commissions in the Navy much longer than I to pardon a National Naval Volunteer for taking upon himself the task of setting forth a description of that magnificent work, all too little known by the public, which constitutes the life of a "Sky Pilot" afloat under the Stars and Stripes. For whatever your son may be the Church follows after him in the person of the chaplain afloat or ashore, at home or abroad; "somewhere" at sea, or "somewhere" in France.

There is a department of the naval service that receives too little attention from the public because it is too little known. It consists of clergymen of various denominations, some of whom are permanently attached to the Service, others of whom have come in for the duration of the war, giving up in many cases good positions ashore in order to "do their bit."

When war was declared in April the Naval Militia was called into the service of the United States and became part of the regular Navy. The chaplains of the various State naval militia organizations were taken into the service as National Naval Volunteers and assigned to various stations as the Navy Department saw fit. The militia units were broken up, and a chaplain of the Maine Naval Militia would be put on a ship consisting mostly of regular enlisted men, with several militia officers of another State. Although several new chaplains were thus added to the service the sad fact still remained that there were not enough to man every ship in the Navy, and many ships, even large battleships, were without an officer of religion—a condition now happily improved. The position of a chaplain on a ship in the Navy is the position of a staff officer with the rank assigned him according to his length of service in the regular Navy, or the rank given him by his State naval militia. Thus a chaplain's rank can vary from that of lieutenant of the junior grade to that of captain. He has a stateroom given to him, and he has his meals with the ward-room mess. He wears an officer's uniform, with black braid instead of gold to show his rank, and a cross on the collar in place of an anchor. He carries no sword.

While the chaplain is a commissioned officer and receives the customary courtesies due his rank he is in the position of close contact and friendship with the crew. No other officer is so closely associated with the men, and the chaplain is regarded as a real friend and adviser by the men. Aside from his religious duties he has a very important place to fill in the welfare of the ship's company, and much depends on his tact and interest. As a social welfare officer he must be regardless of denominational differences and treat all men alike. His office is open to all, and there he receives all kinds of visitors wanting help, advice or reading matter.

As far as the chaplain's religious duties are concerned he has a free hand. The Navy does not compel attendance at church but encourages it, and the chaplain can hold any kind of a service he wants. If he is a Roman Catholic he will have a mass for his co-religionists, and a general service for the ship's company. I myself have the Holy Communion every Sunday at 5:30 a. m. in the Admiral's cabin, and the "General Service" on the gun deck at ten for "all hands," being a shortened form of the Episcopal service for Morning Prayer. The singing is very hearty at this service, and the band furnishes an excellent orchestra. Bible classes, private interviews, and confessions can be arranged at different times during the week.

The Navy regulations require the chaplain to visit frequently the sick bay. This is a wise provision, for it is there in the ship's hospital that often the chaplain can get to know a man that he could know in no other way. Bibles and Testaments are much appreciated by the sick, and the men are glad to receive them. So too the "brig" or ship's prison furnishes the chaplain with a special opportunity to help men in trouble and to make them realize that wherever they are the Church is on hand to administer to them in the name of the Master.

At battle stations the chaplain's post is with the wounded, where he keeps a list of names and particulars and gives the last rites of the Church to those in need. While the chaplain must be a cheerful friend and social welfare officer to the whole ship's company he must ever have in his mind a consciousness of the seriousness of his calling, and be ready to do the special work of a Christian minister whenever the opportunity calls for it. He cannot be willing to see a soul pass from this world without the knowledge of the Son of God; he must be ready to prepare the dying at any time.

Besides his religious duties the chaplain has assigned to him two or more special duties which he is required to perform. He is generally a censor of the mail, a work which takes up many hours of precious time; and assistant librarian, giving to the men the books of the crew's library, and recording them. He may also be a code officer, decoding the messages that come by wireless to the ship, and entertainment officer in charge of the moving pictures and boxing contests frequently held aboard.

Perhaps there is no way outside his distinctive religious work in which a chaplain can be of greater use to the men than in the distribution of magazines. Before we left our home port many kind friends and various church societies sent me hundreds of magazines which were stowed away for safe keeping in the Admiral's pantry. These papers have been a blessing to the boys and have helped them to pass many a lonely hour at sea. Magazines are literally devoured by the men, and all kinds of publications meet with a warm reception. Although back numbers are carefully read and enjoyed, it would be much appreciated by our sailors if kind friends ashore would supply them with up-to-date papers, as the man afloat is as appreciative as his brother ashore of the latest news. This matter is being undertaken for the Army by the Government and the same should be done for the Navy.

There are two elements in the life of a sailor that make his calling a hard one, viz.: monotony and homesickness. Like his brother in the Army he wants to be at the enemy, but a long training is necessary before this is possible, and even when it is he may silently patrol the seas for many months without a sight of hostile craft. Consequently there is bound to be much dull routine without a break in the monotony; and few liberty parties even when in port. In regard to homesickness it must be borne in mind that over 50 per cent. of the naval service is composed of newly enlisted men, mere boys in many cases only seventeen or eighteen years old; with a large sprinkling of naval militiamen thrown in. Most of these lads have never been away from home before, and it is only natural that in the lonely watches of the night they think with longing of their homes and friends far away.

There is no officer on the ship who can regulate his time as the chaplain. Whether he wants to have a life of ease and do nothing but conduct a public service once a week, or whether he wishes to be an active friend to the men and a missionary ever ready to seize the opportunity to speak a word for Christ, depends entirely on the man himself. The Government will give him his pay according to his rank, and will ask no questions provided the naval regulations regarding chaplains are carried out.

Where on shore would it be possible to find a parish of 1,200 men, with whom one is brought in almost daily contact? The opportunities of the field are enormous, and so too are the difficulties. It is often taken for granted by ignorant but well-meaning people that the sailor is an irreligious man of bad habits. This is absolutely false. The sailor is just an average man with many good qualities and many bad. He responds to the chaplain if handled in the right way, but he will not be continually preached to and lectured as if he were a moral pervert. He is not very strong on church attendance but he respects religion, and has in his heart a very simple but real faith in God. He is more won by kindness and tact, and a genuine interest, than by sermons or Bible classes. While his moral standard may be a little primitive, he feels and shows a great respect for purity in women. For the prostitute he is an easy victim, but for the "good woman" he has an unbounded admiration, glad of her favor, and willing to protect her at any cost.

The excellent regulations of the Government in regard to the liquor traffic in the Navy have made drunkenness a thing of the past. Of course here and there one finds delinquents, but drinking is looked down upon by the men themselves, who are quick to see the demoralizing effect it has on their own efficiency and success. That after the war, when normal conditions are resumed in our country, the United States Navy will be a strong force for the abolition of alcoholism seems certain. Thousands of young men today who are forming habits for life are brought under a temperance influence, which will influence them for good after they have left the Navy. Having seen the good effects of prohibition, they are likely to remain under its influence, and to teach their children the same lesson. Experience is indeed the greatest teacher in life.

Backing out from her dock where she had lain for many months the U. S. S. ——— last July put to sea. Her crew was drawn up on the main deck at "quarters", while the band struck up "Where Are We Going?" which was immediately answered by another ship's band with "Auld Lang Syne." Of the crew the great majority were boys leaving their homes for the first time, and it was with feelings of sadness that they saw the old familiar places gradually fade out of sight. Two destroyers were ready to escort us on our journey, and soon we were at sea and the coast had vanished. On shore many mothers, wives and sweethearts knew that the ship had sailed, but whither bound or for what duty they knew not. It was war and the mail would give no inkling of where the ship was, only the general address "Postmaster, New York City." What a comfort it must have been to those who knew that the Church was represented on board the ship and that the consolations of religion and the grace of the Sacraments would be given to all who desired them!

While the field of Christian endeavor is wide of scope for a naval chaplain, and while there is always a response to his activities, there are certain difficulties that are not met with in civilian life. The chaplain must remember that a great many men with whom he is brought in contact belong to other religious bodies than his own, and will not be taught along any other lines than what their Church teaches. Again, too, while some of the men profess no religion, the vast majority do, and resent being treated as heathen or subjects for missionary enterprise. He is neither a parish priest nor a missionary, but a naval chaplain, something quite apart from anything else in the ecclesiastical world.

However difficult the work is and however discouraging at times when all the chaplain's efforts seem to count for nothing in the minds of the men, the fact remains that it is a man's work, and requires a man of virile character to accomplish it. Thousands of brave young lives are today on the seas to defend their country's honor and the rights of mankind. Besides them with no weapon in his hands stands the "sky pilot" and bids them be strong and of a good courage, for the Lord is with them even in the depths of the sea.

The Call of the Hour is to Prayer

By JOHN R. MOTT

THE situation now occasioned by the great War presents the largest and most insistent call to intercession which has ever come to the Christian people of the world. The highest office of friendship is to help our friends in the deepest things of life, and the deepest things of life are those which have to do with preserving a right relation between man and God and between man and man. Among the different ways of helping in the present world crisis, there is none which will compare in vital importance with that of wielding the force of prayer.

Real prayer is the most intense act a man performs. More important than the most earnest thinking upon a problem, more important than a personal interview to influence an individual, more important than addressing and swaying an audience—far more important than these and all other forms of activity is the act of coming into vital communion with God. Those who spend enough time in actual communion with God to become really conscious of their absolute dependence on Him, shall change the mere energy of the flesh for the power of God.

A Prayer for Russia

O GOD, Who didst send Thy Son to make us free; Guard, we pray Thee, the freedom of Thy Russian children; deliver them from false counsel; stablish them in righteous order; and raise up leaders, brave and strong, who shall fashion them into a mighty nation; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

There is need of solitude in this age of so many organizations. There is no danger that men will spend too much time alone with God. When a man says that he obtains more help from social than from secret prayer he is in spiritual peril.

Each person should have regular, stated seasons for private prayer. Each one must decide for himself the number and the distribution of the times he will give to these spiritual exercises. It would seem, however, that all might agree upon the importance of having a regular prayer season three times a day. It is indeed true that "He that saveth his time from prayer shall lose it. And he that loseth his time for communion with God shall find it again in added blessing, and power, and fruitfulness".

Dr. Mott says of the Y. M. C. A. and chaplains: "They should seek in every way in their power to support each other. The Association cannot perform the functions of the clergy. Its desire and purpose is to strengthen the hands of the clergy in every way in its power."

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

SYNOD FEELS GREAT NEED OF LEGISLATIVE POWER

Cold Weather and Inability to Initiate Action Discourage Delegates

By a Staff Representative

NEW YORK CITY.—In spite of the traffic tie-up and the zero weather, delegates to the Synod of the Province of New York and New Jersey arrived in goodly numbers at Synod House, Cathedral Close, on the evening of Tuesday, January 8, in time for the opening dinner. To this delegates from the parishes of the diocese and from various diocesan and provincial organizations were also invited. There were a number of women, representing the Auxiliary, the G. F. S., the Church Mission of Help, etc. Bishop Burch, who was really "master of ceremonies", was taken ill a day or two before the Synod with a severe cold due to the entire absence of coal in the Cathedral Close; and Bishop Fiske was also ill and unable to come to New York; Bishop Brent of course is still in France, and Bishop Nelson was detained in Albany, so that only six of the eleven bishops of the province were present.

Bishop Greer's address of welcome struck the note of opportunity which rang throughout the deliberations of the synod. "The naked soul is coming to life", said Bishop Greer; "the Christian Church must make a Christian missionary drive throughout the world. When the whole world is coming to have a sense of its soul and, through a sense of its soul, a sense of God, there is no excuse for a slacker in the work of the Church". The president of the Synod, Bishop Lines, made a masterly address which will appear in full very soon in THE CHURCHMAN. Suffice it therefore to say here that he outlined the duty and possibilities of the three-fold activity of the Church, education, missions and social service, in their relation to the War, thereby directing the trend of thought for the coming sessions of the synod. Dr. Patton made the concluding address of the evening on the subject of the missionary campaign, the "Patton campaign", as it is familiarly called, which has just been used with such success in the Diocese of Central New York, and which is to be launched in New York City in the near future. Dr. Patton brought out with telling force the value in dollars and cents we Americans put on democracy when he said that from 1788 to 1917 the United States had spent twenty-seven billion and since April, 1917, had spent four-fifths as much, i. e., twenty-one billions. The obvious conclusion was, should the Church not be willing to spend freely to establish the foundations of democracy? The value of the missionary campaign, Dr. Patton asserted, was that it focussed the attention of the congregation on missions for a whole week, instead of attempting results from a short half hour on Sunday morning.

The opening service of the synod was held in the Cathedral on Wednesday morning, a corporate Communion. The social service session followed immediately. The Rev. Augustine Elmendorf made an encouraging report for the provincial commission, which centred mainly on efforts to uphold and improve industrial and social conditions in the face of war emergencies. The synod then listened to stirring calls to put the Church behind the Army and Navy. The address made by the Rev. C. J. Davis of Buffalo appears at length in this issue of THE CHURCHMAN. The Rev. Karl Block, voluntary chaplain at Camp Dix, Wrightstown, New Jersey, contrasted the loneliness, monotony and rudeness of camp life with what most of the men were used to and depicted the value of the camp rectory with its atmosphere of home. He told of the man who said he couldn't trust himself in the jovial noisiness of the "Y", but just wanted to sit alone by the fire at St. George's rectory; and of the other man who asked if he might come at any time to play with the little girl who is the "youngest member of the staff"; and of the reverent appreciation of the men for the church building. Bishop Lawrence followed with a strong plea backing up the War Commission.

The afternoon was devoted to the missionary session, with a report from the provincial secretary, Dr. Harding, and addresses by Bishop Thomas and Dr. Teusler.

The evening session was decidedly amusing. The program was planned for the report of the committee on "The Future of the Synod", but Dr. E. A. White, who was scheduled for the chief address, was detained by a funeral. So the reports of the women's organizations were substituted. With that announcement the delegates hastened to the Broadway box offices and arranged various impromptu programs of their own. The evening session consisted of a few of the women who had been hastily corraled to report, the presiding officer, and an audience of some twenty-odd who didn't belong to the synod anyway.

A Prayer for the Women of Europe

O FATHER of our souls, we pray Thee that the Spirit of Comfort and Ghostly Strength may sustain the hearts of women in those countries which are now at war. May the Look of Pity that shines in Thine Eternal Face dispel their griefs; and do Thou grant them such power to unite their sacrifice with the endless sacrifice of love, and such forward-looking hope, that out of the anguish of the times may be born a new world of brotherhood and peace. These things we ask in the Name of Him who cared for His mother as He hung upon the Cross, Thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

BOARD OF MISSIONS ASKED TO CHANGE ITS SYSTEM

New England Wanted Apportionments Based on Current Expenses

NEW YORK CITY.—At the January meeting of the Executive Committee of the Board of Missions a resolution from the Synod of the Province of New England, asking the board to consider basing its apportionment for the dioceses on their current expenses rather than on gross receipts, was discussed. The board has always agreed that the apportionment for general missions should bear a direct relation and proportion to the gross receipts for all purposes in each diocese. Even should the board consider it desirable to base the apportionment on current expenses, a serious difficulty would be found in the fact that the parishes and missions, and therefore the dioceses and districts, make such varying annual reports to their Conventions and include under "current expenses" such different classes of items that it would be unjust and impracticable to attempt at the present time at least to base the apportionment to the dioceses and districts for general missions upon "current expenses". After any standard form of reporting has been recommended by the Commission on Business Methods, and adopted and acted upon by all the dioceses, it might be possible to make such a change, if then thought best.

The treasurer's report for November and December showed a net decrease over the same month last year of $24,155. This may be accounted for by the fact that these were the first two months of the year, whereas in 1916 the year closed October 1.

From the domestic field we received and acted upon the resignations of Mrs. S. W. Small of North Dakota, Miss Elizabeth Roscoe of Oklahoma, Miss E. D. Whitmore of Tennessee, and Deaconess F. B. Affleck of Utah. Miss Nellie Freeman was appointed in place of Mrs. Small and Miss Katrina E. Patterson in place of Miss Roscoe. Deaconess Emma J. Smith was appointed, at the request of the Bishop-elect of Salina, for work in that district. From the foreign field the resignations of Miss Margaret C. Graves from the Philippines, and the Rev. Edward K. Thurlow from Anking were received and accepted. A new pay table and pension scheme for native Bible women in the district of Shanghai was adopted.

Under the authority given it by the board, the Executive Committee granted an appropriation of $5,000 from the undesignated legacies for St. Mark's colored school, Birmingham, Alabama; $1,000 for a new mission building at Fresno, Cal., in the district of San Joaquin, and $3,000 for a church at Lake Andes, district of South Dakota.

CANVASS PRODUCES 300% GAIN IN OHIO PARISH

Attendance of Men at Service Increased 700%

An unusually successful every-member-canvass has just been completed in St. Paul's parish, Maumee, diocese of Ohio, the Rev. Wm. S. Banks, rector. It was inaugurated by a splendidly attended men's dinner, at which the Rev. George Gunnell of Trinity church, Toledo, Ohio, made the address of the evening. The financial results show an increase for parish support of 294 per cent., and for benevolences 237 per cent. This, however, is the least of the gain. The attendance of men at the services has grown over 700 per cent., a large class of men are receiving instruction for Confirmation, a fine men's Bible Class has been formed, a fellowship club with fifty charter members has been organized, a parish house is about to be erected. St. Paul's with its 131 communicants, in a town of 3,000 inhabitants, is a type of the average small parish.

Bishop Lines courteously gave way to the very just claim for women's rights, and went the synod "one better" by calling for the reports both Wednesday evening and Thursday afternoon. These reports were not only valuable in themselves, but important to the synod in co-relating the activities of the province, and providing that the work already covered by these various organizations should not be duplicated or forgotten through the ignorance of the synod of just what was going on. On Thursday afternoon, by motion of Bishop Greer a regular place on the program of the synod was assigned to the reports of these organizations. Provision was also made to place women on those provincial commissions in which women were not already included.

Thursday morning was devoted to religious education. Dr. Boynton reported for the commission; Dr. Nichols spoke on "Preparation for the Ministry", and Mr. A. B. Houghton made an address on "St. Stephen's College and the Province", which will later be published in full in The Churchman. Following this address the synod passed the following resolutions:

Resolved: That the Synod commend to the dioceses of the province and also to the Church at large, St. Stephen's College at Annandale-on-Hudson, as an institution of learning that stands for classical education of the highest order, and as a college of that character which can give to young men, sons of clergymen, and others, a classical training not surpassed by any other college in the country.

Resolved: That the Provincial Commission of Religious Education be directed to organize a committee consisting of representatives of each diocese in the province to take such action as will make possible the presentation of the resolution of Mr. Houghton regarding St. Stephen's College to each Diocesan Convention in the province to the end that St. Stephen's College may receive the scholarships according to the resolution.

Resolved: That such committee is hereby instructed to suggest some plan to the next meeting of the Synod by which St. Stephen's College may become an authorized Church institution, and that the committee be instructed to consider among other things some plan by which the Synod may be represented on the board of trustees of St. Stephen's College.

Thursday afternoon saw the close of the Synod, I might almost say the petering out of the Synod, for when the time came for a motion of adjournment, it was a grave question whether there was a quorum left to pass the resolution. Considerable routine business was accomplished such as the election of the secretary and treasurer of the Synod, the Rev. Roy Farrell Duffield and Mr. A. B. Houghton; the election of the board of governors of the provincial Summer Conference at Geneva, etc. A telegram of greeting was sent to Bishop Brent in France. Of course, besides the repeated reports from the ladies, and the motions passed apropos of them, the chief business was the report of the committee to memorialize the General Convention on enlarging the legislative powers of the province. So important was Dr. White's paper that The Churchman expects to print it in full as soon as space will allow. His suggestions may be summarized as follows: (1) That suggestions now submitted to joint commissions by General Convention be submitted instead to provincial synods; (2) That power of legislation for matters of local or sectional character be given the synods; (3) That the nomination and election of racial suffragan and missionary bishops be transferred from General Convention to the synods, and that the confirmation of diocesan bishops be made by synods instead of standing committees; (4) That the provincial commissions be made active rather than advisory; (5) That a provincial judiciary system and provincial boards of examining chaplains be worked out to replace diocesan courts and boards; (6) That delegates to General Convention be chosen by provinces instead of dioceses. The committee was continued with Bishop Burgess as chairman, and the consideration of the report was made the first order of business at the next meeting of the synod.

Whether the cold weather made January seem an undesirable month to hold synods, or whether November seemed in other respects more desirable, was not entirely clear. At any rate hereafter this synod will meet in November, and next Autumn the meeting will be in Central New York.

During the sessions of the synod, the delegates of the Woman's Auxiliary, called together by Miss Delafield of New York, held an important meeting at the deanery. A provincial organization was decided upon, and by-laws were drawn up. Miss Switz of Albany was chosen secretary. The other officers will not be appointed until the organization has been approved by the various diocesan branches. There was a detailed discussion of the recommendations for the national organization of the W. A., and an overwhelming majority in approval of the recommendations was shown when a vote was taken.

The G. F. S. officers of the province were also called together by their provincial vice-president, Miss Cornelia Marshall. They had luncheon together at the Women's City Club and visited the New York war service headquarters.

For Country

"You have done your bit; you must now do your utmost!"

The Rev. R. L. Merriman of Marion, South Carolina, and the Rev. Oliver Hart of Charleston have made applications to the War Department to become official chaplains in the Army.

The G. F. S. of Christ Church, Troy, New York, has just formed a Red Cross chapter which meets Wednesday afternoons at the Court House. Six hundred and twenty compresses was the record for the first afternoon.

The Rev. T. W. Attridge has resigned as assistant at Christ church, Cincinnati, to become voluntary chaplain at Camp Sherman. An $18,000 church parish house and apartment have been built on the land adjoining the camp. The first service was held on January 13.

The Rev. Herbert A. Grantham, pastor of Trinity Episcopal church, has been appointed and sworn in as associate member of the Legal Advisory Board of Robeson county district.

The Rev. Dr. Thomas E. Green has, since October 1, been giving his time and work to lecturing in the Red Triangle auditoriums at the camps and cantonments of the National Guard and the National Army. These began at Camp Upton at Yaphank, Long Island, and extended to Camp Travis at San Antonio, Texas. When the camps were closed by the various epidemics and quarantine Dr. Green went to the American Red Cross and led the Christmas drive for ten million new members, covering the State of Florida from Pensacola, to Tampa closing on Christmas Eve.

A handsome silk flag, also a service flag with twenty-one stars, and an Honor Roll have recently been presented to St. George's church, Brooklyn, New York, Rev. Charles G. Clark, rector. These were all blessed at a special service on Advent Sunday.

The Rev. Byrle J. Brown of the district of South Dakota, now working at Calvary church, New York City, has enlisted in the aviation service, flying duty, and is awaiting orders. He is to be ordained to the priesthood on January 20.

Dr. William H. Jefferys, superintendent of the Philadelphia City Mission and previously for many years surgeon-in-chief at St. Luke's Hospital, Shanghai, China, has entered the Army medical service, and is awaiting orders.

On the Epiphany at St. Stephen's church, McKeesport, Pennsylvania, at the morning service, the rector, the Rev. L. Norman Tucker, B.D., blessed and placed in the church a service flag on which are twenty-five blue stars and two red stars. The flag was presented to the parish by the wife of the senior warden, Mrs. William A. Cornelius. The Church was filled to capaci

The rector preached a patriotic sermon. The Woman's Guild, Mrs. Theodore M. Hopke, president, has taken up the work of knitting articles for the boys in camp.

President Powell of Hobart College has been requested to speak daily for the next two months in the Middle West in the interest of Public Defense. All mail for him should be sent for forwarding to 226 East Fifteenth street, New York City.

The last name added to the Honor Roll of Trinity church, New York, is that of Benjamin F. Berrian, U. S. S. "Utah". He is the great-grandson of the Rev. Dr. Berrian, rector of Trinity parish (1830-1862). One of the first names upon the roll was that of a vestryman, John Adams Dix, (lieutenant, U. S. army), son of the late Dr. Dix, rector, 1862-1908. Another name must be noticed, Horatio Potter 3d, grandson of the "Old Bishop Potter" (Horatio Potter), for many years intimately associated with the life and deeply sympathetic with the ideals of Trinity parish.

Calvary church, Memphis, is the first in the city to display a regular service flag for the members of its congregation now in the service of the great war. This flag, which contains thirty-seven stars, hangs below the Stars and Stripes. Thirty-four of the thirty-seven men from this parish are commissioned officers, and all branches of the service are represented. In the entrance of the church, which is opened daily, is placed the Honor Roll, containing the names of the men represented by the stars in the service flag. This roll of honor has been established for three months.

Christmas Day, at the 11 o'clock service, 300 men from Park Field Aviation attended in a body and were the guests of members of the parish for Christmas dinner. The rector, Dr. Buckner, is trying to arrange to have the men attend the Sunday services at the different parish churches, and to be guests for the day of the parishes.

The Y. W. C. A. has already built and contracted for fifty-two hostess houses in cantonments, and has fifty-six trained workers in Europe. The demand for increased war activities is urgent.

Chaplain R. C. Knox of Columbia University is giving part of his time to the War Commission of the Episcopal Church.

Rev Cyril Harris, who has been assistant at St. Andrew's church, Ann Arbor, working among the students of the University of Michigan, has sailed for France as an army Y. M C. A. worker.

St. James' church, Upper Montclair, New Jersey, the Rev. R. W. Trenbath, rector, has a splendid record for war work. The following is clipped from the Record:

The demands of the great conflict have made themselves felt in our community, and three days in every week our parish buildings are given over to many faithful women who work all day long for the Red Cross and war relief. In addition, most of our guilds are doing something definite for the needs of the times. A committee of six from the Woman's Guild and from the Men's Guild is keeping in touch with our many representatives in the country's service. St. James holds a high place in the diocese for the number of its men in service.

PHILADELPHIA

Bishop on Coal and Church—Bishop Rhinelander, at a recent gathering of the clergy, urged against parishes trying to order new supplies of coal at this time. In case of a scant supply, he suggested that parishes combine their services in neighboring groups. Some such method will be adopted, if one may judge from the reports of frozen churches and parish houses. Surely the Church must help in conserving the scant coal at a time when the poor seem compelled to raid the cars by thousands.

Interest in War Commission Fund—A luncheon for the clergy of the diocese last week was well attended and enthusiastic. Speeches dealing with the needs to be met were made by Dr. Louis Washburn of Old Christ church, who has been most active in war work in the diocese. He, and the Rev. H. B. Wright of St. Asaph's, Bala, had just returned from religious work in Camp Meade, Maryland. Both of these speakers enforced the need of definitely Episcopal forms of service in the camps. They also plead for the need to minister to the troops in camp hospitals; each camp having made preparation for 1,000 sick, who seem to be outside the Y. M. C. A. ministrations. It was rather amusing to have Dr. Washburn tell us that the Jews in camp had asked him to speak for them in the Y. M. C. A., where they had no representation, though they had given more than a million dollars to the work. Mr. J. H. Fahnstock of St. James' church spoke for the lay members of the commission. He advised the clergy, who were not enthusiastic in presenting the work, to get a layman with a son in the service to speak in their place. There was the sure sound of a responsive note when he expressed the hope that there might be a service flag displayed in every parish.

Mr. Chitsworth told of the work that Brotherhood of St. Andrew men were doing in all the camps, in backing up the efforts of the clergy, mobilizing laymen in the companies, making religious and moral surveys in the camps. Mr. E. J. Walenta of Schuylerville, New York, a brother of the rector of St. Simeon's, Philadelphia, gave a vivid picture of the work of laymen at Camp Custer at Battle Creek.

LOS ANGELES

Remarkable Growth of a Diocese—The Churchman and Church Messenger of Southern California, of which the Rev. J. D. H. Browne—a Church journalist of acknowledged ability—is the editor, presented its readers with a unique and beautifully illustrated souvenir number at Christmastide. This issue marked the twentieth annual milestone of its life and ever-increasing usefulness as a diocesan paper.

The following information, gathered in part from its columns, may prove of general interest; indicating, as it does, the remarkable growth of the Church's most southwesterly diocese on the Pacific Coast during its short life of twenty-one years as a diocese.

The Primary Convention was held in Los Angeles on December 3, 1895; the General Convention at its meeting in Minneapolis having acted favorably on the memorial presented by the diocese of California, asking consent for the formation of the new diocese.

At that convention the Rev. Dr. J. H. Johnson, rector of Christ Church, Detroit, was elected Bishop. The comparative results, between conditions as they were then and as they now are, denote not only the extraordinary changes which time brings about, but the highly successful administration of Bishop Johnson, and the unusual development of a young diocese, which seems noteworthy in the history of the Church.

"Of the thirty-two clergymen present at the Primary Convention seventeen have since died, seven have removed, and eight are still on the clergy list of the diocese. Of the 122 laymen present fifty-three are dead, twelve have removed, leaving fifty-seven still in the diocese. As we think of our deceased brethren by name, our loss seems irreparable; names to be cherished for their loyal churchmanship, noble-hearted liberality and faithful labors.

At the organization of the diocese there were thirty-six parishes and missions, with a communicant roll of 3,462. There are now ninety parishes and missions, with 12,434 communicants; forty-eight missions receiving missionary grants from the diocesan board as against twenty in 1895.

During the same period Bishop Johnson has laid the cornerstones of forty-seven churches, while thirty-six parish halls have been built and twenty-two rectories.

The disbursements have grown from $74,667.53 in 1896 to $282,232.82 in 1917, and the value of all Church property has risen from $261,760 to $1,746,794.85.

Of the diocesan institutions established during this period the most notable are:

1. The Hospital of the Good Samaritan, involving an investment of $250.000, an annual expenditure of about $168,000, and with an equipment unsurpassed—ministering to more than 3,000 patients annually.

Incidentally, it might be mentioned that the hospital is patriotic, inasmuch as it ushers into the world by the most approved method of naturalization about 375 brand new citizens each year.

2. The Harvard School, the bishop's school for boys (upon Emery foundation); an institution covering ten acres in one of the best residential portions of Los Angeles. The Government has made this military school a unit of the Officers' Reserve Corps, Junior Division. It has an attendance of 200 boys, maintains a recognizedly high standard of scholarship, under the direction of the Rev. R. B. Gooden, headmaster, and has a complete plant for educational facilities representing a value of $300,000.

3. The Bishop's School for Girls (upon Scripps foundation); situated at a beautiful seaside resort, La Jolla (pronounced La Ho-yah), near San Diego in the southern part of the State. This most attractive educational centre, with its fine buildings of mission architecture and its imposing chapel, is under the direction of Miss Margaret Gilman, principal.

It has an attendance of about 100 girls and represents an outlay of $150,000.

Other institutions are: The Church Home for Children, the Neighborhood Settlement, the Japanese Mission and the Seaman's Institute, all in Los Angeles.

As the genial climate of Southern California, especially at this season of the year, not infrequently attracts visitors from (shall I say?) the somewhat chilled and ice-bound East, and is always glad to welcome them with its salutary breezes, it may be well for them to know that we have ample provision here for their welfare "in sickness and in health"; for the education of their children, of either sex; and for their own participation in such ministries to the poor, the wanderer and the foreigner as they in the goodness of their heart may desire to engage in.

GEORGIA

New Year's Dinner, Camp Hancock—On New Year's night 275 men from Camp Hancock, both officers and privates and all communicants of the Church, sat down to dinner as the guests of the War Commission of the diocese of Pennsylvania. So far as we know this is the first entertainment of just this character, provided for so large a number of men, at any of the camps. It was the idea of the Rev. N. B. Groton, our volunteer civilian for Camp Hancock, who felt that much good might be accomplished by a social gathering of this sort. The dinner was served in a large and beautifully decorated hall by the ladies of St. Paul's church, Rev. G. Sherwood Whitney, rector, and the younger women of the parish acted as waitresses. A substantial dinner of soup, roast turkey and vegetables and plum pudding was greatly enjoyed by the men. A full band of twenty-eight pieces from the 112th Regiment of Infantry, and a trio of stringed instruments furnished inspiring music, sometimes leading in a popular song, which was heartily sung by the whole crowd. When the cigars had been passed, Mr. Groton, acting as toastmaster, first explained to the men the scope and purpose of the War Commission and the great interest the whole Church had in her sons who were giving themselves in their country's service. He then introduced Bishop Reese of Georgia, who held their close attention in a thoughtful address on "The principles for which we are fighting, righteousness and democracy". A number of distinguished officers were present, and three of them made addresses, Brig. General Logan, Brig. General Price and Lieut. Col. King, chief of division staff. The Rev. G. Sherwood Whitney in a brief talk expressed the sense of pleasure and privilege which the Church in Augusta felt in being able to minister to so many of the soldiers and in placing their churches and parish houses at their disposal. Mr. Marion Ridgely of Augusta entertained the company in a delightfully humorous speech. As one of the men expressed it, "It was a magnificent evening".

As far as our own men are concerned, the Church is doing about all that is possible. Three regiments have priests of the Church as chaplains and all are doing splendid work and exerting a wide influence. Mr. Groton as volunteer civilian chaplain is assisted by Mr. Meehan as the Brotherhood of St. Andrew representative, and together they have listed the names of about 800 communicants. Mr. Groton celebrates the Holy Communion each Sunday morning at one of the Y. M. C. A. huts and visits daily in the camp and among the hospitals. All of our churches are doing their utmost to keep in touch with the men and make them feel at home. At St. Paul's the ladies keep "open house" in the parish house every Sunday evening from 6.30 to 8 o'clock, serving refreshments, and on several occasions have given large receptions for the enlisted men. A number of the soldiers are singing in the choir and otherwise helping in the work of the Church just as they would do at home. At the Church of the Good Shepherd, the Rev. Wm. Johnson, rector, and at the Church of the Atonement, the Rev. F. W. B. Dorset, rector, weekly entertainments are given, which seem to be much appreciated.

All of Augusta has given itself wonderfully to the meeting of the responsibility of doing everything possible for the soldiers. Every home has been open to them and many are straining their resources in having them in their homes for dinner or supper, especially on Sundays. Nearly every church or club in town has opened a reading and rest room and there are well conducted dances going on nearly every evening. The citizens have only words of praise for the Pennsylvania boys, who have conducted themselves, with only the rarest exceptions, as soldiers and gentlemen.

RHODE ISLAND

In Touch With Men—The Church of the Ascension, Auburn, the Rev. Charles A. Meader, rector, is carrying on a unique method of keeping in touch with its twenty-three enlisted men. A typewritten circular letter narrating matters of local interest is sent weekly to each man. Also a committee of twenty-three write personal letters weekly to each. The replies are read to the congregation every Sunday at the close of Evening Prayer.

Rural Baptisms—There have been seventeen baptisms in the sparsely settled sections of the western part of Rhode Island as the result of the work the past Fall of Deaconess Dahlgren and Deaconess Gillespy. On a recent Sunday a family of eight colored children were baptized, all dressed in contrasting white.

J. M. HOBBS.

NEVADA

Clergy Shortage—The Rev. Harlan Bailey has resigned as vicar of St. Mark's church, Tonopah, and priest-in-charge of adjacent missions. Our clergy list has been depleted 20 per cent. in the last two months, for such is the percentage when two leave from among ten. This means a very serious crippling of our work.

Death of Mrs. Turman—A very great sorrow has come to the Church in Nevada in the sudden death of Amy S. Mott Turman, wife of the Rev. Ross Turman, vicar of St. Mary's church, Winnemucca. Children and parents were in the parish hall for the Sunday school Christmas tree. Presents were distributed and a good time had begun when Mrs. Turman was suddenly stricken and died in a few moments. She was entering into the joyous occasion heartily. The whole community grieves, for she had endeared herself to all. Her splendid life and faith were an inspiration. She willingly made her sacrifices and gave herself fully in leaving California and coming to Nevada to take up missionary work with her husband. But few realized the cost and how faithfully she served. At Christmas was the whispered message, as once before, "The Master is come, and calleth for thee".

St. Bartholomew's, Ely—Our Christmas festival seemed a little better kept this year than in any previous season. There was the usual Christmas tree on Christmas eve, beautifully decorated and brightly illuminated with electric bulbs. and a church full of little folks and their parents. This is one feature of the Christmas-tide which is always popular. On Christmas Day there was an early celebration of the Holy Communion at 7:30, and a later celebration at 10:45. Of our Christmas offering about $50 is being sent for war relief in Bible lands.

The Indians—Long before Nixon is reached the visitor has seen the red roof and gray walls of the Indian school standing out distinctly against the mountains in the background. Between the distant view and the school the road winds through the small Indian farms lying on either side. One sees houses and adults, but no children. By the time one has reached Nixon, however, one finds all the children and no parents. There are seventy of them there. They are to be found everywhere in gingham dresses and corduroys. Should it be Sunday the blue gingham gives place to the middy suits of blue serge for the girls, and the blue dress uniform of the boys displaces the humble corduroys.

For forty weeks of each year the children are kept in Nixon and go to school. Each Fall word is sent out, and the children are brought into school. They stay here for many years. The little boy becomes a man, and the little girl a woman ere the schooling is done. The Government during these years clothes, feeds and educates them.

The general assembly hall was packed Christmas eve for the Christmas exercises. The galleries were filled to the limit of their capacity. But there was a great deal of difference between this Christmas and that of last year. All the older children were away at the Stewart school, hence the little children did all the reciting and singing of carols. Owing to the war, it was deemed inexpedient to have two trees, so the Government had the right of way. Economy dictated that only the children should receive presents. They were informed of the dearth of the usual things given at Christmas, but they all accepted the situation with good grace.

On Christmas morning one hundred and fifteen Indians gathered at the Church many of them participating in the Holy Communion.

Work is now being undertaken at Stewart, the non-reservation school for the more advanced boys and girls, at Carson. Two services are held each month. Services are also being held regularly for the Wadsworth Indians.

CHICAGO

Food Conservation—The Illinois State Council of Defense held a National Patriotic Food Show at the Coliseum in Chicago the week of January 5-13. The clergy of Chicago were asked to co-operate with the State Council in securing a large attendance at the show. The slogan adopted by the committee in charge was "What to Eat and How to Cook It". The exhibit was unlike any other show ever held in Chicago, in that it was consistently practical. No fancy or imported foods were on exhibition. Corn, flour, soy beans, the cheaper cuts of meat, and similar foods were prepared, cooked, and demonstrated. The program of tests, demonstrations, and lectures was conducted by special representatives of the domestic science and chemistry departments of the University of Illinois, the University of Chicago, Lewis Institute, the Illinois State Normal School, Milliken University, and the School of Domestic Arts and Science of Chicago.

Christian Endeavorers Endorse Food Administration—The officers of the Illinois Christian Endeavor Union, at a meeting held in Chicago during the week past adopted resolutions endorsing the National Food Administration and condemning criticism of the Food Administrator. Copies of the resolution were sent to the 1,600 societies of the organization throughout the State, with the suggestion that the Sunday evening meetings on January 27 be devoted to a discussion of ways and means for more fully supporting the Food Administrator in his food conservation program.

"Silent People" Do Their Bit—The Rev. F. G. Flick, priest-in-charge of All Saints' Mission for the Deaf, reports that the Silent Athletic Club and the Chicago Division of the National Fraternal Society for the Deaf each purchased a five hundred dollar Liberty bond. The Red Cross Society of Waterman Hall, the Diocesan School for girls, has also invested in a Liberty bond.

"War Workers" at the Chicago Homes for Boys—The Rev. Kenneth O. Crosby, the director of the Chicago Homes for Boys, speaking of the effect of the war on the institution, says: "So many people who used to give liberally to us are now giving all they have to the Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., the Liberty Loan, and other war relief agencies, and our contributions have fallen off greatly. The boys themselves have $150.00 in Liberty bonds, and have raised and given $50.00 to the Red Cross and $25.00 to the Army Y. M. C. A. Most of the boys are knitting and constantly sending things (clothes, candy, tobacco, books, etc.) to our twenty-one boys who are in France or in the various camps here. We have always had meatless days, one each week. We now have three meatless and two wheatless days each week. Our food is all sweetened before it is put on the table, so there is no chance to waste even a grain of sugar.

"Week of Prayer" in Pontiac—In years past it has been found exceedingly difficult to awaken any enthusiasm for the proper observance of the "Week of Prayer" in Pontiac. Following a meeting of the clergymen representing the various Communions separated from the Roman church, it was decided to combine forces, with the result that the "Prayer Meetings" held at the various churches during the week were well attended and productive of much spiritual uplift. The Tuesday evening meeting was held in Grace Episcopal church, with the pastor of the Christian church as leader, while the rector of Grace church was the preacher at the Methodist Episcopal church on Sunday evening, when the cause of "Missions" was presented. The net result of the week of prayer in Pontiac is that Christian people through common prayer have learned to understand each other better and have discovered that their "differences" are negative rather than positive.

NEW YORK

Monday Morning Bible Class—At 10:30 on Monday mornings a group of women meet each week to study the missionary aspects of the Bible. Like so many other groups of women in New York, they are indebted to the Church Club for the use of their rooms. Miss Emily Warren is the leader. During Advent the textbook was Missionary Aspects of the Bible, an outline of Bible study which was widely used at the conferences last Summer. With the Epiphany season a new course is under way, using Simon Peter, Rock, an admirable little book written by Miss Lucy Sturgis, educational secretary of the diocese of Massachusetts. In Lent Bishop Rhinelander's new book will be used. On Wednesdays in Epiphany there is a normal class on Africa led by Miss Flanders, and on Fridays another normal class on Missionary Aspects of the Bible led by Miss Edith Walker, the educational secretary.

Shelter for Respectable Girls—The Shelter for Respectable Girls has issued its annual report. Forty-six years ago Sister Catherine, now nearly ninety years of age, founded this home. It is provided: "First—For respectable young women who are in search of work when they arrive as strangers in this city, either from foreign lands or from the country districts. Second—For those temporarily out of employment in changing from one position to another. Third—For young women when pursued by the unscrupulous. Fourth—For foolish young girls, who in a spirit of independence and self-confidence have broken temporarily loose from proper home restraint, only to discover the danger of their position.

"To all of these classes the Shelter forms, indeed, a refuge in the time of deepest need, as it provides a safe Christian home, and a judicious counselor and friend in the resident deaconess and house mother, who gives direction and help to the girls in finding suitable employment, and in securing a safe and permanent home."

Deaconess Gilmore is in charge of the Shelter. The Rev. George S. Baker is president, and Dr. Benjamin W. Wells is the secretary. During the past year 381 girls have been enrolled. Only five of these have proved disappointing. Several were sent to the country. Others were visited in the hospitals. Still others were helped to secure positions.

Anglican and Eastern Association—There will be a meeting of the Anglican and Eastern Association in New York and Brooklyn, Sunday, January 20, and Monday, January 21. A service will be held in Trinity church, New York, on the Sunday at 3:30, at which Bishop Parker will be the preacher. An evening service will also be held in the Church of the Redeemer, Fourth avenue and Pacific street, Brooklyn. The following day will be filled with discussions and addresses by representative members of the several Orthodox Churches and by specialist in work among Orthodox Christians. These meetings will be held in the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn. In the evening a service will be held in one of the Orthodox Churches in either Brooklyn or New York. Full announcements of all these services will be sent to the members of the Association. Others may obtain full information by addressing the secretary, the Rev. W. C. Emhardt, Newtown, Bucks county, Pennsylvania. All who recall the helpful and inspiring meetings held in Philadelphia last spring will be glad to proclaim the importance of these meetings.

The San Antonio Chapel—Something like $1,200 is still needed to complete the New York women's chapel at San Antonio, and under the leadership of Miss Emily Warren it is hoped that the sum may soon be raised. But it is difficult with the many appeals for many needed things that are issued every day to secure this amount as promptly as could be wished. The building of this chapel right in the centre of the camps where something like 10 per cent. of the entire military of the country is concentrated is such a vital thing that it seems a great pity to have to wait for the money to dribble in in small amounts.

Alumni Meeting at the G. T. S.—The midwinter reunion of the Alumni of the General Theological Seminary was held on the evening of Tuesday, January 15. Dinner was served in the refectory. Dean Fosbroke, Dean Robbins and Dr. Tomkins were the speakers. The Rev. St. Clair Hester presided.

COLORADO

Churches Combined—There was long ago a plan to confine the city of Denver to fewer churches, leaving the local fields to be held by guild rooms and Sunday schools. In course of time it has been proved that the multiplication of churches starved work and workers and since the fire at Ascension church and the question of rebuilding the whole plan has revived and is likely to be carried out. Therefore the Rev. H. S. Foster's congregation will unite with Dean Hart's and each pastor will preach on alternate Sundays, Mr. Foster being subdean, and other city churches will be centralized or possibly worked largely from the Cathedral by the Cathedral staff.

Clericus Postponed—The Clericus of January was postponed to give right of way to Miss Matthews and Miss Withers, who are here on the 8 to 11 to address the Woman's and Sunday School Institute on auditing the diocese on Bible and Mission study subjects. The Bishop made an address of welcome on Tuesday morning at 9:30, and meetings are held from 10 to 12 and 2 to 4 each day, all meetings being at St. John's Cathedral.

Council Date Changed—It is proposed to change the date of the Diocesan Council of Colorado from the first week in June till January 25, the conversion of St. Paul, which will make the council fall nearer into harmony with the revision of the fiscal year, as suggested by the Board of Missions. The place of the annual council will be changed from time to time, and a further move in waking interest outside of the See City of Denver will be set on foot when the diocese is divided into practically North and South instead of East and West. Bishop Johnson will take the North, including Meeker and stations on the "Moffat road," or Denver & Salt Lake Railway, reached from Denver, and Bishop Touret will take parishes and missions south of El Paso county. Incorporated as St. John's College were three educational trusts of the diocese, one for boys, one for girls and one for ordination candidates. The first two are dormant, one of their places being practically supplied by the Collegiate School for Boys, but Mr. Bonell of Greeley has raised money for the maintenance of a number of ordination candidates who will receive credits at the State Normal school at Greeley and will study theology and pastoral work under his supervision.

WASHINGTON

Bishop's Luncheon—By invitation sixty of the clergy of Washington and vicinity met Bishop Harding at luncheon at Epiphany parish hall on Monday, January 7, and the Bishop took up several matters of vital importance. He outlined the origin and work of the Church's War Commission for our soldiers and sailors, and said this diocese should raise $25,000 to cover its quota for the commission, to take care of the spiritual welfare of its men in the cantonments, and to help the weaker churches of the city in their active work for the thousands of soldiers encamped in and near the District of Columbia. Later he appointed a diocesan war commission to cooperate with the general one, and conduct the campaign for funds. This commission consists of the Reverend Doctors R. H. McKim, chairman; G. C. F. Bratenahl, C. Ernest Smith, Roland Cotton Smith, Herbert Scott Smith and Messrs. J. Holdsworth Gordon, Melville Church, Byron S. Adams, Richard B. Watrous, Ralph Jenkins.

The meeting unanimously endorsed the dean and the appointments. The Bishop also spoke of the new fiscal year, coincident with the civil year, and the statistical and financial problems involved, and of his letter on behalf of the diocesan board of religious education, asking social and pastoral endeavor on behalf of the hordes of new clerks, strangers in Washington. At length he discussed the financial needs and one task of the General Board of Missions, and bespoke the earnest co-operation of all in meeting the increased apportionment. In this connection we noted the greatly improved status of the rural churches of the diocese as to support and missions, due to the wise and energetic campaigns of the Rev. D. W. Curran in behalf of the duplex envelope system.

The Bishop spoke feelingly of a drive for $250,000 to cover not only the call for funds for the War Commissions and the diocesan quotas for missions, but also to pay off all debts of all churches and missions in the diocese, and meet every obligation, and begin anew with a clean slate. The money is possessed by our people, in spite of the War, and they are able to give it if they will; faith, effort and perseverance are alone needed to secure it and place the diocese on a basis of security and progress. This met with very favorable response, and Doctor McKim, Doctor Nelms, Doctor Talbot, Doctor Bratenahl and others spoke briefly but warmly of the prospect, whose consideration and also its prosecution, if found practicable at this time, were left to the diocesan War Commission.

ST. LOUIS

Christmas—Christmas Day was crisp and snappy. And beautiful, bracing Winter weather followed for ten days. In St. Louis and the suburbs the reports are of large congregations on Christmas Day and happy festivities and Christmas tree services everywhere during Christmas week in connection with the Sunday schools.

On New Year's Day, in Christ Church cathedral, the Holy Communion was celebrated at 10 o'clock and an inspiriting sermon was preached by Dean Davis. Nearly all of the congregations joined in the service at the cathedral and the church was well filled. A great number of persons received the Holy Communion. Assisting Bishop Tuttle in the Communion office were the bishop coadjutor of the diocese and the Bishop of Kansas, who was visiting friends in the city. Many of the city rectors were vested and in procession. The full choir of men and boys sang hymns appropriate to the New Year, including "America". There were many who felt that this gathering of all the congregations at the cathedral ought to be made a feature of every New Year's Day in the future.

In the afternoon and evening of New Year's, Bishop Tuttle and Mrs. White and Bishop and Mrs. Johnson were at home to friends who called at the Bishop's house in Vandeventer place.

BOSTON

Phillips Brooks Anniversary—The twenty-fifth anniversary of the death of Bishop Brooks will be observed on Monday afternoon, January 21, at 4:30 in Trinity church, Boston. The Rev. Leighton Parks, D.D., rector of St. Bartholomew's church, New York City, will make the address on this occasion. Dr. Parks, as rector of Emmanuel church, Boston, was long the friend and neighbor of Phillips Brooks when he was rector of Trinity church.

Boys' Clubs Rally—The various Boys' Clubs of the parishes and missions of the Archdeaconry of Boston gathered in goodly numbers at Trinity Parish House last week Wednesday, where the Trinity Boys' Club acted as hosts. Bishop Lawrence was present and talked to the boys.

The Archdeaconry of Boston is hoping and working to co-ordinate the work and other activities of the numerous Boys' Clubs in the missions and parishes and this getting together at Trinity Parish House was one of the early steps in the campaign under the leadership of Mr. Joseph F. Wilson, the "Boys' Work Counsellor" of the Archdeaconry. Numerous competitive athletic events, in and out doors, have already been held between Boy Scout troops, Knights of King Arthur Castles and other parish organizations from missions and parishes in different quarters of the city.

The inherent difficulties of continuous, constructive activities of this sort is repeatedly made evident by just such vigorous and promising attempts as this. The Church has no sort of national organization for men and boys such as the women and girls possess in the Girls' Friendly Society. The necessary consequence is that local aggregations of parish boys' clubs are about all that can be attempted until some really national pooling of the splendid energy and enthusiasm of our boys is initiated and put into effect. This is a crying need that perhaps every parish priest recognizes and longs to see filled. Possibly the nucleus of such national organization of Church boys may be present in the Knights of St. Paul, the Knights of St. John or the Knights of Washington, founded in the dioceses of Chicago, Pennsylvania and Connecticut respectively, and all of them having chapters in other dioceses, but the signs that this is the case are not very numerous.

War Service—The campaign for $90,000 for the War Commission half-million fund and for additional diocesan war work is in full swing under the direction of a special committee of the Episcopalian Club. Each parish and mission has been asked to raise as its quota a sum at least equal to the amount of its missionary apportionment. It is hoped that the full $90,000 will be in hand by Monday, January 28—the day after the nation-wide offering for the War Commission. Mr. Joseph G. Minot of the Church of the Advent, Boston, is chairman of the special committee of the Episcopalian Club, which has in hand the raising of this fund. It will be recalled that Mr. Minot was also chairman of the diocesan Pension Fund Committee, and the fact will constitute a good omen for the oversubscription of the diocese's $90,000.

Grace church, New Bedford, has unfurled a service flag of seventy-two stars, one of which is gold in color to commemorate Wilfred C. Alcock, airman, who has already given his life for his country. The Advent, Boston, report seventy-nine in service; Trinity, 125; St. James', Roxbury, forty-seven.

Archdeaconry of Lowell—The annual meeting of the Archdeaconry of Lowell was held at Grace church, Newton, on January 17. There were reports from all the missionaries of the Archdeaconry and special addresses were made by the Rev. Allen Greene of Peabody on "How a Church Debt Was Paid In War Time," and by the Rev. William H. Osmond of Marlborough and Hudson on "How a New Church Was Built in War Time". Officers and delegates to the Diocesan Board of Missions were elected.

Red Cross Men—The men of the Cathedral congregation have been summoned to become makers of surgical dressings for the Red Cross. The Cathedral Service Unit committee having this work in charge has found the demands for dressings so immense that they have now asked the men to turn to and show what facility they may have for such work with their hands. They are to meet each Monday evening in the Cathedral rooms under the direction of the Rev. John S. Moses of the Cathedral staff. The veteran women makers of surgical dressings would give much, it is safe to say, to observe the first attempts of mere men in the delicate art of bandage making, but it is equally safe to predict that no women spectators will be allowed on the premises!

Coal Conservation—Some of the parishes and missions of the diocese have been threatened with coal shortage during these difficult and frigid weeks. The Church of the Ascension, Fall River, announces that all services for the present will be held in the parish house—which is heated by about one-fifth the amount of coal that must be used for the church. Grace church, New Bedford, has invited all the other parishes of the city to unite with them in the Sunday services. It is doubtful if this plan will prove feasible, however, owing to the long distances which the majority would have to travel to reach the hospitable shelter of Grace church. In Grace Parish House—as in many another throughout the diocese at this time—there are observed three "heatless days", when only sufficient heat is kept to insure against freezing pipes. All parish organizations concentrate on the other three week-days for their sessions.

Boston's Italian Chapel—The Chapel of St. Francis of Assisi, whose cornerstone was laid the last of November, is to be most complete and beautiful in every detail of its building and furnishing. It will be a memorial church in the fullest sense. A very beautiful altar and reredos has been given in memory of Phillips Brooks, and the priest in charge of the Italian work in the region—the Rev. Henry C. Sartorio—has asked for the completion of the chancel by a rood-beam. The rector of Trinity Church asks his congregation if there is some member who will give the rood-beam in memory of Phillips Brooks.

Christmas and New Year's—Trinity Church, Boston, reports 600 communicants on Christmas day as having made their communions.

Watch-night services on New Year's Eve seem to have been more generally held in Boston than ever before, the solemnity of these war times doubtless stimulating the practice. Several parishes had social gatherings before the service, and a Midnight Communion followed the watch service at the cathedral and a few other churches.

A very welcome and beautiful bit of Christmas cheer was furnished by various of our parish choirs in singing on Christmas Eve or Christmas Day in the wards of hospitals in Boston and other cities and towns of the diocese.

Personals—The Rev. James A. Thompson, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Walpole, has accepted a call to the rectorship of Trinity church, Bridgewater.

The Rev. Charles L. Mallory has taken charge temporarily of the Church of the Ascension, Waltham.

The Rev. Glenn Tilley Morse, rector of All Saints' church, West Newbury, has gone to the Bahamas for a month on his annual vacation. The Rev. Richmond H. Gesner, D.D., of Oswego, New York, is in charge during his absence.

English Church News

The Representative Council—At present a huge debating society, whose members are drawn from the six houses of Convocation (the Upper and Lower Houses, and the Houses of Laymen, of the two provinces of Canterbury and York), the Representative Council aims at becoming eventually the Church's own legislative assembly. All schemes of reform presuppose that there will be such a Council, elected on a much more democratic franchise. It was, therefore, necessary to take the opinion of the existing Council on the report of the Archbishops' Committee on Church and State. The Archbishops originally thought that this matter might very well be postponed till after the war, but they were overborne by the demand of the Laymen's House that the matter should not be delayed. So, in spite of the energetic protests of Dr. Hensley Henson, Dean of Durham, the Council met in London.

The Archbishops were quite alive to the fruitlessness of a discussion on the report itself, seeing that such distinct lines of cleavage have revealed themselves, especially on the franchise question. So they wisely determined to ask the Council to refer the whole question to what they described as a Grand Committee, consisting of more than sixty members, on which all sections of opinion should be represented. Lord Parmoor was entrusted with the moving of the resolution. An attempt was made to shelve the matter, but the amendment found no support. Even the Dean of Durham voted for the Grand Committee, and was only anxious that there should be no haste. He accepted a suggestion of Lord Hugh Cecil that the report of the Grand Committee should not be presented till after the war. This amendment was also lost. The Council being so much agreed on the main point, the resolution might have been voted in a few minutes.

Some Points in the Debate—As a matter of fact, the debate lasted for a day and a half. One might suppose that the members thought that they had not gathered from all parts of England simply to vote that a committee should be appointed. The Archbishop of Canterbury, as chairman, allowed a wise latitude to the members to express their views, and, on the first day especially, four or five of the speakers gave their views at some length. The Bishop of Oxford (Dr. Gore) repeated his well-known contention that Confirmation is the only basis of membership. Baptism had been so indiscriminately administered that it would "degrade the sacrament into a charm, unless it had been accepted and appropriated by the baptized person in Confirmation." The Bishop of Manchester (Dr. Knox) replied, contending that Baptism had already admitted to membership. Then came the turn of the Dean of Durham. The report was not really being discussed by the nation—but by little coteries. It represented the opinion of a little body of experts, not a national demand. The hustling of Mr. Temple and his friends was intolerable. He described the dream of an autonomous Church of England as a vain one. Their endeavor ought rather to be to make good some of the defects of the Establishment.

Death of Archdeacon Sinclair—Since his retirement from London to the country six years ago, we have heard little about Archdeacon Sinclair, who was a prominent figure in Church life in the nineties. He made his name as a scholarly parish priest while vicar of St. Stephen's, Westminster, and became examining chaplain to Bishop Jackson. At the early age of thirty-nine, he was chosen by Bishop Temple to be archdeacon of London. He had the appearance of a young athlete: scarcely a typical dignitary. Mr. Labouchere's paper Truth scoffed at him as the "Venerable Youth". His record as to influence and results was a little disappointing: but as a hard worker he was supreme. His breakdown was probably due to his having traded too much on his extraordinary physical strength.

Trouble in the C. M. S.—The very last place where one would expect to find any kind of disagreement is in the councils of the Church Missionary Society. It has been for the last hundred years a society whose type of thought was well understood to be Evangelical in the narrow sense of the word. It is a most remarkably efficient society: nobody who has had any dealings with it can fail to recognize how admirably it is organized. Its present secretary has shown a spirit which is appreciated by all parties in the Church. And now into the midst of this well-governed organization certain persons have fired a bombshell. It is a demand which is very gently worded, but which suggests that the tests which the society imposes on its agents are too strict. In particular, those agents seem to be tied to the most conservative view of Biblical criticism. Now the signatories demand that nothing narrower than the formulas of the Church of England should be imposed on the agents of a Missionary Society. And as a good many men of liberal views are strong supporters of the C. M. S., they have a right to be heard. No report has been published as to the discussion of their demand by the committee of the society. But it could not be ignored or refused, and the society was compelled to adopt the same course as the Representative Council: they have appointed a large and representative committee to inquire into the memorial. It will require a good deal of Christian acumen to avoid a split, which would for many reasons be deplorable. It is to be hoped that some formula may be found which will satisfy both sides.

Newfoundland Bishop Dies

ST. JOHN'S.—Lewellyn Jones, who retired last September as Lord Bishop of Newfoundland and Bermuda, died here last week. He was said to have been the oldest bishop of the Episcopal Communion in the British Empire. Bishop Jones, who was seventy-seven years old, was forty years at the head of the Diocese of Newfoundland. He was born in Liverpool, where he received his early education at the Collegiate institute, later attending Cheltenham College, Harrow, and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was ordained in 1864.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

The Rev. Cameron Josiah Davis is the rector of Trinity Church, Buffalo, New York, a member of the Standing Committee of Western New York and of the Provincial Commission on Missions. His admirable paper read before the Synod of the Second Province at its meeting last week in New York we are glad to publish in our pages.

The Rt. Rev. Arthur Cleveland Coxe, D.D., the beloved bishop of Western New York from 1865 to 1896, was one of the poets of the American Church. Hymn 257, for example, is his. The "Hymn for the Times" which his daughter, Mrs. Nash, has kindly enabled us to reprint, was first published in a little volume called "Hallow E'en" about 1847.

Mary Wilcox Glenn (Mrs. John M. Glenn) is at present in charge of the Home Service department of the American Red Cross in New York. She is one of the best known social workers in New York; she has been general secretary of the Charity Organization Society in Baltimore, and is now a member of the board of directors of the C. O. S. In 1915 she was president of the National Conference of Charities and Corrections. She is one of the most active members of the Board of Trustees of the Church Mission of Help. Mrs. William Draper, whose picture appears on the same page as Mrs. Glenn's article, is also a Churchwoman.

Nancy Gary Blackwell is the head of the French Department of Washington Irving High School, New York City. She has been instrumental in molding the school's policy of patriotism and at her suggestion the French Department presented the Tricolor to the school. Miss Blackwell is a parishioner of Grace church. It is interesting to note that the picture of the school girls saluting the flag was drawn by a Washington Irving art pupil for the school magazine.

The Rev. Roy Irving Murray went abroad with Bishop Israel as his chaplain, and is now serving as acting rector of St. Paul's church, Rome. Mr. Murray was for a number of years in Trinity parish, New York, and succeeded the Rev. Joseph Peck Robinson who died in 1914 as headmaster of Trinity Chapel School. Mr. Murray has published several short stories, and in collaboration with Mary Raymond Shipman Andrewes "August 1st," a novel.

The Rt. Rev. Frederick Foote Johnson, D.D., bishop-coadjutor of Missouri, is perhaps known best in many parts of the Church as Bishop Hare's assistant in South Dakota. In 1910 he became bishop of South Dakota, and in 1911 was transferred to Missouri as coadjutor to Bishop Tuttle.

The Rev. William E. Gardner, D.D., the general secretary of the Board of Religious Education, needs no introduction to Churchman readers.

Elizabeth J. Woods is a Churchwoman now living in Summit, N. J.

F. C. Titsworth, at the first call of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew for additional secretaries for war service, gave up his large practise as a lawyer in Denver and brought his family East. He has been made executive secretary of the Brotherhood and is working in the office at the Church House, Philadelphia.

Mary E. Thomas, as was said at the recent meeting of the Synod in New York, knows more about the Church Periodical Club than anybody else living or dead. She is, as everyone knows, the executive secretary.

The Rev. Charles Fiske, D.D., bishop coadjutor of Central New York, sends us one of the most interesting and pertinent contributions to our War and the Church number.

The Rev. Lester Bradner, Ph.D., is director of the department of parochial education for the General Board of Religious Education, and the leading authority on Sunday schools in the country. At present he is giving half of his time to the War Commission, and spends his morning in their office and his afternoons at the office of the G. B. R. E. It is only too easy to guess that with such a program he spends his evenings filling in what cannot be crowded into the day.

Laurette Eustis Pease (Mrs. L. Frederic Pease) is the secretary of the Church Mission of Help, New York City. Since Mrs. Pease assumed this office two years ago the society has steadily advanced until now it holds an important place among the agencies for social betterment as well as among diocesan organizations in New York. Mrs. Pease is a graduate of Bryn Mawr College.

The Rev. Frank Monroe Crouch is the secretary of the Joint Commission on Social Service.

Edith M. Hadley is the president of the Girls' Friendly Society in the diocese of New York and a member of the special War Council of the national organization. Miss Hadley is giving all her time at present to directing the war service work of the New York branch.

Amelia Josephine Burr is a New York contributor whose verse is always welcome in our columns.

The Rev. Albert C. Larned gives the readers of The Churchman a glimpse into the responsibilities and opportunities of a "Sky Pilot Afloat Under the Stars and Stripes". Mr. Larned came to New England from old England in 1909, and has served parishes in Rhode Island, Vermont and Maine. Last July, when the National Naval Volunteers were called into service, he left his parish of St. Saviour's, Bar Harbor, to accept his appointment as a U. S. Naval chaplain.

Obituary

DR. JOSEPH PRICE REMINGTON

The rector, wardens and vestrymen of Church of the Holy Trinity, Philadelphia, d to place on record their sense of loss in death of their associate, Dr. Joseph Price Rem ton.

Dr. Remington was associated with the life work of the parish for many years. He se as a vestryman eighteen years. He was for s years a Sunday school teacher, and for twenty years he was a member and a leade the Chapter of the Brotherhood of St. And He was always deeply and actively interest the life of the parish, and his scholarly at ments and his genial personality added to usefulness.

otection of women and children. If we uld avoid the experience of our Allies, tably England, we must make labor un- rstand that its rights are to be conserved d its honest toil rewarded. Industrial rest can be cured only by getting at its uses. To shed light on this vexed ques- n the Commission is just issuing War rvice Bulletin No. 5.

Public health during wartime, whether of r fighters or workers, or our general vilian population, is another important atter which the Commission has under visement, as is also the problem of the untry church and the rural community, pecially at a time when increased pro- ction of life's necessities must supplement nservation..

y bits from all garments have been used make 118 pillows. We are learning to e everything; pieces of old linen are made o handkerchiefs; tin-foil and old rubber ve their uses and many a soldier is rmer for the vest made of old kid- ves. Six hundred pounds of yard are our needles and 2,021 knitted articles ve been finished. Two rooms are turned er to surgical dressing, and 1,000 dress- gs are now turned out each month; 4,100 ve been done to date.

Despite the scarcity of sugar, or rather because of it—sick soldiers need it most—Washington Irving was happy in sending in time for Christmas packages of candy for 200 soldiers, and to Dr. Lloyd at his base hospital, which our ambulance serves, 195 jars of jam and jelly, besides a Red Cross packing case of the largest size filled with all that Santa Claus could think of.

After all, the material accomplishment is small in proportion to the need, but the loyal spirit of thousands of young Americans in a school that will hand it on, as twice each year 1,300 girls enter, is a goodly gift to the country, a priceless gift, when each girl feels as one of them says:

Every fibre in your body
Seems to throb and fill with love
For the Flag that waves so proudly
In the pulsing air above.

War Work in the Church Schools

boys and girls will be the leaders and sustainers will be a different Church, because of this experience from that which their elders have known, and we trust a more Christlike Church.

And lest these same elders say to themselves, here and there, that they are too occupied with grown-up interests in war work to stop for the organization and training of youngsters, let us say this word in closing: Do we not owe it to the child of today to construct for him a way of expressing his feelings in real work during this greatest of world-crises? Shall we set all his deepest sympathies a-tingle with what he sees and hears about him of patriotic endeavor, so as to leave him burning with a desire to help—but without any practical or effective means of being really useful? This neglect of an unrivalled educational opportunity would be little short of criminal.

The Rev. Mr. Fortin Dead

and other eatables. The place is a fog of khaki, spread over with blue smoke; these soldiers, or less frequently marines, sometimes with much more than a sprinkling of French troopers. Not a cathedral surely, but what a congregation! And, before the bishop has finished, indications of something more than merely human presence. News of what is happening along the line, incidents of interest taken from experiences at other camps, examples of that devotion to the cause which are to be found among our men everywhere, the call to put on that invisible, impregnable armor of the spirit without which no man—soldier or other—can fight his battle to its glorious conclusion. Those of you who know him at home begin to recognize in the uniformed, belted figure standing there on an empty soapbox, your bishop and your friend.

"That's all, boys—and thank you." Then, across the instant's silence, a crash of applause. These men have listened, have understood, have appreciated. Afterwards, they gather about the bishop in groups; the time has come for the personal word. Gradually the hut empties; soldiers go early to bed.

"Gosh," one man said on the way out of the hut at M——, "I wish he'd have come here on a Sunday—I'd like to hear that man preach once!" He did not know that he had heard a sermon—one which, in all probability, he will never forget.

"Can the Church rise to the present opportunity?" anxious men are asking everywhere at home. Can she? If you doubt it, ask that man climbing back into the muddy automobile. It may be that he will not hear you. His hand is on the arm of the soldier who holds the door of the car open. "What name? Why, boy, I know your father, back home."

"You'll know me, too, bishop, after this," the straightforward answer comes—"if we get back!"

We leave here tomorrow morning at 6:30.

Our School Service Bureau

FOR YEARS we have maintained for the benefit of readers of The Churchman a School Service Bureau, which has aided parents materially in selecting the right school. Years of experience have given us a knowledge of good schools which school-seekers will find valuable, and it is entirely at the service of our readers.

In seeking advice about schools we ask our readers to give the following information:

The age and sex of the child.
The maximum amount you are able to pay.
The state or section of the country preferred.
If any special training is required.

With such information at hand, we shall be glad to suggest schools to meet the conditions.

There is no charge whatever either to the school or school-seeker for this service.

INDISPENSABILITY

THERE are a good many things in this life that we can do without. There are publications that we don't have to read.

Religion is about the greatest force in human life, or as Mr. Britling puts it "Religion is the first thing and the last thing." CHURCH PEOPLE must rely on their CHURCH PAPERS for authentic, dependable news and comment of their Church.

The Church paper for Church people is the nearest approach to INDISPENSABILITY we know of among periodicals.

A good many of our readers and advertisers are commenting on the marked advance The Churchman has made of late.

TO ADVERTISERS

If you will weigh The Churchman fairly, squarely, intelligently and impartially as an advertising medium, you won't have to put your foot on the scales.

THE REV. Z. B. T. PHILLIPS, D.D., rector of St. Peter's church, St. Louis, has been appointed to the Council of the G. B. R. All seminaries are represented on this Council, so also is the practical parish minister and the laity. Dr. Phillips, coming from a large and successful Western parish, will help the Council to see the needs of a Western city for a modern ministry.

BISHOP COURTNEY TELLS OF HALIFAX CONDITIONS

NEW YORK CITY.—The following statement, written by Bishop Courtney regarding conditions in Halifax, is printed in the current number of the parish monthly issued by St. James' church:

St. James' church people will be interested to learn some condensed particulars of the frightful series of disasters which recently fell upon nearly half the population of the city, calling forth the sympathy and active assistance of America in all needed materials for the wounded, also doctors, nurses and workpeople, to supplement the local and near-by help.

A conservative estimate places the number of dead at not more than 1,500.

There are now in the various hospitals about 1,000 persons, some of whom are so seriously wounded that little hope of their recovery can be entertained.

There are about 200 cases of total blindness; many of them little children.

Fully 2,000 have sustained cuts and other wounds.

The principal buildings destroyed are: one of the largest hotels, the million-dollar dry dock, the cotton factory, the Provincial exhibition building, four fine school houses, fully 2,000 dwellings, all the churches in a vast area and every factory therein—all these simply wiped out.

The Institution for the Deaf is so damaged as to necessitate its being vacated.

The Protestant Orphanage has half a hundred children and the matron buried beneath its ruins.

The cost of restoring all these material fabrics must necessarily be enormous, but worse than all else is the bitter sorrow of the survivors over the loss of so many dear ones, and the awfulness of the death they died. May the God of all comfort be with them in their avalanche of woe!

My request to the rector (which he most graciously turned into an invitation to me) that I might say a few words to the congregation on the Sunday after the catastrophe, was most generously responded to by contributions amounting to $2,517.10, and my appeal to the general Church public through the courtesy of THE CHURCHMAN has brought in $1,965.18, so that altogether I have received $4,482.28, nearly all which I have sent to the Archbishop of Nova Scotia, who is most grateful for this generosity and will distribute it, as far as it will go, for the alleviation of the distress of our fellow Church people.

The Lord reward you all for what you have done.

Church at Camp Wadsworth

SPARTANBURG, SOUTH CAROLINA.—The first church built by the soldiers at any army camp is now being constructed at Camp Wadsworth. Funds were provided by Colonel Cornelius Vanderbilt's 102d Engineers. Dr. Horace R. Fell, formerly rector of St. Alban's church, Highbridge, New York, is chaplain of the engineers.

St. Luke's Church Offered to Village

EASTHAMPTON, LONG ISLAND.—Bishop Burgess has authorized the Rev. E. Russell Bourne, rector of St. Luke's church here, to invite the congregations of the other churches in the village to worship at St. Luke's. The plan is to have the various congregations worship at different hours, rather than to attempt a union service. This will be carried out only if the coal shortage makes it necessary.

The Rev. W. E. Allen Dies

ATLANTIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—The Rev. William E. Allen, Sr., died suddenly on January 10. The funeral was held at the Church of the Good Shepherd, of which he was rector for eight years. He was sixty-six years old and served the Church for thirty-eight years.

Saving Coal

HASTINGS, MICHIGAN.—As a measure of war-time economy and patriotic conservation, the Rev. D. R. Blaske, rector of Emmanuel church, has discontinued the usual Sunday evening services. Morning services are held in the chapel. Other Protestant bodies of the city plan to hold union worship in the Methodist auditorium.

A revised and enlarged edition containing prayers for our soldiers

A BOOK OF PRAYERS

By Samuel McComb, D.D.

Author of "Christianity and the Modern Mind"

WAR with its attendant suffering is turning people's minds towards serious matters. Many are groping for something to express the yearning of their troubled spirits. Dr. McComb has been appealed to by all sorts of distressed people, and an understanding of their needs, the needs of the time, has led him to incorporate in "A Book of Prayers" such war prayers as will be most helpful to soldiers at the Front, to worried families at home, and to those whose faith is shaken in the progress of humanity.

Russia

WE wish that prayers for Russia were more frequently used in our churches—the right sort of prayers. The disappointment, sometimes rising to hostility, that Russia is not doing all that she might for the Allies, is not always discerning. Russia deserves a generous measure of sympathy. No people has carried a heavier cross of anguish. Her poor have been tragically poor. Her light-bearers have for ages been crucified. The joyless life of this great people has expressed itself in the saddest music and literature that has ever been written. Her spirit has not been crushed, but its anguish has been told in the words that drop like scalding tears.

Who has crucified Russia? Prussia! The bureaucracy that has been crushing the soul of Russia is a foreign curse. It did not spring from Russian soil. It came from Prussia. Russian pogroms and the Black-Hundred are Prussian torture. The cruelest generals and admirals that Russia has known, and they have been tragically cruel, bear Prussian names. Those frightful punitive expeditions after the Revolution of 1905 were given into the hands of the hardest men whom the Russian bureaucracy could summon for its dastardly work. These men for the most part bore Prussian names.

The Revolution that is now sweeping over Russia is with all its pathetic folly an uprising against Prussian cruelty. Whether that Prussian spirit finds its task in Belgium, in Poland, in Armenia, in Eastern France or in crushing the Russian peasant, it is one and the same diabolical instrument of selfishness. In Germany it employs subtler weapons than it uses in helpless Russia. But whatever the weapon, the spirit works towards the same end. The Revolution in Russia and the armies of the Allies are fighting the same enemy of the human race.

Russia has suffered long at the hands of Prussia. We must be patient with her mistakes. We must never forget that the Revolution is our ally.

Prisons

THE diocese, as well as a parish, has pastoral responsibility. There are duties belonging to the cure of souls that cannot properly be cared for by a clergyman in his capacity as rector of a church. These duties require the prestige and authority of a whole diocese if they are to be adequately met. The welfare of prisoners is such a duty.

The fact that there are prison reform associations, State commissions and other responsible bodies, that have the welfare of our prisoners at heart, does not absolve the Church of responsibility towards prisoners. To visit them that are in prison is one of the inalienable duties of the Christian Church.

Recently the press of the country gave headlines to the revelations of cruelty and inefficiency in the State prison in Trenton, New Jersey. People who care for such matters were shocked that these things could exist in Christian America. We are accustomed to work ourselves up to a high pitch of indignation and sympathy over wrongs committed in far-away countries; we expect once and so often to weep with Mr. Kennan over Siberian exiles and the heartlessness of Russian prisons. That these things are better ordered here in America we take for granted.

But the amazing fact is that American indignation is very short-lived when it comes to our own abuses and cruelties. We can't do much about Siberia and Armenia; we can only anathematize the Czar and the Turk; but when the abomination occurs within our own borders the impulse to do something spends itself in trusting that those responsible for the evil will be punished and the evil eradicated.

It was a New York newspaper with no direct responsibility for the care of souls in Trenton, New Jersey, and not a social service commission, that unearthed the cruelties and inefficiency of New Jersey State prisons. A newspaper has weapons at its command for such a task that neither an individual nor a diocese possesses. Publicity is the sharpest weapon with which to attack any abuse. Moreover, responsible newspapers like The New York Evening Post are not handicapped with a reputation for hysteria. Amateur reformers and spokesmen for the Church frequently suffer such handicap.

Be this as it may, the fact remains that to visit prisons is a fixed pastoral duty of the Church. If the Church felt that responsibility as seriously as we think it ought so to do, perhaps diocesan authorities could tell us, as they are not today telling us, what is going on in the prisons and jails in their communities.

The duty is one fraught with danger. It is a task requiring judgment, restraint and political sagacity. But, then, nearly every diocese is appointing a commission of men who, it would be supposed, receive their appointments because they possess the talent to handle these delicate matters. Social service commissions are appointed to look after social conditions in the diocese as a whole. The men who find themselves on such commissions are generally men who have shown both skill and interest in such work. The question is what they and their bishops consider to be the definition of their work.

Unfortunately, often men on such commissions are preoccupied with some distant good. The reorganization of society is sufficiently engrossing and indefinite to require little time and skill. It does not demand of us any high order of consecration, either. Are we unjust in saying that social service commissions are too often hazy in their definitions of the task allotted to them? Do they always know precisely for what they were appointed? The reports of such commissions, made annually to their several conventions, are frequently of little real value. Everything evil out of doors seems to be a social task thrown upon the shoulders of these men. Nothing specific is expected of them; consequently that nothing practical is accomplished is likely to be the result.

We do not forget that men who consent to serve on such commissions frequently do so out of sheer magnanimity. They are already overworked. A hundred tasks within their own parishes lie at their door awaiting attention. Somebody must serve because it is the fashion for every well-organized diocese to be up to date in social service.

Preliminaries to Sanctification

WELL, let us grant then that the diocese has social service responsibility. If so, let us define it. Naturally it cannot range at large if anything is to be accomplished. It cannot dig into every social wrong and inquire into every injustice and abuse. It must begin somewhere and stick to its task until something of value emerges. The Christian Church is not only responsible for sanctification but, in the admirable phrase of Vida Scudder, for "the preliminaries to sanctification"—those conditions in our environment which make for right living. We can't shut ourselves up in our churches and parish houses and take evil and good as it comes to us for our reaction. We must do preventive work. But here again the field is too large, and fortunately a hundred other agencies are at hand giving willing and skilled help. Every university settlement, every great State commission that looks after housing, wages, hours of labor, child labor, is assisting in relieving the Church. If we feel that they are not doing this job well, then this work comes back upon us to handle as best we may. Not that we have in the past let any such responsibility weigh very heavily upon us. But let that pass.

The visiting of prisoners is a duty of the Church. It will always, so long as there are prisons, be a duty of the Church. And visiting of prisons does not in these days mean merely an occasional visit to such prisoners as are assigned to the several churches. It means that the prison is part of our pastoral responsibility. It means that we should know if prisoners are cruelly treated, improperly fed, badly housed. We should know this in the homes of our poor. Why not in the homes of prisoners?

Trenton prison, we are told, does not stand alone. Such prisons abound in America. Who is going to tell the Church whether the prison within a mile of a cathedral or some parish church is a festering sore? Shall we wait for a journal like The New York Evening Post to tell us? Shall we rely upon Mrs. Booth and women like her to shoulder the task?

Rectors of churches individually cannot do this work. It must be done by a group of men and women with the Church behind them. Why not the social service group? Let them go at the thing as a great task requiring time, skill and consecration. Let them eliminate some other less essential duties. Let them postpone the final reorganization of society and begin on these preliminaries of sanctification. If necessary let them hire expert workers to ferret out the evils. Money can always be found for work that is well done and definite in its scope. Then let these social service commissions make their reports to the Convention. Publicity will be given. The bishop can lend his prestige to the work of reform.

The diocese ought to know what is going on in all the prisons in that diocese. It is cause for chagrin that they have to be told by a daily paper.

We urge throughout the country that members of Conventions demand some intelligent report on prison conditions. And we also urge that the hands of the social service commission be freed for this essential duty of the Church. That the great Christian State of New York should have tolerated until yesterday such a prison as Sing Sing in its midst is a shame without excuse.

Augustus Peabody Gardner

WHILE the country was in the uproar of reaction against the edict of the Fuel Administrator, the Service for the Burial of the Dead was being read over the body of Major Gardner in St. John's Episcopal Church, Washington.

There was a time, not many months ago, when this patriot in revealing unwelcome facts to the Administration did a wise and generous service to his country. Though "the War was three thousand miles away" he felt with other idealists that the cause for which that War was being fought was not miles away from chivalrous hearts in America. He wanted us to face the facts and put our house in order. We are now paying heavy penalty for our refusal to put our house in order. Major Gardner gave his life for the cause that is now so eloquently proclaimed by our Government. He will be gratefully remembered by his countrymen for having seen what things we ought to do.

Clergymen's Salaries

REPORTS are coming to us of hardships among rectors, curates and missionaries, due to the high cost of living and inadequate salaries. There have been cases, not in our Church but in other Communions where the average wage is higher than in the Episcopal Church, of ministers going into munition factories to work. They felt the call to support their families to be more pressing than the call to the ministry of churches that refused a living wage to those who served them.

The Episcopal Church is rich. Many of its standards are luxurious. The Church of England and the Episcopal Church in America have lacked a sympathetic understanding of the problems of the poor. Christianity in its beginnings threw in its lot with the disfranchised of earth. Therein lay its most beautiful strength. The clergy, experiencing the discipline of poverty, may again throw in their lot with the poor. Perhaps a great Mendicant Order in the Episcopal Church might make itself felt in our Diocesan and General Conventions. Vestrymen are often strangely indifferent to the question of a living wage for their clergy.

About Those Prayers for Church Unity

ONE of the best things that the Episcopal Church does is to write prayers for Church Unity. One of the things is does most awkwardly is to take practical steps towards inter-church fellowship. A devout lady said to her rector the other day when she had read of the proposal to offer the use of our churches for congregations of other communions in the interest of fuel conservation: "But do you mean to say that these people are actually to be allowed to use our pulpits and chancels?"

These devout ladies of whatever sex have much to learn about Christianity.

War Intercessions

WAR intercessions need not be lugubrious. The Prayer Book is never lugubrious. In almost every parish in the country there is at least one service a week "with special intercessions for the War". The order of the service is usually original, devised by the rector or the bishop; the prayers are new, written in the tumult of conflicting emotions with which we have been contending since we plunged into the world struggle less than a year ago. These services are for the most part rather badly attended, and the reason given over and over again is "they are so depressing". Depressing! To commit our cause into God's hands depressing? To consign our fighting forces to His care depressing?

The trouble is quite apparent. Many of these services are morbid; the prayers are morbid and the war hymns are morbid. The services that follow most strictly the Prayer Book are the enheartening services. The Litany and the Holy Communion meet our war needs as they have met our other needs. They make us trustful and triumphant, never morbid or depressed. The fact that we pray "in His Name" means that we place value on spiritual rather than material gain. It is spiritual triumph that this War stands for. To be morbid belies the cause in which we fight. Our war intercessions should strengthen our confidence by the assurance of God's moral backing. It is said that an American whose boy was flying in the LaFayette Escadrille hearing the news of his son's death met it with the words "He has won!"

Prohibition and the Drug Evil

THE supporters of prohibition must, of course, know that their work is not finished when they have succeeded in limiting or prohibiting the manufacture of spirituous liquors. When the house is swept and garnished there is a host of little devils ready to move in. One of these is the drug evil. The meanest class of men that walk the earth, except one, are the venders of drugs. Not very distantly related to this class are the doctors who will write a drug prescription to anybody for a fee. An investigation made in the city of Chica some years ago disclosed the fact that there were paid agents who were distributing on the streets drugs free to children with the intention of creating a market by fixing the drug habit among boys and girls. The victim of drugs falls as low as humanity can fall. In comparison with this last estate of the weakling, the ordinary victim of the liquor habit is a shining member of society. The prohibitionists are eager to serve humanity. They must begin at once to safeguard the weak against the vermin who crawl about our large cities selling drugs.

Ministers and the Morally and Mentally Unfit

THE wording of the provisions of the new Draft Law hurts our pride. The Government is, of course, too busy to be delicate; it must only state facts. The fact, however polite, is that ministers and the morally and mentally unfit are to be exempt from military service. If a vote of the clergy throughout the country were taken, we think that they would be found eagerly willing to be treated as doctors and medical students are treated—to be drafted for such service as is proper to their calling.

Belgian War Prayers

AGAIN and again Cardinal Mercier has summoned his people to prayer during the tragic years that have passed since Germany broke her troth with the world. Brussels is under the special patronage of St. Michael. For many years the people have been accustomed to repeat after Mass, "And do thou, Prince of the heavenly host, thrust down to hell Satan and all wicked spirits who wander through the world for the ruin of souls." "Henceforth," Cardinal Mercier instructs his people, "you will be careful to say it after the priest slowly and distinctly, for the defence of the rights of our Belgian native land."

In a later call to prayer, he has summarized the scope of war prayers in words that should be helpful to us all. "We cannot exclude anyone—not even our enemies—from our prayers. . . . Let us pray above all for our dear soldiers, who are bound so closely to our affections by the ties of blood, perhaps, or patriotism and their devotion to us. Let us not separate from them their wives and mothers, those silent heroines of the great European drama. Pray for our armies who in the West, in the East and in the South, fight with so much valiance and tenacity, for our common cause. May their guardian angels be near them in action and keep them religious and chaste in hours of repose. Let us especially commend to you also our priests, whether military chaplains or stretcher-bearers. May their ministry prove faithful and may they pass through all dangers without stain and return to us pious and strong. Suffering has made us more inclined to pity. . . . Take pity upon the Armenian people; pray for them. . . . Poland, noble Poland . . . suffers more than we do. . . . Pray for her. . . . And lastly here, too, in occupied Belgium let us pray for one another, and let us love one another."

War Songs

IF the evolutionary deductions of the author of "Instincts of the Herd in Peace and War", Macmillan Company, may be trusted, England and America need not feel so badly, after all, over the invidious comparison of Tommy's war songs and those of Fritz. Professor Franke early in the War demonstrated the superiority of the German civilization by comparing the high-brow war songs of the German soldiers with the music hall ditties of Tommy. Tommy, of course, is a bit kinder to women, children and old men, but his musical taste leaves something to be desired. Soldiers who make war to exalted music and welcome Chopin in the trenches are fitted to rule mankind, Pan-Germanists think. And some of us, who rather loved Tommy, began to wish that he would brush up his music just a bit. But he was incorrigible. He refused to make a grand passion of war, and he went on enjoying his London ditties.

How comforting, therefore, is the testimony of the author of the keenest psychological studies of war instincts that has been published. W. Trotter writes in "Instincts of the Herd in Peace and War":

> "To the German the war song is a serious matter; it is for the most part a grave composition, exalted in feeling, and thrilling with the love of country; he is taught to sing it, and he sings it well, with obvious and touching sincerity and with equally obvious advantage to his morale.
> "The attempt to introduce similar songs and a similar attitude towards them to the use of the English soldier has often been made, and exactly as often lamentably failed. On the whole it has been, perhaps, the most purely comic effort of the impulse to mimic Germany which has been in favor until of late with certain people of excellent aims but inadequate biological knowledge. The English soldier, consistently preferring the voice of Nature to that of the most eminent doctrinaire, has, to the scandal of his lyrical enemies, steadily drawn his inspiration from the music-hall and the gutter, or from his own rich store of flippant and ironic realism.
> "The biological meaning of these peculiarities renders them intelligible and consistent with one another.
> "The wolf, then, is the father of the war song, and it is among peoples of the lupine type alone that the war song is used with real seriousness. Animals of the socialized type are not dependent for their morale upon the narrow intensities of aggressive rage. Towards such manifestations of it as concerted cries and war songs they feel no strong instinctive impulsion, and are therefore able to preserve a relatively objective attitude. Such cryings of the pack, seeming thus to be mere functionless automatisms, naturally enough come to be regarded as patently absurd.
> "Examples of behavior illustrating these deep differences or reaction are often to be met with in the stories of those who have described incidents of the war. It is recorded that German soldiers in trenches within hearing of the English, seeking to exasperate and appal the latter, have sung in an English version their fondly valued 'Hymn of Hate.' Whereupon the English, eagerly listening and learning the words of the dreadful challenge, have petrified their enemies by repeating it with equal energy and gusto, dwelling no doubt with the appreciation of experts upon the curses of their native land."

In reading this biological explanation of the War song, does it not give an uncomfortable suggestion that perhaps the ferocity with which some of us have tried to make a patriotic issue of our national hymns may be the biological outcroppings of the wolf species which we should do well not to feature?

The Churching of Women

AMONG the services that the Prayer Book provides for special occasions probably none is used less frequently than the Thanksgiving of Women After Child-Birth; yet there is no occasion when it would seem more fitting to repair to the house of God to give Him thanks than when a woman has safely passed through the "perils of child-birth". The custom has the background of history, the example of the Blessed Virgin and the beauty of the Liturgy to commend it. We therefore welcome the suggestion made by Mrs. I. H. Noe, of Macon, at the meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary in Charleston during the synod of the Province of Sewanee that at the time of the service of Churching of Women, or as a thanksgiving after child-birth, women should be asked to make an offering for maternity work in the mission field. The Prayer Book directs that "the Woman that cometh to give Thanks must offer accustomed offerings which shall be applied by the Minister and the Churchwardens to the relief of distressed women in child-bed". If, through the leadership of the Woman's Auxiliary, a definite object for these gifts should be provided, the making of the offering and the use of the Thanksgiving service might be stimulated. Perhaps then the rubric suggesting that "if there be a Communion, it is convenient that she receive the Holy Communion" might emerge from its present obscurity. It would be a beautiful thing if those mothers for whom we pray whenever we plead the Litany could revive the old custom of coming to the church to thank God for His mercy and to make an offering for those women in non-Christian lands who are not ministered to with the tenderness that their more fortunate sisters here enjoy.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMON

Our Chance of Winning the War

By THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

"Watchman, what of the night?" Isaiah xxi, 11.

IN 1914 there was published in Germany a work by Herr Otto Siemens, Wie lange kann der Krieg dauern? (How long can the War last?), in which the author said, "As soon as it comes to the sanguinary reality, the English hireling's heart drops into his breeches. And the English Scotchmen have not even breeches for it to drop into".

I wonder what Herr Siemens thinks today. Breeches or no breeches, since those words were written, the Cold Stream Guards has been all but annihilated fourteen times, and today is fighting at its full strength. "Kitchener's miserable little army", to use the contemptuous phrase of the Kaiser, has become a splendidly trained and equipped fighting force of five million men, which, despite all its losses, enters 1918 with its maximum strength and efficiency. The war which the Germans were to win in a few weeks is now entering its fourth calendar year; while Secretary Baker, predicting success for the future, reminds us confidently that "through sixteen fierce battles of great magnitude the British and French have pushed ahead steadily, with methodical and cumulative gains". I speak of this because, while a fortnight ago I tried to show that we must win, I want this week to show that we can win and we will.

We can beat the Germans because we are beating them. When fighting with a small nation like Serbia or Belgium, or a betrayed nation like Russia or Italy, they win battles, but we are winning the war. And that is what counts. Germany, after forty years of preparation, was at the height of her power in 1914; and she has been going down hill ever since. Great Britain and France, taken unawares, were at the lowest level of their impotence. Combined as they are today, with their forces thoroughly developed and ready, and with all the enormous resources of this country to our last dollar and our last man enlisted in their aid, they are at the summit of their military possibilities. There has never been an hour when their ultimate success has been so well assured.

Today England alone has 4,000 factories turning out munitions, and every week she is producing 17,000 tons of projectiles. In two years, from 1915 to 1917, her capacity for the manufacture of high explosives increased so that last October it was twenty-five times as great as it was two years before.

All they have to do is to hold their own a little longer, and every day of waiting renders more certain the rout of their enemies; for, while time is working for their triumph, it is grinding with the certainty of the slowly grinding mills of God against their foes. The stars in their courses are fighting against Sisera. And Sisera knows it. Hence his ceaseless and noisy clamorings after peace. What think you? Are the swashbucklering Germans a people to cry for peace unless they see calamity in front of them? Has it not been their declared creed from the very beginning that "War must be our greatest industry"? Now the thief wants to make friends with the policeman in order that he may get away with the swag. But there is only one way that he can do it: to surrender the swag and suffer the just punishment of his crimes. We are through discussing terms of peace. We shall dictate them.

Can you recall a single battle on the French and British front—where the victory in this War must ultimately be won—in which the Germans have triumphed? I cannot. Have you forgotten 1915 when, with fresh forces, outnumbering the English two to one in men and five to one in guns, they rushed forward boasting that they would take Calais? Did they do it? What have they done, except to crucify small and helpless peoples? Tell me if you can. They were beaten at the Marne, they were beaten at Verdun, they were beaten at the Somme, just as this year or next they will be beaten at the Rhine; only then it will be a thousand times worse, as they very well know.

If I had space it would be easy to show how Germany is losing her morale. She has been fed for so long on falsehoods that at last she is "fed up". She was told that they would reach Paris in fourteen days; but they didn't. She was told that Verdun would end the war by putting France out of commission before England could get ready; but it didn't. When all else failed she was assured by the Kaiser, by Hindenburg and by Tirpitz, each solemnly laying his hand upon his wishbone and spitting three times to make it certain, that the submarine would starve England into submission in three months. Did it do it? What did it do. It sealed Germany's doom beyond any possibility of hope, for it brought America into the War. Verily, "whom the gods would destroy they first make mad".

And now, do you know what that means? No! Neither do I; for what has already been accomplished in these last eight months is so wonderful and so great that not one of us outsiders can begin to grasp it. There has never been anything like it in the history of the world. Mistakes and much incompetence! What would you expect? If your business should be increased ten thousand per cent. over night, would you look for one hundred per cent. efficiency? In addition to that, suppose that you not only had to increase your business but to completely change its character! Our business was peace. We knew nothing about war. Some of us began to fear we never would; that we were all luxury-rotted and that our nation had lost its soul. When suddenly we staggered into the grip of a cyclone.

I have room for only one illustration—which might be multiplied by the thousand—of what it is going to mean to the Allies, and to Germany, that we have entered this War, just one fact which I am quite sure will be a revelation to most of the readers of this article. Are you aware, according to a very illuminating statement in the Scientific American by Col. H. H. Arnold, Chief of the Air Division of the Signal Corps, that when on April 6th America declared war against Germany there was practically neither airplane industry nor training system nor the requisite general engineering knowledge concerning it in this country? Are you aware that since that time we have established the greatest airplane factory in the world, and that this is only one of many which are already built or building? This one is a quarter of a mile long, it employs 15,000 operatives, and at this present time is turning out fifty airplanes every day. And bear in mind this is only one. What is that going to mean to Germany a few months hence? The Germans know, if you don't.

This very day we have more soldiers in France than Napoleon had at Waterloo, or Meade had at Gettysburg. Every week others are on their way and we will send ten million more if necessary. "You must go back home", said General Pershing to Charles W. Whitehair, secretary of the Cornell University Y. M. C. A., "and dispose of that doctrine that we can't break through the German lines. We can break through with a human wedge and we will. Tell everybody you meet of our determination to win".

And we will win. The United States has thus far never lost a war, and we are not going to lose this one. And with us we have England and France. Vive la France! I take off my hat.

William Hohenzollern, we did not want to enter the war. We were patient almost to the point of folly. But at last the clock has struck. We are in it.

And, William Hohenzollern, "beware of the anger of a patient man." You shook your finger in the face of our Ambassador Gerard when he was your guest and said to him, "Remember! After this war is over, we are not going to have any nonsense from the Americans".

And, William Hohenzollern, you were right. Perfectly right! Nonsense is not what you are going to get.

"Be not deceived. God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap!"

"Watchman, what of the night? And the watchman said, 'The morning cometh!'" We thank Thee, O God

Religious Conditions in the Middle West

By THE REV. GEORGE P. ATWATER

WHEN I began to grope toward the heart of this subject one word came persistently to my mind—chaos. Had I lived my life on the Atlantic Coast, and had my farthest venture westward been to Philadelphia or perhaps to Niagara Falls, it would have been relatively easy to create a mental picture of the Middle West; the land of wheat and corn, of broad undulating prairies and mighty rivers. I should have created a pastoral panorama on a large scale, with one accident of congestion of population, the converging point of rail and water, Chicago; with the peaceful villages of Cleveland and Cincinnati, and the prairie towns of Indianapolis and Kansas City; famous Milwaukee, with its paradoxical reputation of being high but not dry; of the quaint and sleepy river town of St. Louis. But living, as I have done, within the picture, it appears somewhat different. I realize other conditions. I know that northeastern Ohio is growing industrially more rapidly than any other section of our land; that Iowa has more automobiles in proportion to its population than any other state in the Union; that Chicago is not all wind, and St. Louis and Milwaukee are not all water. I know that the Middle West is not one great homogeneous area, but in topography, climate, occupations and peoples is as diversified as any similar area upon the face of the globe. It is more than the granary of the nation. It is probably the workshop of the nation.

Nor is it lacking in education facilities. Of all the institutions of higher learning in the United States it has 37 per cent. and enrolls 40 per cent. of all the students of the United States in those institutions.

The Middle West is the section most typical of America today. No one element preponderates to disturb the proportion. It has not the conservatism of the East among people of similar traditions; it has not the negro problem of the South; nor the industrial and vocational incohesion of the Far West. The Middle West is the characteristic American section within whose borders the problems of democracy are presented on the greatest scale, and whose people are developing toward that final composite which will be typical of our land. It is the arena in which the struggle between multifarious ideas, origins and temperaments is taking place. Consequently it is the supreme mission field for religion. For while the surge of Orient may carry to the shores of the far West the esoteric ideas and fashions which are as enchanting as its iridescent climate, and while the East may evolve its Christian scientific camouflage, with its intellectual atmosphere as rare as California's climate, the vigorous battle for religion in the United States will take place in the Middle West.

For the purpose of this article I have assumed that the Middle West is identical with the division adopted by the Government, known as the North Central States, including Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, and Missouri. This area contains about one-fifth of the area of Continental United States, and about one-third of the population.

What conditions do the forces of Christianity here face? I have been reading the United States census report about ourselves here in the Middle West.

The report is a large volume and is very comprehensive. It is both interesting and disconcerting.

The Middle West has a population of about thirty millions. There are 10,600,000 Church members. This is about the average for the land.

Among these Church members we find in the Middle West every sort of religious organization in our land's ecclesiastical flora and fauna. We have the Heavenly Recruits and the Yonker Brethren, the Defenceless Mennonites and the Non-Sectarian Church of the Bible Faith. A list would be wearisome.

In the Middle West we speak nearly all the languages of Pentecost and many others. We seem to live amidst the ruins of the Tower of Babel.

Of the 10,600,000 Church members, 4,000,000 adhere to the Roman Catholic Church. The Methodists and Lutherans account for 3,000,000; the Baptists and Disciples for about 1,500,000; the Presbyterians for 600,000, leaving the remainder of us to struggle along with 1,500,000 persons.

In the whole United States the Roman Catholics have grown, from 1890 to 1906, from 30 to 36 per cent. of the whole church membership; while the Protestants, if you will permit me to quote the word from the noncontroversial census report, have decreased from 68 to 61 per cent. Probably this condition is about the same in the Middle West.

The Roman Catholics in the Middle West have 132 members for one thousand of population; the Methodists 53. But why go down the ladder? Let us leap. The Episcopal Church has seven in every thousand. Compare this with the District of Columbia in which we have 44 in every thousand, and New York State in which we have 24 in every thousand.

But why continue with statistics? Have you not the picture: an enormous area, a highly complex population, a medley of tongues and traditions; the Roman Church powerful, a few strong denominations; a few numerically weak, but strongly organized; a large number of weak religious efforts, and an unchurched population of about 20,000,000 people. The Middle West, the heart of America, rich, active, progressive, striving for every vital thing in education, in social uplift, in the mechanics of living, but largely adrift from religious effort.

What in this vast conglomerate are the conditions which, aside from sin and crime and pure worldliness of heart, are the factors in our national life which prevent religious development? At the risk of appearing to read titles which should head chapters, and because each one of you will see the bearing of each item in this catalog at once, I shall endeavor to enumerate what I believe to be the conditions for which our manner of civilization is responsible, and against which religion fights a forlorn battle.

(1) The constant shift from center to center of the units and families of our industrial population. The movement is not alone from country to city, but from city to city. The immense difficulty of our Government in finding registered men for the draft after a period of only three months well illustrates this. Draft boards in one county alone in Ohio have failed to find 4,000 men at the first summons. This drift destroys every association and tie, and religious attachment ceases except in rare cases.

(2) The movement from country to city and consequent slowness to adjust life to city conditions. Any of you who has come into contact with the forlorn and homesick families who have left their rural communities and villages in which they were well known and have found themselves in a city and in contact with a city congregation, will realize the difficulty.

(3) The movement from section to section in the same city.

(4) The movement of the well-to-do from city to suburbs and country. Trolley cars and the automobile are responsible for this. While our fathers wrote about "Evolution versus Christianity", and sought to combat in evolution a principle subversive of Christianity, our sons may well write treatises on "Electricity versus Christianity". Evolution may have slain its thousands but electricity has slain its tens of thousands. Trolley cars and storage batteries have mowed down the Christian hosts. Add to these the telephone, with its promptness in conveying premonitions of contemplated Sunday visits, and the projecting lantern which takes you in its imaginative fantasy from every emotional and comic and scenic Dan to every thrilling Beersheba, and you have a quadrifarious entanglement against which Christian forces in vain go over the top.

(5) Again the Census Bureau reveals another disconcerting fact. Adopting once more the definition of the Census Report we find that among Protestants and our native born the birth rate is decreasing, while among our foreign born, mostly Roman Catholics, the birth rate is increasing.

(6) In rural communities we have an admixture of peoples of every tradition which are replacing the more homogeneous communities of a generation ago. It makes difficult if not impossible the effective work of the rural church.

(7) The stress of modern life is preventing attention to the Church. During the social service phase of presenting the gospel the Church urged men to pay attention to affairs of social uplift and civic righteousness. Men have done so in large numbers and in so doing have found other vital interests and have neglected the Church.

(8) An epidemic of clubs, lodges, societies, leagues, and organizations has spread over our land. Religious forces have failed to recognize this need of men for association of the sort involved in lodges. I know that there is something ludicrous in the spectacle of the village barber dressed in a tunic and calling himself the "Exalted Right Wing of the Order of Seraphim", but there is something in this appeal to the imagination, in the melodramatic phases of such activities, in the unexplored depths of human nature seeking for relief from the gray monotony of existence, in the suggestion of untried realms, remnants of ancestral conditions clinging to the edges of one's soul through long periods of evolution, that gives the lodges their charm and value. The dramatic instinct is strong in man. Next to being a king the best thrill comes by representing one, amidst those who feel the desire to let imagination weave its spell. That, and the spirit of fraternity, create lodges. Religion has failed to use this instinct adequately. The psychology underlying the Stonemen is worth study.

This brings me to the more difficult portion of my subject. I have tried to trace the physical conditions. What of the mental condition in religion in the Middle West? Why this restlessness of the human spirit reaching out into countless channels, hardening into organizations, tending toward expression in sects and groups? Why the twenty millions apparently untouched by religious appeal? I say apparently, because I know that you must recognize that all religious feelings or forces are not contained in churches, nor does church membership always signify religious feeling and force.

How many of these millions have a vital consciousness of God, which prompts them to some higher thought and conduct? Is not that the real question?

If many have it, what are the evidences of it? The ecclesiastical expression of it may not be satisfactory to the statistician, but is the vital expression of it satisfactory? Are mercy, justice, righteousness, charity, sympathy, creeping to a higher level in our land? I am convinced that they are. Christianity has been a leaven and its unknighted champions who have absorbed its spirit have been given a vision of its goal and purpose. Time fails to try to convince you that this is the case. I wish only to cite one instance. I am convinced that those who guide the industrial interests of our land are slowly but surely becoming conscious of their responsibility for the human problem involved in industry. I see other evidences that the things for which religious forces have striven are being championed by the unmeasured forces that have their origin in the hearts of countless who are not numbered in the churches.

You must not accuse me of this disloyalty to a principle to which I have given my life's efforts, the value of organized Christianity, when I affirm that the unchurched are not without some justification for their aloofness when they contemplate the churches. Of course, there are countless thousands sunk into inertia, immovable, and anchored in a meagre existence, until they become incapable of action, irresponsive to every appeal, whether of city, nation or church. But others are church-shy. The Church is not always delicate The unchurched need more sympathetic understanding and less rebuking or condescension. I could never endure a certain type of religious canvass that has so often taken place in towns. A canvasser, with a bearing of being so respectable that he wouldn't even whistle on Sunday, brings a householder to his door with his pipe in his hand, thus confirming the canvasser's suspicions that between them there is a great gulf fixed, and begins to question the householder in a matter of fact and statistical way. The householder, feeling that the Day of Judgment is enough without the inquisition, with embarrassed and sometimes indignant restraint, detaches from his mental content a few passable statements that conform to the rulings on the canvasser's board. Such a method implies some objectionable superiority on the part of the inquirer and a right to intrude by reason of that superiority. It is such a poor approach to the unchurched.

I have a suspicion that in the Middle West such of the unchurched as are not claimed by worldliness are untouched by organized religion because religious forces as a whole have not that delicacy of touch, that painstaking persuasiveness of approach, by which the unchurched may be attracted. Taken in all, the methods of religious endeavor are too rigid or too exacting. The Middle West is strenuous and vigorous to be sure. But the spiritual or religious element in man is somewhat reserved, or timid, or diffident. Church-shy people are numerous because they sometimes lack faith in the sufficiency of their quantum of religion to justify their adherence to an elaborate doctrine, a strict discipline, and a too pronounced profession.

Not only have the ecclesiastical tests been too inflexibly applied, but certain mannerisms have been cultivated, such as a tendency to use the words brother and sister; certain presumptions have been created, as for example the expectation that the converted and religious will surely condemn certain amusements; an aloofness of air has been emphasized, as if the converted tolerated some inferior things which he could not approve. All of which has repelled the normal man. Too much has been expected and the unchurched have a suspicion that life would lose a certain vital "tang" and would assume more or less irksome pretences if one carried religion too far.

Then again the Middle West has been the happy hunting ground of the revivalist, who, too often, after normal feelings return, has left his hearers filled with a mental residuum which partakes largely of the nature of the trail which they hit.

The temper of the Middle West is pragmatic, practical and human. We have no leisure for speculations or for theories. We have no strictly leisure class such as the rich of the East, the traditionally unhurried of the South, or the comfortably replete of the slopes of the Pacific. We have few who say, "Heaven has a splendid reputation, but when I finish my fight I am off to California". The gold coast of Cambridge and the gold coast of the Pacific are equally remote from our ambitions.

Consequently religion in the Middle West is of a distinct type. It is not an intellectual exercise in the Unitarian sense, nor is it a mirage in the Christian Science sense. It is more practical and savors of the soil. Sometimes, as in Methodism, it is plain, rigid and austere, but it deals with practical things such as dancing. With the Roman Catholics it is a sure way to get somewhere, as sure as the trolley line, and you must not talk to the motorman.

The Middle West wants its religion in the living man, not in theological systems. Recently I saw in the Smithsonian Institute in Washington a case filled with jars and tubes and other glass receptacles each containing some gas or liquid or powder. The sum total of these chemical constituents was the equivalent of the physical structure and organs of the average man. It was impressive. Here was a man reduced to lowest terms. Here were oxygen and hydrogen, and all the rest, the basic constituents of a man, all arranged, systematized and labeled. But no passing girl, however susceptible and sensitive to the presence of a man, cast any bewitching glance at that case. No elderly woman shed any tear over the lamentable condition of this dismembered being. No, for he was merely a chemical system.

Some Letters Home—V

FROM CHAPLAIN ERNEST W. WOOD

October 29, 1917.

This afternoon I went off, on foot, to see some bombing, and was gone from 1 to 5 p. m. A little while ago word went out for all men who played baseball to hand in their names. The names were sent in in large numbers, but the would-be ball players were rather surprised to learn that their qualifications were to be used in bomb throwing! Most of the men pronounce bomb, "bum". The other day an officer asked a soldier whom he belonged with, and he replied, "the bums". Our interpreter, "Monsieur Gab-Gab", has gone and we have a new one, Monsieur LeFevre, who has just come from over two years' service as interpreter with the British army. Before that he was in the French army, and was wounded. He is a very interesting man and a real addition to our mess.

Yesterday, Sunday, October 28, I had the Holy Communion at 8 a. m. in the school house, and the usual service at 9 a. m. Then I walked over, in the rain, to "F", where I had a service at 10.30 a. m., consisting of the Holy Communion, with hymns and an address. This type of service seems to be much appreciated, and my plan of having it over there every two weeks seems to work very satisfactorily. It was pretty cold in the Y. M. C. A. shack when the service was held, the only heating (?) apparatus being a small stove which let out clouds of smoke, but no heat. Possibly the smoke was due to the fact that the pipe wasn't long enough to reach the roof and simply let the smoke out in the room. After the service Mr. Mee, of the Y. M. C. A., who had gone over with me, came back on Mr. Williams' bicycle, and I stayed to dinner with the officers of the Third Battalion at "F". We had a good dinner, with lots of jam for dessert, a luxury I have not had for a long time. After dinner I walked back here in a driving rain with cold head wind. My rain coat blew so that I got soaked to the skin from the thighs down. The water ran down inside my leggings. As soon as I arrived in my nice cozy little room, with its nice little fireless fireplace, I took off my wet clothes and took a rub with a towel and then put on dry clothes, and got in my cot and had a warm nap. When I looked out of the window after my nap I found that the rain had changed to snow—not respectable snow, but great chunks of wet, sloppy slush tumbling down all over everything and after sticking to anything it touched melting into little rivers of ice water. I had planned to hold a service at 7 p. m. in "H", so after supper I put on my overcoat and my slicker over that, and started out. The wind was on my back, so it was not bad going. There were fifty men at the service, who sang well, and gave me wonderful attention when I spoke on the very appropriate text, "I have learned in whatsoever state I am therein (not 'therewith') to be content". (Philippians IV). It was a hard walk back against the wind and snow, and a good part of the way up hill. I put on the woolen cap we bought in Syracuse, and pulled it down over my face. I had to carry my hat. This morning my hat was so very wet and cold that I had to light my lamp and hold the hat over it for a while to warm it up before putting it on. I am feeling very well, and I might say the same as a sergeant, whose letters I often censor, who mails four or five letters all beginning exactly the same, as follows: "I write you these few lines to say I am feeling fine, and my helt is fine, and hoping you are the same".

I do not write as many letters as I should like to, because it is hard to write at all in an unheated room. I think of you all constantly, and I feel pretty lonely at times.

A Step Forward

THE Survey recently contained two valuable articles, one relating to our marvelous Red Cross organization in France, the other to the rebuilding of Sing Sing. It is good to know that in spite of the War the Christian work of social reconstruction has been going steadily on. We quote from Mr. Winthrop D. Lane in the Survey:

"Few more dramatic scenes have been enacted in any prison in this country than that which occurred at Sing Sing November 9, when Governor Whitman, amid the cheers of assembled law-breakers, lowered the first stone to be removed from the bastille cell-block at that institution in the process of demolition which the last legislature enjoined.

"Sing Sing is actually to give way to a new, sanitary, industrial prison on wide acreage in the country. This has been the object of an energetic campaign in New York State for fifteen years. . .

"To the prisoners, as well as to onlookers from the outside, the stone was the symbol of an outworn philosophy and treatment of human beings. With it, said one speaker, went 'all the anguish, tears, disappointment and lost opportunity of reformation that Sing Sing has stood for throughout most of its ninety-odd years of existence. . .

"The prison that is to replace Sing Sing is to be built at Wingdale, in Dutchess county. It is to be a farm industrial prison, composed of groups of detached or semi-detached small buildings. The Sage bill appropriated $1,250,000 for the erection of this prison. Its construction is in the hands of the Commission on New Prisons and excavation has already begun.

"Meanwhile, the present Sing Sing site is to be utilized in a novel manner. . . It will be made into a receiving and distributing station for all prisoners sentenced to State prisons. Here law-breakers will remain for from three to six months. During this time they will be classified on the basis of their mental characteristics, physical ailments or abnormalities and the kind of treatment best suited for them. They will then be transferred to that one of the four State prisons where they can receive the closest approximation to the needed treatment. There is not among the State prisons today any systematic classification of inmates. First-timers and others are sent to each. Those seriously ill with tuberculosis are sent to the special hospital at Clinton prison, but in general there is not even an approximate classification. . .

"In this connection it is interesting to note a proposal for a possible redistribution of the inmates of both State prisons and reformatories made by the Prison Association of New York in its latest annual report. This has value both for New York and other States also. The proposal begins by distinguishing the following five principal classes of prisoners requiring individual treatment: Feebleminded, requiring segregation (estimated to be approximately 10 per cent. of the total State prison and State reformatory population); psychotics (approximately 2 per cent.); perverts (1.56 per cent.); tubercular (10 per cent.); cardiacs (3 per cent.). When these classes have been segregated, the remainder, it is believed, will constitute the reasonably normal—those who, for example, could be expected to profit most from self-government."

Heart of the Jungle Tales – II

AT SCHOOL

"GOING to school" is no trial for the African boy and girl. These little forest creatures love school life and lend themselves with wonderful readiness to its discipline. It is getting permission to go to school that is, or was, the great task, for the parents were never willing to trust their boys and girls to the care of the white man. They could not believe that anything but harm would come to their children if they were given into the stranger's charge. However, after the confidence of the parents was gained, the children went happily to their daily school tasks in answer to the call of the school drum.

The school house was built somewhat after the style of their hut homes. The men and boys of the village often helped with the work of building. They cleared the ground and cut the bark for the walls. The building was usually little more than a great roof thatched with leaves, over rows and rows of seats and desks rough-hewn from the logs of the forest. The walls were made so low that the children could sit in their seats and look far beyond the clearing.

In such rude little schoolhouses as these the little boys and girls took up their tasks, proud in the possession of such wonders as slates and books.

It required great skill and patience to get the older boys at school to work promptly and to work well through the daily program laid down for them. In one of the large mission schools in Cameroon the boys were expected to rise at the five-forty-five bell. One half hour later they were in the schoolroom for prayers, after which they had breakfast. From seven o'clock until nine they cut grass and did any other necessary work in the yard. School began at nine o'clock and lasted until half-past three "with a recess of half an hour in the morning, for taking jiggers out of their feet, and an hour at noon." From four o'clock until five they worked again in the yard and at five they took a bath in the sea.

Their regular food was cassava and dried fish. Plantains were sometimes given in place of cassava. When fish could not be got, the meat of a ripe cocoanut was substituted. The food for the whole day was given out at noon and they did together such cooking as they needed to do in a large kettle. They were provided with knives and forks, tin plates and spoons, and they ate off a table. These were, indeed, new experiences to the black children, for the only plates they had ever known were leaves, and their meals were usually eaten sitting on the floor in their hut homes or on the ground if they happened to be in the open.

Some of the games that have won the greatest favor among these little people are "Cat's Cradle," "Hen and Wild Cat," "Spearing the Disc," and "London Bridge." Cat's Cradle is played with a twisted fibre of the plantain stalk. In the game of "Hen and Wild Cat" the hen warns her brood of the approaching danger of the wild cat, which may catch any foolish chick that fails to drop at the mother hen's warning.

African "London Bridge" is played in the following way:

*One is chosen to be the mother, and all the others, except two who form the arch, are the children. The mother with her children passes under the arms of the other two. The child caught is drawn aside for the choice between a cake of gourd seed or a peanut porridge, a necklace of beads or a bow and arrow. The children are caught and ranged in lines until there remains none but the mother and one who is now called "The Only Child." This remnant of a once numerous family takes to the bush, but the mother comes forth from time to time and tosses a handful of grass toward the others, who ask her in chorus:

"How big is the only child now?" "The only child creeps," says the mother. "He-e-e!" exclaim the chorus after this.

"How old is the only child now?" "The only child walks." "He-e-e!"

"How big is the only child now?" "The only child creeps," says the mother. "He-e-e!" exclaim the chorus after this.

"How old is the only child now?" "The only child walks." "He-e-e!"

And so on, until the only child grows up, is married, and has a baby of her own. Then the grandmother is asked questions about the child of the only child.

"How old is the child of the only child now?" "The child of the only child creeps!" "He-e-e!"

And then the grandmother responds that "he walks, he gets traps, one day he has killed a little antelope, another day he has killed a big antelope, and now he has killed an elephant!"

"He-e-e!" shout the chorus as this climax is reached, and one after another comes to beg a piece of elephant meat from the child of the only child, who now comes out of hiding. One after the other is refused until he finds the one who pleases him, and to her he gives a piece of the meat. They then run away together, all the others following.

African schoolboys are very much respected for their wisdom by the older people of the villages and the desire to learn has made many a black boy endure untold hardships for the chance to attend school.

Songoro was a dirty, half-grown boy of about thirteen summers. He had attached himself to a caravan on a three or four months' march through a country unknown and hostile. They called him "Kitchen," for they had found him sitting in the ashes around the fire which was in the open. All the clothes he had on was a strip of dark blue cotton two yards in length thrown around his loins. He sat around for a week waiting for a chance to do some job for the company.

One morning one of the men was unable to fetch water for the caravan and Songoro was allowed to take his place. That chance to do some useful work transformed the boy. Nothing could induce him to leave. When the company was ready to start Songoro insisted upon going along with them. But he was in no condition to start. The march was to be a long one, through strange paths full of hostile tribes. Songoro's feet were sore and he was not strong enough to carry a load. Yet they couldn't afford to take any one who could not bear his share of the burden. It was unsafe to leave him behind and his home was three hundred miles away. In spite of all the objections Songoro pleaded to go, he would not be left behind. His feet, he said, would get well and he would be able to carry his share of the load. But go he must and go he would, for at the end of the trail was a school, and there he would stay and learn the Book. So Songoro went the fifteen hundred miles and was left at a school at Quiongua in Angola.

Thousands of just such brave and persevering boys and girls have passed through the various mission schools where habits of order and cleanliness, self-respect and consideration for others have been taught side by side with regular lessons in reading and writing. When these boys go back to their homes they in turn teach their own people the things of school that they themselves have learned.

In this way do these little black children, sometimes not more than twelve or even ten years of age, become true missionaries to their own people.

In the next number you shall hear about the Pygmies, and how some little black schoolboys, as true missionaries, went to the Pygmies' camp to tell them of the "things of God."

Española

By THE REV. ARTHUR R. GRAY, D.D.

AS I look at the map of the Caribbean, which hangs on the wall above my desk, and see how few are the points at which the Church has garrisons, it gives me quite a thrill to think that at last we are sending a man to one of the most important of the countries which border that sea—the Dominican Republic. And as I ruminate upon the story of the days gone by it seems a coincidence worth noting that this, the oldest country in the New World, is to be the seat of the youngest of the Church's missions.

I say the Dominican Republic is the oldest country in the New World; I might equally have said historically the most beguiling. For, in days of old when dons were bold the harbors of Española were the busiest and its towns the bustlingest in all lands of the Conquistadors. Moreover, the island has fascinating associations with the heroes themselves. Don Christopher himself gave it its name which, being translated, means Spainlet, and there is preserved to us a picture, said to have been drawn by the great helmsman's hand, depicting his ship's arrival at the island of dreams, this island which in his characteristic way he believed to be identical with Ophir of biblical remembrance.

Moreover, as if to rivet forever connection between the Navigator and the island it was there in its capital city that he was buried, and it is there to this very day, in the oldest cathedral in the New World, that one can see the tomb (certainly three hundred years old) whereon are inscribed the words, Cristobal Colon, descubridor de America.

Not only with Columbus but even more with his brother Diego is the island associated, for it was he who established its capital and named it, being translated, Holy Sunday City, figuring thereby I suppose a place of rest, just as certain red men called the region where they pitched their tents Alabama. Visitors to the island find in the remains of Diego's house and in the old cathedral what are perhaps the most fascinating antiquities this side of the water.

In truth, the whole island teems with historic memories. There Las Casas turned from opulent godlessness and embarked upon a career of prodigious service; Las Casas the protagonist of human freedom—what a privilege to take up work where he began. Nor was the Bishop of Chiapa the only celebrity who toiled there, for among the gray-robed Franciscans and black-robed Dominicans were many who did large things as, for example, Father Montesino, who on Advent Sunday, 1510, preached what I reckon was the first anti-slavery sermon that ever was heard.

From Española as a base of supplies went out expeditions to all parts of the Caribbean. Of these perhaps the most interesting was the one in which that shrewd politician Cortez took part under the leadership of Velasquez, which resulted in opening Cuba to the warriors of Spain. That once bustling but now sleepy city was in fact the New York of the Sixteenth Century, and as such was the zenith of many a buccaneer's ambition. The adventurous Drake was one of the few, however, who braved its machicolated battlements. Sir Frederick Treves tells the story deligthfully; just here I can say but a word or two. On the last day of 1585 he anchored over against "the famous and goodly builded city". That night by a cunning ruse he caused the city's defenders to expect an attack from the sea and sent one thousand lads of Devon down the coast, to the westward, from where they flanked the town and took it by storm. For four weeks that prince of pirates held the town; looting it with a thoroughness to which the world had become unfamiliar till the Teutons revived the art. At last, when he had had enough he demanded a ransom and, being refused, gave the order to destroy the city little by little till the money was disgorged. His crew went about this task in a systematic way. "We spent the early morning", wrote Thomas Cates, "in firing the outmost houses, but they being built very magnificent of stone with high lofts gave us no small travail to ruin them". The proceeding went forward each day with ghastly regularity till at length the hidalgos weakened and gave Drake the twenty-five thousand ducats he had demanded, which sum he received with much grumbling over their stinginess, and sailed away with all the cannon the town possessed on board his boats. Please God the Wyllies may succeed in benevolence as thoroughly as did Drake in malevolence.

Perhaps for us the most important historical fact about Española is that it was there that Negro slavery began, so far as our hemisphere was concerned. It came about in this way. The Arawak Indians, the aborigines, being driven by the newcomers like beasts of burden, speedily succumbed. They died in fact at such an amazing rate that the Spaniards had to replace them somehow or work themselves! It chanced in this emergency that Las Casas had a lamentable inspiration. Why not, he suggested, import Negroes from Africa? Thus the Indians could be relieved of slavery and saved. There is abundant reason to know that the Protector of the Indians soon bewailed this blunder and wished he had been a little more slow to speak. But much as he regretted it, the deed was done, and the greedy gold seekers began that traffic which soon was to make the white man's record blacker than the Negroes' skin. Nor must it be imagined that the Spaniards were the only slave-traders, for, as anyone who has read Hackluyt knows, English traders, like Hawkins, were the equal of any when it came to marketing black men. And so our race problem was initiated in the land where we are now sending a missionary—and, what is specially appropriate, he is going to work primarily among the blacks.

Skipping from the days of the Conquistadors to modern times, the Dominican Republic has another and marked interest for us in that it was there that the first move was made towards uniting the interests of the Caribbean countries with the Colossus of the North—as they delight oratorically and suspiciously to call us. In the year 1869 the Dominican people voted to apply for annexation to the United States. To be sure, many of the islanders claimed the vote was not representative of the true state of the public mind, but that is neither here nor there. Suffice it to say that the movement was set on foot, and that President Grant, being as willing as Dickens' driver himself, and being more farsighted than most of his contemporaries, sent in 1871 a committee on the man-of-war "Tennessee" to investigate the situation and report. Nothing ever came of this, except a pack of bother to Grant, chiefly owing to Charles Sumner's activities; Sumner, whose deeds were characterized by a Dominican writer of 1871 as follows:

"Mr. Sumner, the orator of the Senate at Washington, whose lips should never be opened except to utter political or social oracles in accord with his great reputation . . . . wounded in his self-respect, etc., runs as the wounded stag, and in his flight fastens deeper and deeper the dart that wounds him. The Committee will see that the lamentations of Mr. Sumner (against annexation) are nothing but the ignorance of our history". . . .

To overcome Sumner's opposition Grant sent in an oracular message to Congress in 1871—though in vain.

"During the last session of Congress", he wrote, "a treaty for annexation of the republic of St. Domingo to the United States failed to receive the requisite two-thirds vote of the Senate. I was thoroughly convinced then that the best interests of this country, commercially and materially, demanded its ratification. . . .

"Time has only confirmed me in this view. I now firmly believe that the moment it is known that the United States have entirely abandoned the project of accepting as a part of its territory the Island of St. Domingo, a free port will be negotiated for by European nations.

The Holy Communion

By THE REV. CHARLES LEWIS SLATTERY, D.D.

THERE are today various explanations of the Holy Communion. The explanations have arisen in the course of Church history as different elements of human feeling and thinking have entered the Church. Some of the most acrimonious discussions of which we have knowledge concern this supreme feast of love. We think of the nominalists and the realists in the Middle Ages; we think of Wyclif and the advocates of Transubstantiation at the dawn of the Reformation; we think of Luther and Zwingli at their conference at Marburg, when the vigorous Luther glared at his fellow reformer, pounded the table that stood between them, and shouted, "Hoc est corpus meum". In our own branch of the Church we are taught that "the Body of Christ is given, taken, and eaten, in the Supper, only after an heavenly and spiritual manner. And the mean whereby the Body of Christ is received and eaten in the Supper is Faith".[1] That is, the emphasis is placed upon the spiritual, and the various theories of the past are taken up into a higher unity where we seek a practical benefit.

It is the genius of our Communion that it discriminates between essentials and legitimate difference of opinions. We all believe it to be an obligation to obey the Saviour when he said, "This do in remembrance of me";[2] but we do not insist that if a man strive to win an explanation of just what he does when he receives the broken bread and the outpoured wine, he shall arrive at the exact thought which his brother has attained. He may do one of two things when he recognizes his freedom: either he may say that the Sacrament is so great a mystery that he will attempt no analysis; or he may say that he will study to find some interpretation which helps him more intimately to enter into the joy and inspiration of the Saviour's loving institution. Both these ways are good; one, with becoming modesty, admits the mystery which lies within all highest expressions of life (especially where man touches the divine); the other, relying on God's patience with all our feeble efforts to understand Him, is encouraged to discover one of those "broken lights", which when blended give humanity a somewhat larger vision of the truth.

In this paper sympathy shall be accorded to the latter adventure. I shall frankly speak of an explanation which helps me, not daring to think it complete, not wishing it to displace in any reader's mind the concept which is already there. It may perhaps help to clarify the idea which has helped the reader most; or, better still, it may give him courage to reflect anew upon this mystery of a Master's love and to find in his own way a solution which sends him more obediently to the Holy Communion, there to find a deeper power for his daily life.

I

First of all, it is wise to ascertain if more recent thought has any news to give us of the relation of the spiritual to the physical. It is increasingly clear that men are less and less inclined to draw a sharp line between the spiritual and the physical. Matter is constantly being revealed as a profound mystery. Atoms are no longer thought of as the smallest indivisible particles. Now we hear news of electrons, which are to the atom (as someone has said) as a pinhead to the dome of St. Paul's. The electron seems to be only a flash of electricity; it seems to be immaterial; yet out of its multiplied elusive, invisible force comes the reality of what we call matter. There is something here which at least suggests the spiritual. Just as we are saying that it is vicious to distinguish between the religious and the secular, because all is religious, so we may come to say that it is vicious to distinguish between the physical and the spiritual, because all is spiritual. The obvious danger is that, in the leveling process, all seem secular, materialistic: the divine possibility is that the hills and the valleys, the angels and the stones, all shall reflect to us the light from God. In any case at the center of the physical, as of the spiritual, is the infinitesimal quivering action, not dead but living, the centre and ground of being.

With this suggestion in mind, think of our Saviour's words when He broke the bread, "Take, eat: this is my body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me".[3] Is it not possible that He was directing the attention of His disciples, not so much to the bread, as to the breaking of the bread? And, through this, was He not directing ultimate attention, not so much to His body as to the breaking of His body, the giving of His whole life in the sacrifice of the cross? In other words, at the centre of our Lord's institution we find not the static atom, but the vibrating electron: it is action, life.

We catch confirmation of this explanation in the story which the disciples who had sat down with the Saviour at Emmaus gave to their friends: He was known of them, they said, "in the breaking of the bread".[4] It was His action which revealed His identity.

If this is a correct explanation we should imagine our Lord to say: "Behold, I break this bread, and give it to you that on its breaking you may live. This act is my body, my character, my soul. Take this breathing act into your lives. Feed upon it. Be my act through history. Receiving the breaking of my body, do you be broken with me for the love and salvation of men." One hesitates always to paraphrase any words of Christ, but only so can we make clear at times the full meaning that to us is enshrined in the brief record which has survived.

II

There are several questions which one may rightly ask. Of these the first is, In what way is Christ present in the Holy Communion?

In general we may answer that He is present as at the Last Supper and as at the supper at Emmaus: that is He is at the head of the Feast. We may rightly say that as "the brightness of God's glory and the express image of his person",[5] He is everywhere and always present but there is a difference when a presence is recognized. For instance, when the disciples walked with Christ to Emmaus, their hearts burned within them because of the words the Stranger said, but when in the breaking of bread the Stranger revealed His identity, an altogether new fire of joy swept their hearts.[6] He had been present before; He was now present with the fulness of their recognition.

Nor is this all. It is quite clear that at Emmaus there came a moment when Christ willed to be vividly present to His disciples through their recognition. Their recognition was not by chance. We perceive a faint suggestion of this increase of presence in the mutual understanding which comes to two friends in a sacredly intimate moment. A man who has seemed hard in his righteousness breaks down and weeps in the face of some grief, and the companion is suddenly aware of the unsuspected tenderness and love of the man. The hitherto hiding soul deliberately allows its full self to be seen. The recognition is made possible by a double process. Both friends share in it.

So, to the devout worshiper in the Holy Communion the ministrant fades: all that is visible melts into the invisible glory. It is Christ who is again breaking the bread and pouring out the wine, and through these sacramental elements is bestowing upon His last disciples the same inner essence of His life and character which He gave to His first disciples in the Jerusalem upper room. He is giving the quality of Himself which we may call the will to be broken, to be poured out, that God's utter love may be known in the lives of men, and through hem to others. It is not outward form, it is not dramatic ction, it is not parable: it is contact, presence, the per- onal communication of divine life to human life. Old vords come back to us: "He saved others; himself he annot save"[7] . . . "For their sakes I sanctify my- elf."[8] . . . "Whosoever shall lose his life . . . hall save it."[9] . . . "Greater love hath no man than his, that a man lay down his life for his friends."[10] It is God's way of acting in His universe, coming down into nan's bewilderment: it is failing in order to succeed; dying in order to live; being conquered in order to win he invincible victory.

It is then of first importance to appreciate who it is hat presides at the Feast. It is the Word of God, God nade flesh, the Son of God, God perfectly revealed in uman terms, God Himself. It is He who now, as once at the beginning, takes up bread, and breaking it says, 'This is my body". The Incarnation does not stop with he individual, Jesus of Nazareth. He, the centre of the revelation, is claiming all the world as the expression of His Father. It is always, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world".[11]

There is here no chance for a stupid pantheism. The loving heart, the creative mind, is not lost in His beloved creation; but it is there, inspiring and sustaining it. The picture can be filled with the artist so that the expert can tell whether a certain picture without a name was painted by a certain man; for him, to look upon the pic- ture is to look, as it were, into the face of the painter. The book can be so filled with the author that the intelli- gent critic can fix at once the authorship of an anony- mous volume; he sees the author. In a more thorough sense God may be found in His world, because not only is the fashioning of it His, but the material itself. If we may not call it His body, we may at least call it the garment which He casts about Himself. "Thou art clothed", sang the psalmist to the Lord, "with honor and majesty. Thou coverest thyself with light as with a garment".[12] It does not seem strange that the Soul of the world should take bread and break it, saying, "This is my body"; or, pouring out wine, should say, "This is my blood". It is the beginning of a divine lesson, whereby we may touch the garment, the blood, the body of the Lord every moment of our lives wherever we may be. Therefore we cry,

"Be known to us in breaking bread,
But do not then depart;
Saviour, abide with us, and spread
Thy table in our heart."[13]

And there is more to say. The disciples going to Emmaus had the preparation of their walk with the Master, and all the companionship in Judea and Galilee in the months before. For us, too, there must be prepara- tion for seeing Christ in His Sacrament. One must begin to know Him before the breaking and the outpouring of outward pledges can reveal His presence as He stands over the divine giving of His brokenness and His out- pouredness. I once knew a great preacher. He has been vanished these twenty years and more. But when I now read one of his printed sermons I can hear his rushing voice, I can see his kindling eye. The page seems filled with the man's presence. But I could not have that sensation had I not known him—had I not indeed heard his voice and beheld his flashing countenance.

There is, morever, an intensity of nearness to Christ which may so come to one in the Holy Communion that one may feel the presence of Christ in the whole world which by Him the Father made, the divine book wherein, by those once awake, His voice, His glance may be always recognized. If once, in a real and mystical sense, we know the presence of the Incarnate, we find Him in the flower, the sunset, the mountain, the kiss of the little child, the death of the soldier; for all proclaim to him who listens, "Let my life be broken, poured out, lost, for man's sake, for Christ's sake". There is found to be the golden thread of complete love, manifesting itself in a sacrifice which can come only from the heart of God, which ties all nature, all life, together in the reality of God's essential character.

Heresy comes from being satisfied with an incomplete truth. As we dare not limit the presence of the divine, so we dare not limit the sacramental presence. The Saviour's life is a constant rebuke to those who would build booths on mountains of transfiguration to confine His glory.[14] When people praised His mother, He ex- tended her privilege to all who "hear the word of God and keep it";[15] we may believe that He was thus de- scribing the chief characteristic of the person who was closest to Him in love and knowledge. Again, though we know the features of Demosthenes and Caesar, both of whom lived before Jesus of Nazareth, we know noth- ing of the Saviour's face. This is not accidental. Glimpses of His face we catch, now and again, as we see the illumined countenances of men, women, and children, who in self-forgetfulness are doing His will. We cannot, further, identify the exact places where Christ was born, or died, or rose again. Only one or two spots in His whole earthly career can be fixed with any assurance. This too is no accident. It is surely part of His purpose that men should not limit sacred places to a few narrow walls in Palestine. By His Incarnation the whole world has been touched with His glory. These spots which knew His footprints are sacred. But through them, and in them, every earnest household is as the home of Lazarus, open to receive the Master as its welcome guest; every illness, every temptation, every joy, is reason for expecting another Capernaum, another Gethsemane, another Olivet. Through the broken bread and the poured out wine Christ gives His broken body, His poured out blood. And doing so He begins a process by which those who are His may and do receive Him in every detail of the humble and ordinary day. He is known of them in breaking bread, but does not then depart. He is theirs in all places for ever.

III

A practical question which must often be asked is, How can we know that we have worthily and indeed received the body and blood of Christ in the Holy Com- munion? This question, if rightly answered, will reveal still further the nature of the Sacrament.

A good many people would perhaps be satisfied if after the Holy Communion they felt the sense of peace, of harmony, of joy, which the lifting of the heart to the Highest would naturally inspire. One comes away from converse with a noble friend with the glow of exultation; one dwells for hours and days upon the splendor of his various qualities expressed in that conversation. How much more must one be triumphant in the contemplation of the supreme communion of spirit with Spirit. But such a result may be self-complacent, narrowly loving only its own, pleased to have a companionship which is exclu- sive.

Others, by a deeper experience, will have come to the Lord's Supper, in the marriage-garment of penitence." They will have examined themselves, will have discovered their inadequate strength, and will have asked of the Lord the assurance of His forgiveness. To come away from the Feast convinced that the Lord has turned and looked upon them, as once He turned and looked upon Peter,[17] to be convinced that He still trusts them, still believes in them, still hopes for their victory—is a bless- ing which goes far beyond any pleasant assurance of peace and contentment. They have received a gift, the gift of the Master's own presence, and in the strength of that presence they will go many days, craving and living the best life God will show them how to live.

Others will climb higher still. They will remember that the Church is called the body of Christ;[18] and through the Holy Communion they will enter a new experience of brotherhood. They will count that reception of the Sacrament most sacred, not when they have been with one or two congenial souls, but when they have knelt with all sorts and conditions of men, and have felt the glow of a relationship which includes all humanity, because for all humanity Christ broke His body, that He might be found in His new body, the Church. One who has really and worthily received the body of Christ will go from the service to find Christ smiling upon him, encouraging him, rebuking him, in the faces of his fellow-worshipers; for they all—joined together with the innumerable company of His brethren past, present, and to come—make up Christ's Presence for all the world to see and to be comforted in. An essential, in approaching the Feast, is "to be in charity with all men";[19] a sign, in coming away, that we have indeed been fed, is to have that charity illumined with its interior meaning—to know that in loving men we are loving Christ Himself.[20]

But even this, high as it is, is not the full proof that "the Body and Blood of Christ . . . are spiritually taken and received by the faithful in the Lord's Supper".[21] Our Lord said, "By their fruits ye shall know them".[22] It is by "fruits" that we know who have verily and indeed received the body and blood of Christ. We pray to be "made one body with Him, that He may dwell in us, and we in Him".[23] The end of the Holy Communion is that we may be so filled with Christ that we shall go out into the world to be Christ among men. It is nothing less than that. We would feed on His very soul till His Spirit becomes fused with our spirit; we would think His thoughts after Him; we would walk in His steps and do His deeds. The overwhelming emotion may seize us; the clear light for a new start may shine upon our road; we may recognize a radiant fellowship thronging the way; but there is more: we have in us a new life, a new character, with which to go forward. We are filled with Christ.

And how shall we know this? Only when we perceive that it is our character to break our bodies and to pour out our blood, with a perfect self-forgetfulness, for the people and for the causes which we conceive to be dear to Christ.[24] When Hannington was dying, having given all for the Africans, who misunderstood him, he reached out for a blade of grass and for a little muddy water, saying, "This is my body, ... This is my blood", and fed, indeed, we must believe, upon Christ. Thereupon he died for those for whom Christ had died once for all. In him the love of Christ gave itself afresh. I asked a man who risked his life day after day upon the battlefields of France if he had fear as death surrounded him on all sides. "No", he answered; "I was so possessed by the greatness of the cause that I almost longed to give my life to prove how much the cause was worth: I wanted to make the sacrifice". It is told of another that when he was stricken down by a double wound, and was left dying, his comrades, rushing by, heard him singing a marching song, for their encouragement and his own joy. As he sang he gave his life to God. Do we not catch in such instances an echo of the comment, "For the joy that was set before Him, He endured the cross"?[25] Someway the body and blood of Christ are in such men. They are in Him, and He is in them. There is no dogged necessity driving them on: the divine character expressed in the broken bread and the poured out wine possesses them altogether. They stand at the centre of the universe with God, and see life whole; and being lost, they are found eternally.

We are likely more and more to think of God as Action, Will, Character. It is a return from excellent philosophy and theology, which defined God in terms of substance, to the foundation which we find in the New Testament, where God is defined as Love.[26] There we see Him in Christ manifesting a Character which willed love and did countless deeds of love. People did not understand then; they are only slowly and dimly understanding even yet. The divine Lord is not resting, demanding that He be served;[27] He Himself is ever serving, kneeling down to wash the disciples' feet.[28] His character is brokenness of body for love's sake, the pouring out of blood, also for the sake of love.

The joy of the world will come when all men discover that the only happy way to live is to have God's character, through Christ, fused with theirs, so that, feeding upon Him, they will never cease to be united with Him in a service where every man gives himself unselfishly for others till all the world is the Body of Christ, and the Kingdom of Heaven is fulfilled.

A Beloved Archdeacon

By THE REV. ARTHUR JAMES GAMMACK

ON Saturday, January 5, the Venerable Charles J. Sniffen, archdeacon and general missionary of the diocese of Western Massachusetts, died suddenly in the rectory of his friend, the Rev. J. B. Whiteman, in Greenfield, whither he had gone to assist at a funeral.

The news of this event, which quickly circulated brought sadness to many hearts and homes in the diocese, and beyond it. It was realized that a great soul, a strong and remarkable personality, a devoted and effective missionary, a pure-hearted man, a faithful and trusted priest, a beloved friend had gone from our midst. On hearing the sad news Bishop Johnson started immediately from St. Louis and faced storm and inevitable delays to be present at the funeral, and, when his coming was remarked as a tribute to the Archdeacon, he replied, "He was the best friend I ever had".

The majority of the clergy of the diocese came to the funeral; they were there to pay their tribute of respect and affection to one who was their personal friend. Laymen, too, came from long distances. Both Bishop Johnson and Bishop Acheson attended the last services in Stratford. In South Lee, where he lived, and in Stockbridge where he was well known, and where, in St. Paul's church, the funeral service was held, his death was regarded as a community loss and unconcealed emotion showed that people, irrespective of class and religious connection, grieved as over a personal loss. Only a few days ago there came to the house of the writer a letter from a woman in a remote and desolate part of this state which said: "We have had a lot of sickness, so we did not feel we could make Christmas these past two years; but through Mr. Sniffen the little children's hearts have been gladdened. Mr. Sniffen is certainly a very dear friend to us. We feel as though he had been a great deal to us." In an incredible number of homes similar feelings were entertained towards him and the grief over his removal is widespread and deep.

The force of character of Archdeacon Sniffen may be appreciated from the fact that, though his education was delayed for years by the death of his father and the necessity of helping towards the family support, he returned to the high school at the age of twenty-four and, by hard study, prepared himself for college. He passed through Yale and the Berkeley Divinity School and became assistant in Middletown under Bishop Acheson, then rector of Holy Trinity. He later accepted work in Carthage, Missouri, and although he did there a remarkable and lasting work, his heart yearned for New England. At the local railway station he would put his foot on the rail and take comfort in the thought that it led directly to Stratford where he was born and brought up. Only stern duty prevented his taking the next train for New England, for his "heart was right there". In the course of time he returned to the East and became assistant to the Rev. Arthur Lawrence, D.D., in Stockbridge. Bishop F. F. Johnson was then general missionary of the newly created diocese of Western Massachusetts, and, when he was elected bishop of South Dakota, his place was taken by Mr. Sniffen. NEWS OF THE CHURCH

DEACONESS KNAPP HAS JAPANESE PUPILS IN TOKYO

Oratory of St. Saviour Dedicated in Her Tsukiji House

Deaconess Knapp is now settled in one wing of an old house at 1 Tsukiji, Tokyo, a few doors from St. Luke's Hospital, St. Margaret's school and the Cathedral. On December 15 she wrote as follows to THE CHURCHMAN:

"To write up my work would be almost impossible at this stage. It is merely living in Tokyo, as a private resident unconnected with any missionary society and undertaking bits of work here and there as the opportunities commend themselves. Contact with the work of the American Relief Committee (the work-rooms of the Committee are in a wing of this large old mansion) has given me at once a large and interesting acquaintance among the English and American residents. And, better still, the influence of the bishop, Dr. Teusler, and Miss Tsuda has given me many friends among the young Japanese gentle folk of education, who speak more or less English. I have a list of over fifty pupils to whom I am teaching the Gospel in English.

"It is too soon for me to record impressions, having been in residence only three months, but I may say that I am continually being made happy by the high standards expressed by my pupils and with their grasp of the spiritual claims of Christianity. There is no compromise here. A Japanese priest said to me the other day: 'Always remember, Deaconess, that they want the real thing'.

"The house in which we live is not the simple little house I am hoping to find, but a fine large Japanese residence built on the site of the former American Embassy. It is well fitted for my work, better than a small house would be, and its size has enabled me to use the generous gift of the Alumnæ of the School for Deaconesses for the furnishings of a beautiful oratory dedicated a few days ago by the bishop as the 'Oratory of St. Saviour'. The altar is Japanese in design and we have Japanese zarbitan, or kneeling cushions, as well as kneeling desks, six of each. Every Wednesday morning we have an early Eucharist, which is attended by an interesting and representative group of Japanese, English and American worshipers.

"I will send you a photograph of this influential little spot by the next mail."

SECOND PROVINCE TO HAVE A STUDENT SECRETARY

NEW YORK CITY.—At the synod of the Second Province held here recently the most important of the claims presented at the session on religious education was that of the committee on colleges and universities. The following recommendations were offered: That the committee recommends to the synod an organization for Church work among the colleges of the province along the following four lines: 1. To hold in line students who are already Churchmen. 2. To stimulate the religious life of the college. 3. To lead the students to active work in parish life. 4. To get the best men into the Church's ministry.

The committee further recommended the appointment of a "provincial organizing secretary", whose salary should be guaranteed for five years, and whose duties would be to visit the colleges and universities of the province to promote these four lines of activities suggested.

These recommendations were unanimously carried. The importance of this action can hardly be estimated at present, but there are many religious educators who are sanguine enough to believe that this action will be revolutionary in the religious life of the students, both men and women of our colleges and universities.

Soldiers' Club Opens at Dix

CAMP DIX, WRIGHTSTOWN, NEW JERSEY.—It was a great occasion, the formal opening of St. George's Club House for All Soldiers held here last week. The fun began in the afternoon when, from 4 to 6, there was open house for inspection and good fellowship. From 7 to 9 there was great festivity, and some remarkable speeches by five speakers. These were: Major General Hugh Scott, Bishop Matthews, Dr. John F. Carson of the Presbyterian War Commission, Mr. Edward Cattell, city statistician, Philadelphia, and Mr. Herbert Lansdale.

Help Equip Our Men!

Chaplains Need Fords

THE War Commission is in receipt of letters and telegrams from Bishop McCormick calling for different items of equipment. The great difficulty is in the matter of transportation. Shipping space is so cramped that it is very difficult to get permission to send anything of bulk across. For instance: A given regiment in France is billeted in several villages along ten to fifteen miles. A chaplain must keep in touch with them all. A Ford car or a motor cycle is indispensable. A second-hand Ford in France is $1,500, a motor cycle $600. Yet it is extremely difficult to get a Ford shipped, hence the chaplain must walk, which means that he is greatly hampered in his work. One Massachusetts chaplain, who was equipped by his diocese when the war broke out, writes that his car is the only vehicle for errands and passenger traffic in the regiment; and as he writes, when the Colonel asks the chaplain for a ride it puts the chaplain to the front. This chaplain has no need to be put to the front in such a way, for he is known and respected by the whole regiment.

BISHOP LAWRENCE URGES CHURCHES TO SAVE COAL

Three Neighboring Congregations to Share One Church Building

Bishop Lawrence has sent the following letter to the clergy of the diocese of Massachusetts:

"My Dear Brethren: Our churches should be quick to respond to help in the coal shortage. My suggestion to you, subject to local conditions, are these: Let, say, three neighboring congregations select the church best adapted for use, and, of course, the hospitality of the Episcopal church would be offered. We would be most happy if Roman Catholics, Greeks or Protestant churches should accept this hospitality. Let the congregations have three services of fifty minutes each between 9.30 and 1 o'clock on Sundays, with their own minister and choir. If there is no Sunday school possible, let children and parents come together to the service. It would be a welcome custom.

"In the evening let ministers, choir and people of the three congregations (so far as they care to take part) join together in an informal service of praise and prayer until 9.30 p. m., and during the afternoon the Church would be at the service of any of the congregations needing it. With this unity of spirit and difference of administration each congregation will have its customary service and parish loyalty will be sustained. Yours faithfully,

"WILLIAM LAWRENCE."

A month ago Dean Robbins, in a sermon at the morning service at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York City, spoke of a plan for co-operation similar to this, but as yet nothing definite has been done.

AN IMPRESSIVE SERVICE FOR A BASE HOSPITAL

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—Marked by a solemnity that brought to the verge of tears many men in uniform as well as their friends and relatives, special services were held January 13 for the nurses, doctors and aides of University Base Hospital Unit No. 20, in the Church at St. Luke and the Epiphany.

The services were fraught with more than the usual significance, because the hospital corps is mobilized at the First Pennsylvania Cavalry Armory, prepared to leave on its mercy mission to France at any moment.

In a message full of hope and trust in the future the Rev. Dr. David M. Steele, the rector, wished the unit Godspeed in its trip across the ocean. Special prayers were said for absent friends, for the nations at war and for eventual peace.

Nearly 1800 persons were in the church, including virtually the entire medical and surgical staff of the University Hospital, together with many members of the faculty of the University of Pennsylvania. The khaki-clad hospital aides were grouped in pews reserved for them directly in front of the chancel. Previous to the exercises they marched to the church from the armory.

G. B. R. E. TO HOLD FIFTH ANNIVERSARY MEETING

Members From East and West to Discuss Vital Problems

NEW YORK CITY.—Education as a war measure is perhaps the most important topic to be discussed at the annual meeting of the General Board of Religious Education to be held here on January 30. The times demand from the Board something more than the preparation of literature and the discovery and equipment of leaders; people are asking questions about religion and the war, and the Church by a large movement should organize her teaching forces so as to produce a Christian conviction hitherto unparalleled.

In order that the Board may learn of conditions in religious education on "the other side", the Rev. Hugh L. Birckhead of Baltimore has been asked to address the Board on observations made by him during his recent trip to England and France.

Dr. Birckhead was requested by Ambassador Page to make addresses in some of the Cathedrals and churches of England, and in that work had an unusual opportunity for studying the conditions in the Church brought about by the war. This experience he will place at the disposal of the Board.

The topic second in importance will be "Five Years of the General Board". The meeting will celebrate the fifth anniversary of the active work of the Board. Bishop Lines said the other day: "It is difficult to realize the great position which the General Board, beginning with a modest purpose, has taken." We hear such remarks again and again.

When the Board proclaimed the ideal of uniting all the educational work of the Church under one Board, it was a pioneer. The Presbyterians and all communions promoted educational work by many boards—one for Sunday schools, another for colleges and still another for theological seminaries and candidates for the ministry. Today, the Presbyterians are completing the reorganization of their educational work under a General Board chartered by the State.

Bishop Burleson, who succeeds to the many educational institutions organized by Bishop Hare, will address the Board on the importance of maintaining the Church Preparatory School. He will bring the opinion of some of the Western bishops and [illegible] that the Church should revive in[illegible]rch Preparatory School.

[illegible] OF BIBLE LANDS G[illegible] $3,000 AT CHRISTMAS

Sunday School Children Give Up Christmas Treat Money to Fund

NEW YORK CITY.—Over $3,000 has been received at the offices of the General Board of Religious Education for the children of Bible lands as the response from the children of the Episcopal church to the Christmas appeal of the Armenian and Syrian Relief Committee. Altogether 229 church schools wrote for the literature prepared by the Board for the campaign, and 344 church schools sent in offerings. The second, third and eighth provinces lead in the number of schools contributing. Of course, money is still coming in to Dr. Bradner's office. Some has been received by THE CHURCHMAN for this special campaign and reported to Dr. Bradner.

Many schools co-operated with the city plans for this fund, not only in New York State, but also in the West. The missionary districts took a great interest, especially Eastern Oklahoma and Utah. In Eastern Oklahoma Bishop Thurston arranged for all the schools to take an offering on December 23. Orders in bulk were received from Utah, so that all the schools had the literature of the campaign.

"I have three Sunday schools of mountain children to whom we give candy and oranges at Christmas," wrote the Rev. Josiah R. Ellis of Lynnwood parish, Yancey, Virginia. "This is the only thing we give them. They all decided unanimously to give the money thus spent to the Armenians." The schools are St. Stephen's, Good Shepherd and Grace Memorial of the West Blue Ridge Mountain Mission.

This story might be repeated of many church schools, rich and poor, city and country, West and East.

ARCHBISHOP OF YORK WILL SPEAK AT THE CATHEDRAL

Will Arrive for First Address on March 3

NEW YORK CITY.—It is expected that the Most Rev. Cosmo Gordon Lang, Archbishop of York, will arrive in time to speak in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on March 3.

The present Archbishop of York is the eighty-ninth to hold this position in the Church of England. In the House of Lords, in precedence, he is outranked only by the King, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Lord High Chancellor.

The present Archbishop of York is considered one of the ablest speakers in the House of Lords. He is the son of a Presbyterian clergyman, his father having been moderator of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland. He was formerly Bishop of Spetney, and Preacher at St. Paul's Cathedral in London. He became Archbishop of York in 1908.

While in this country the Archbishop will visit Boston, Cleveland, Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Baltimore and Washington, where he will preach on Easter Sunday. The present plan is that the Archbishop will speak at the noon-day services at Trinity church in New York during all the week of his arrival.

Suffering in Mexico

NEW YORK CITY.—An interesting letter has just been received from Bishop Aves, telling of his return journey from Texas to Guadalajara, visiting on the way the remnants of several English-speaking congregations. At Tampico, an inmportant oil city, there are still 2,000 Americans and English who ask for a clergyman and regular services. The sufferings of the Mexicans are terrible. The failure of the corn crop leaves them without their staff of life; they cannot even get the cotton sacking in which imported goods are packed, to make clothes of, and all prices are prohibitive. The Bishop writes that there is no hope for relief except "that the charity of the people of the United States, heavily taxed as it is, reach its full hand of saving help to these famishing neighbors".

BISHOP LLOYD'S ARRIVAL IN LIBERIA CABLED

Mission to Liberia Land in Africa on January 15

NEW YORK CITY.—A cable message reached the Church Missions House on January 15 telling of the safe arrival of Bishop Lloyd and Archdeacon Schofield, an announcement which gives joy to many loyal church people who have followed the travelers to Liberia with their prayers.

Since Bishop Lloyd sailed many church folk have been studying their atlases and gazetteers, and feel better acquainted with Liberia than ever before. Some may have read the book on the little republic, Liberia by Francis Starr, professor in the University of Chicago; some have sent to the library at the Church Missions House and borrowed from its shelves one of the quaint old volumes, History of the African Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church by Mrs. E. F. Hening (1849), or Day Dawn in Africa, by Mrs. Anna M. Scott (1858); others have looked through files of missionary reports and THE SPIRIT OF MISSIONS, and all with the same intent, that when Bishop Lloyd comes home with his story they shall be the better able to appreciate what he will have to tell.

The latest review of the field appeared in an article by Miss M. S. Ridgely of Cape Mount, which was printed, in two sections in THE SPIRIT OF MISSIONS for July, 1911 p.p. 501-503, and October, p.p. 716-717, and which sketched the mission from her twelve years' acquaintance.

Before Bishop Lloyd sailed another woman conversant with the West Coast was consulted, and Miss Woodruff's calm matter of fact statements were reassuring to friends to whom the words "West Coast" represent certain illness and much risk. This woman who has ten times crossed the Atlantic and spent five terms in Liberia should know something of what she speaks. "Africa is not at all terrible as Africa," was Miss Woodruff's verdict. "Under present conditions Bishop Lloyd may not be able to do all he would like and could do at other times, but there is no reason why he should not be comfortable." "Every one does not have the fever; after five years Miss Cooper has just had her first at all serious attack." "People imagine a great deal." "Provide for both warm and cold weather." "Be careful and use common sense."

A warm welcome, kind care, friendly suggestions for health and comfort, all that might be expected; but rides by canoe, or cart or hammock must be depended on for the interior, the uncertain, infrequent steamer for the coast, unless—and the chance seems most uncertain—the mission launch, "John Payne," were not out of commission.

The Churches Thank You!

NEW YORK CITY.—A new kind of church advertising is indulged in by the Fifth Avenue Bus in the New York papers, as follows:

"From the Church of the Ascension in the South to the Cathedral of Saint John the Divine on the north you will find famous New York churches of every denomination conveniently and comfortably reached by the Fifth Avenue Bus."

Y. W. C. A. OPENS HOTEL FOR WAR WORKERS IN PARIS

Four Million Dollar Budget Increased to Five Millions

New York City.—On December 23, when Dr. Richard Cabot brought some of his refugee workers to the Hotel Petrograd in Paris, that hotel opened its doors for the first time as the Y. W. C. A. Hotel for American Women. It is very difficult to secure lodging of any kind in Paris, and for this reason the association has found it advisable to establish this Paris hotel for all American women engaged in war work at the French capital. A picturesque scene it is, with every woman in uniform, ambulance drivers and nurses, canteen workers of the Y. M. C. A. and secretaries of the Y. W. It is probable that the Red Cross will open a hotel for nurses. But the Petrograd will be the official headquarters for all other American women workers. Special provision is being made for the social side of the guest's life while in Paris. Men are welcome in the big social rooms, and entertainments and good times relieve the strain of the anxious work on the front.

The four million fund of the Y. W. C. A. has been increased to five million. When the War Council met in December, the four million goal was already crossed and not all returns in. Encouraged by this, and stimulated by the fact that requests for aid are pouring in from camps and cantonments in this country and from overseas, the War Council has again decided to enlarge its activities. The campaign in New York has been successful and several notable meetings have been held in connection with it. Especially interesting was the lecture on conditions in France by women just returned from the Western front, who described the work already undertaken in nine of the eleven base hospitals. The "huts" are any room available, in one place the parlor of a hotel.

Every day stories pour into Y. W. C. A. headquarters of the life-saving work that is being done by the association in the camps and cantonments in this country. The hostess houses daily connect mothers and sons, girl-wives and their soldier husbands, women who have travelled sometimes a thousand miles or more to see their boys and who, without the friendly and efficient help of the Y. W. C. A., would never find each other in the maze of the camp. They supply homelike entertainment and friendly comfort for lonely boys. The clubs, headquarters, boarding-houses and cafeterias save hundreds of girls every day from the perils of their strange surroundings in the neighborhood of encampments and of factories and munition plants. The Patriotic Leagues uphold the standards of thrift and purity in every community. This was the explanation a young mill girl gave one other day of the league when a new girl asked her about it: "Well, as far as I can get it, when you wear a button and a young gentleman friend sees it he says 'Nothing doing here'".

House of Bishops to Meet

St. Louis, Missouri.—A special session of the House of Bishops is called, to convene in the Church Missions House, New York City, at 10 a. m., Wednesday, April 10, 1918. The purpose of the call is:

1. To act upon the proffered resignation of the Rt. Rev. Paul Jones, Bishop of Utah.
2. To consider, and, if deemed best, to proceed to fill the vacancy likely to exist in the missionary district of the Philippines.
3. To act upon any other business that may lawfully be presented at a special session.

The bishops are invited to send to the secretary of the house any names of persons suggested for the expected vacancy in the Philippine Islands.

FRENCH CHURCH PEOPLE URGED TO BE HOSPITABLE

Protestant Papers Would Manifest Fraternity to Americans

American families whose sons have gone to France will find great comfort in the attitude of the French people toward the foreign troops on their soil, as expressed in the following note just published in all French Protestant newspapers:

"A DUTY OF HOSPITALITY

"The soldiers of the American Army, the Canadians and the Australians of the British Army are too far away to get furloughs for their own homes. Most of them come to Paris and live in the hotels or the Y. M. C. A. buildings. These officers and soldiers, Protestants generally, and very young, know little of our own country. It would be very good and useful for them to know the real French Protestant homes, and to become acquainted with the various aspects of our country. From several sources it has been suggested to us that Frenchmen should show hospitality to these men who have come from the extremities of the world in order to fight for the defense of our native soil, in the name of the great principles of liberty. Among these are ministers' sons, divinity students, young men educated with care by pious mothers, distinguished pupils of the universities. There will doubtless be, in all parts of France, many of our families who will be glad to provide hospitality for one of them during a furlough or during convalescence. Some of these soldiers may offer, if necessary, to be received as paying guests.

"We expect numerous offers as a manifestation of fraternity.

"Send all offers and particulars to Andre Monod, secretary of the French Protestant Committee, 102 Boulevard Arago, Paris 14."

Mystery Play in Morristown

Morristown, New Jersey.—On the Epiphany a special service was held in the Church of the Redeemer, which partook of the nature of a mystery play and a candle service. "The Light of the World is Jesus" was the theme of the service. The full choir took part, together with the boys and girls of the congregation. A procession of girls as psalmists testified of the gift of spiritual light; they were followed by boys as prophets who foretold the coming of the Great Light. The angel music from the Messiah announced that the Christ had come. Shepherds and kings gathered around the Light as it shone in the manger. Finally processions of children bearing lights came to the cradle and gave the testimony of the Apostles as to the brightness of His glory and set forth again the great claims that were made by Christ Himself that He was the Light of the World.

STUDENTS FROM ORIENT FILL ST. MARY'S SCHOOL

Shanghai School Has Set New Standard for Chinese Women

Shanghai, China.—St. Mary's School opened this fall with 240 girls and 31 teachers. The raising of the school fees to $100 for board and tuition has, fortunately, seemed to make no difference with the number who have applied for entrance. Students have come here from all over China, and even from as far away as Jamaica, Java and North Borneo. Two more are of the third generation to be born in America. These girls from the colonies, all of them daughters of progressive Christian families, and brought up very much like foreign children, bring quite a new atmosphere into the school. Freed more or less from the prejudices of China, they are bound to have a great influence in the future of their country.

The addition of the orphanage and the playground on the Point has been an immense help. The building was in much need of repair, but Miss Dodson has had it wired throughout, and altered enough to make it comfortable and usable for bedrooms and classrooms as long as it will be wanted. The big, unattractive dormitories, with the help of partitions, more windows and plenty of fresh whitewash, make very pretty rooms, furnished with nice iron beds and white frames for the mosquito nets. The wall between the two schools has been taken down, and a covered way, our "cloister", built for rainy days. A new wall has been put up around the lawn beside the orphanage, now called by the rather stupendous title of "St. Mary's Science Hall", with a gate opening onto the Point.

In making out records for the graduates of St. Mary's it has been found that over half, and not all of them baptized Christians, since they left school are known to have taken some part in the work of the mission, or to have done Christian work on their own responsibility. And the best of it is that this proportion improves as you come down to the classes that have gone out in recent years. Right now more of the girls are working, both for salaries and voluntarily in boarding and day schools, at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, and in churches everywhere, than have ever been in any previous year.

St. Mary's stands now for a very different thing in many ways from the ideal of ten years ago. It does not stand for the wheelbarrow brides, nor does it stand for sending out teachers for job-lot teaching on starvation salaries. But it does stand for independence of character, self-respect and wholesome living, and it tries to fit its girls to fill positions that command respect, and raise the Church and her training in the estimation of the heathen. A new type of girl has gone out from St. Mary's in the past five years, one that is eager for a different life from that with which the older graduates were content. The change is in the girl herself, not in her family. It is the girl who demands more activity and wider interests. The result is that more is being done in the school to change conditions than is being done in the homes, for it is only the bravest and wisest of the parents who recognize the need for these changes.

PATRIOTIC SERVICES ARE GREAT WEEKLY SUCCESS

Service, Sermon, Songs and Supper Appeal to Men

BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.—Christ church in Baltimore is conducting each Sunday afternoon a most successful patriotic service, supper party and "sing" for men in uniform. At 4 o'clock the men of the parish meet with their automobiles and drive up and down the streets inviting the men to the service and bringing them to the church in the cars. At five the service begins with a patriotic processional. During the service our National Hymns and anthems are sung by the choir and congregation and prayers and intercessions are offered for our Allies and our own country. A ten minutes heart to heart talk is given each week at this service by the acting rector, the Rev. Clarence Stuart McClellan, Jr. Such topics as "Why Worry", "Forget It", "Carry On", "Reveille", give the keynote of Mr. McClellan's talks. After the service the women of the parish provide a wholesome supper for the men and a smoker is given them. At 7 o'clock the entertainment begins. It consists of up-to-date war songs and the old home songs, a program given by the students of the Peabody Institute under the direction of Miss Lena Striebler, a program of humorous selections by Strickland Gillilan and Charles McCann, the well known writers and comedians. During the entertainment sweaters, helmets and wristlets are given the men by the women of Christ church. The entertainment concludes about 9 o'clock, in time to permit the men to reach the various military camps in and about Baltimore.

Many of the Christ church parishioners are entertaining the soldiers, sailors and marines over the week ends.

Nearly 200 men attend this service each Sunday and the church is filled with an enthusiastic and interested congregation.

The following striking invitation is sent out:

Service, supper, "sing" and a welcome await you at Christ church on East Chase and St. Paul streets, one block east of Charles street and nearly opposite the Hotel Belvidere. There is a short service in the church at 5 o'clock with the old hymns and the National songs, and a short heart to heart talk. Then at 6 o'clock in the parish house there is a supper for you as the guests of the church. A 7 o'clock we have a get-to-gether and a "sing" with all the tip-top songs of the War: "Over There", "Joan of Arc" and "Uncle Sammie". Bring your friends and come.

NEW YORK WOMEN THANK MR. MITCHEL FOR SERVICE

Woman's Municipal League Express Appreciation of Late Administration

NEW YORK CITY.—Mayor Mitchel did not leave the city hall without a word of thanks and appreciation from the women of New York. The following letter was sent to him by Mrs. Henry Bruere, president of the Woman's Municipal League:

"On behalf of the Woman's Municipal League, may I express to you our appreciation of the extraordinary services which you have rendered the city of New York? Both as mayor and as a leading public official for the years preceding your office as chief executive you set a standard of public service which succeeding administrations will find it difficult to equal. New York has now taken the leadership among American cities for efficient and serviceable government and this achievement is largely due to your efforts and to the work of your commissioners. To an extraordinary and unprecedented degree the spirit of disinterested public service animated every city department.

"There are many reforms instituted by you which a reactionary administration may be able to overthrow, but you have made New Yorkers so accustomed to clean, honest and efficient city government that future administrators will find it difficult to deviate radically from the high standard that you have set. The lasting thanks of all friends of good government must be yours."

CHILDREN GIVE UP CANDY TO MAKE OTHERS HAPPY

"Superstructure of Unselfishness" a Sunday School Organization

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.—At Grace church Sunday school, Pittsburgh, the Rev. William Porkess, rector, there has become established what is uniquely called "The Children's Superstructure of Unselfishness". Each Christmas time the boys and girls of the parish sacrifice their candy and use the money for the sake of others. The school hold their entertainment on Holy Innocents' night. The scholars are proud of their record, covering five Christmases. It is, indeed, a superstructure. In 1913 sixty presents for selected destitute children of Pittsburgh were given; in 1914 several pairs of blankets for the Pittsburgh Children's Hospital; in 1915 decorations for St. Barnabas' Home for Incurable Men and Boys; in 1916 a wheel chair for the crippled children of St. Margaret Memorial Hospital; and in 1917 a sum of money sent for the relief of the starving children of Armenia.

GIFTS AND MEMORIALS

On the last Sunday in 1917 two beautiful memorials were dedicated in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Atlantic City, New Jersey, the Rev. W. E. Allen, Sr., rector. They were presented by Mrs. Louis A. Bornemann, of East Orange, New Jersey, in memory of her mother, Mrs. Susanna S. Cunliffe, and her uncle, James S. Cunliffe. These were a bishop's chair and a receiving alms basin. They were made in the studios of Mr. R. Geisler, New York City, and are fine specimens of his well-known handicraft. Mrs. Bornemann and family spent several Summers in Atlantic City and were regular attendants at the services of the Church of the Good Shepherd. The parish is doing a great work in the "Inlet District" of Atlantic City, but is greatly hampered by a mortgage upon the property. Were this wiped out the scope of its usefulness would be great enlarged.

$3,000 Paid On Debt

ASBURY PARK, NEW JERSEY.—Three thousand dollars more has been paid on the debt of Trinity church, making a total of $11,000 on the $25,000 debt in twenty-six months. There are twenty-nine men in the service from Trinity.

CHURCHMAN IS HONORED AT TABLET UNVEILING

Dr. Mann Contrasts With Unveiling of Bishop Brooks Tablet

ORANGE, NEW JERSEY.—On Tuesday evening, December 11, an interesting service was held in the Church of the Epiphany. This church is for the colored people of the Oranges and, under the wise and energetic leadership of the Rev. George M. Plaskett, has grown steadily in numbers and influence.

At this service a tablet was dedicated in memory of Mr. Thomas Henry Johnson. On the tablet is the following inscription:

"To the Glory of God and in loving memory of Thomas Henry Johnson
A. D. 1847-1914

"Born in Virginia in the days of slavery he 'showed all good fidelity' as a freedman of Christ. For eleven years sexton of Grace church, Orange, New Jersey, he dignified his office and won the affectionate esteem of both clergy and people.

"The loyal and trusted friend of this church for the people of his race, to whom under God its beginnings are largely due his name will ever be held here in honored remembrance."

Dr. Alexander Mann of Boston commented on this occurrence as follows:

"It was my privilege to be present and to make an address on this occasion. During my seventeen years at Grace church, Orange, Thomas Johnson was my trusted and loyal friend. Faithful and efficient in his duties as sexton of Grace church, unfailingly courteous, a loyal and devout Churchman, he longed for the day when there should be in the Oranges a church for the people of his race, and when the mission of the Epiphany was started, under the guidance and with the generous co-operation of the people of Grace church, Thomas Johnson was from the beginning among the most regular attendants and faithful worshipers. To him, more perhaps than to any other one man, was due the success of the enterprise, and before he died he had the satisfaction of seeing the new church firmly established in the confidence and good-will of the colored people of the Oranges.

"Two days after this service in the Church of the Epiphany I was present at the unveiling of a tablet which was placed on the wall of a building in High Street, Boston, to mark the site of the house where Phillips Brooks was born, and I could not but feel the apparent contrast and yet the underlying harmony of the two events. One tablet in memory of the greatest preacher of his day, the Churchman who is perhaps the most widely known and dearly loved. The other in memory of an American Negro, known save to a small group of people. Yet both lives touched by that same Spirit of Christ which 'divideth to every man severally as he will'. Both Christian gentlemen in the truest sense of that great word. Both loyal servants of Christ. Both men who in their day and generation wrought for the glory of God and the good of the Church. The Church is the richer for both these lives, the life of the great Bishop of Massachusetts, and the life of the Virginia Negro."

PATTON CAMPAIGN PLANNED FOR CHURCH IN ST. LOUIS

Patriotism Shown in Other Drives Will Be a Factor

St. Louis, Missouri.—The public press is telling us that in its givings to the Red Cross drive, the Y. M. C. A. drive and the Liberty Bonds campaign St. Louis went way "over the top". Certain it is that there is a burning civic and national enthusiasm here in these war times. Many of our clergy, enroled as four-minute men and as publicity agents, are to be found on various platforms in the city and in the State whenever any "drive" is on. Members of the Church are among the most conspicious laymen now pressed into service to meet the Nation's great emergency. Members of the Church are among the generous givers whenever any national appeal is heard. The record shows that in the Hoover pledge campaign St. Louis led the Nation.

Because the Church in St. Louis has taken notice of the splendid results of organization and information in all matters touching the country's great need, the clergy and laymen are planning a city-wide campaign for the Church under the auspices of the Rev. Dr. Patton and his co-worker, the Rev. L. G. Wood. The campaign will be conducted in St. Louis, February 24 to March 3. An enthusiastic meeting was held in St. George's church the evening of January 3, at which a Central Committee on Organization, consisting of five clergymen and seven laymen, was appointed. Bishop Tuttle presided and addresses were made by Bishop Johnson and the Rev. Messrs. Phillips, Bunting, Cleveland, Kemerer, Boden, Jones and Dean Davis, and by Messrs. Bull, Burgess, Price and Randolph of the laity.

The Missionary Board of the diocese had gathered for supper at St. George's immediately before this meeting for organization, it being the regular night for the monthly board meeting. It was very gratifying to learn from the report of Treasurer Lycett that, notwithstanding the constant appeals that are being answered for all kinds of "drives" in connection with public safety and the prosecution of the war, the treasury of the Missionary Board is entirely normal. All salaries and stipends have been promptly paid when due and there is a balance equal to that which is usually on hand at this season of the year. This is very gratifying news, coupled with the fact that the budget for diocesan missions has been larger the past two years than ever before and in view of the further fact that all mission stations in the diocese but one are supplied with clergy. The missionary campaign which is contemplated under the direction of Dr. Patton is to be primarily for spiritual ends. It will happen, as it always does happen, that men and women who are stirred to contemplate the vision of wider opportunities for the Kingdom will be aroused to make more generous offerings of themselves and their substance for the honor of the King.

Archbishop of Canterbury's Message

New York City.—The secretary of the New York branch of the Overseas Club received this dispatch last week from the Archbishop of Canterbury:

"We firmly believe that by the grace of God our fellowship in arms on behalf of righteousness, good faith, and freedom will be potent for the whole world's good will. It will tend to our together securing the only kind of peace which will justify the solemn and tragic sacrifices which such a war involves.

BILLY SUNDAY'S ART IS GROTESQUE, SAY JAPANESE

Hayakawa, Movie Actor, Does Not "Wriggle His Hands"

Hayakawa, the popular Japanese artist of the movies, thinks the enthusiasm of certain American audiences for Billy Sunday is a mark of weakness in Western civilization. He said so recently in an interview in the Los Angeles Times. As all movie "fans" know, Hayakawa can send chills down the spine of a spectator, sitting in all the comfort and protection of a movie house, without moving a muscle of his face. This is Japanese art, according to Hayakawa, who added that the Japanese of the Samurai class think Billy Sunday's gyrations in his efforts to produce emotion are grotesque. Probably Hayakawa doesn't know that a good many people in America doubtless belong to the Samurai class.

"We are all trained from childhood never to betray emotion with our faces," said Mr. Hayakawa. "Mr. Sunday certainly has a great power over his audiences, but he waves his arms and jumps up on his pulpit and screams out slang phrases. We had an actor in Japan, named Danjuro, who could sway an audience more powerfully than Sunday. He didn't fling his arms about. He didn't move a muscle. He stood in the centre of the stage absolutely motionless, his face absolutely without expression. He stood there rigid until it seemed as if you must scream to relieve the tension. Words are the crude things. It is words that cannot tell a subtle story."

"But gestures?" questioned the interviewer. "Can you tell the story of a man's soul struggle by wriggling your hands?"

"I do not wriggle my hands," said Hayakawa with dignity. "Neither do I make gestures. If I want to show on the screen that I hate a man I do not shake my fist at him. I think down in my heart how I hate him and try not to move a muscle of my face; just as I would in life."

Death of Bishop Knight's Wife

Sewanee, Tennessee.—Mrs. Albion Williamson Knight, wife of Bishop Knight, vice-chancellor of the University of the South and previously missionary bishop of Cuba, died here on Saturday, January 12. Mrs. Knight was Elise Nicoll Hallowes of Jacksonville, Florida. She and Bishop Knight were married in 1889. The funeral was on Tuesday, January 15, in Jacksonville.

Retreat for Women

Elizabeth, New Jersey.—There will be a day of devotion for women, under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary of Christ church, on Thursday, February, 7, 1918, conducted by the Rev. Father Hughson, O. H. C.

RURAL LIFE PROGRAM FOR SEWANEE PROVINCE

Country Church Should be Centre of Religious and Social Life

Charleston, South Carolina.—Recommendations of the committee on Country Church and Rural Life, endorsed by the Synod of the Province of Sewanee, at Charleston, South Carolina, have been published as follows:

1. That each diocese of the Province be urged to provide a Committee on Country Church and Rural Life, either in connection with or independent of the Diocesan Commission of Social Service.

(a) To investigate and report on the status of the Church in rural districts.

(b) To make a study of the country Church and rural life problem and its literature.

(c) To make recommendations of such methods as may be adaptable to the various local needs revealed by their investigation and study.

2. That clergy and other workers engaged in country Church work be urged to make local surveys of their various fields of labor, ascertaining the social, educational, economic, moral and religious conditions as they exist and describe in a report to their diocesan or the Provincial Committee what they are doing to meet these conditions.

3. That the theological department of the University of the South, within the Province of Sewanee, as well as the General Theological Seminary and other seminaries of the Church, be urged to supply in their libraries a Country Life Bookshelf, and that the attention of their students for Holy Orders be called to the importance and the possibilities of this subject.

Recommendations were also made for a campaign of publicity and education through the Church press and the Sewanee Summer School. This should apply also to the Gulfport, Blue Ridge and St. Mary's conferences.

It is also suggested by the committee that

1. Every diocesan committee make a map of the diocese, showing the live and decadent rural churches; the circuits of the rural clergy, and the rural strategic points within the diocese, whether served by the Church or not.

2. That the clergy and lay workers in rural sections make maps of their respective fields, showing location of Church families and members, the other religious bodies at work in the same field and their membership, and the unchurched families or individuals in their communities.

3. That the clergy and lay workers cooperate with State and secular agencies for advancing the community welfare. State Departments of Education, Agriculture and Board of Health; County Board of Education, State University and College of Agriculture. Write and find out how to help the community through these agenceis.

The function of the Church in rural sections is:

To teach fundamental religion, to act as inspirer and leader in the cultural life of the community, to be the social unifier and centre of the community.

SOCIAL SERVICE APPEAL MADE BY COMMISSION

Apportionments Announced for 1918 Amount of $14,076.54

NEW YORK CITY.—The Joint Commission on Social Service has recently issued the following apportionment appeal for the current year:

"Since the Joint Commission on Social Service, acting on the authority of the general convention of 1913, made its first appeal to the dioceses in 1915, the number of apportionments voted has nearly doubled, and the total amount of apportionments has increased 100 per cent., as shown by the comparative tables given on the inside of this folder. In 1917, $6,300 was paid or pledged by fifty-two dioceses and missionary districts. During that year upwards of 60 per cent. of the commission's total income of $10,000 has come from the dioceses, and it is the earnest hope of the commission that this proportion of diocesan support may be substantially increased during the fiscal year 1918.

"In presenting its apportionment for 1918, again on the basis of one per cent. of the regular missionary apportionment, the commission urges not only that those dioceses which have in the past three years voted apportionments may vote them again this year, but that those which have not yet assisted the commission in this way may seriously consider the claim and respond in the amount indicated." The appointments total $14,076.54.

During 1917 the commission received the sum of $10,781.48, distributed as follows:

Diocesan Apportionments
Pledged before 1917	$1,050.13
Pledged for 1917	2,809.94*	$4,860.70
Individual Contributions
Renewals	$2,457.50
New	3,172.70	$5,630.20
Prize Essay Fund		200.00
Miscellaneous		91.21

During that period the expenditures of the commission were roughly as follows:

Salaries	$4,932.00
Rent	792.00
Postage, telegraph and telephone	341.12
Stationery and printing	2,374.28
Traveling expenses	245.00
Payment on loans	850.00
Miscellaneous	521.57
	$10,055.97

* The total amount of diocesan pledges for 1918, as above indicated, is $6,330.98.

 In several instances the secretary's expenses were paid by the organizations requesting his presence.

CHURCH FLAG DISPLAYED WITH STARS AND STRIPES

RUGBY, TENNESSEE.—Wishing to teach the correlation and interdependence of Church and State, the Rev. B. T. Bensted, rector of Christ church here, has displayed on the sanctuary wall opposite to the Stars and Stripes a Church flag of the following design:

It is made of white silk (white, as particularly appropirate for the emblem of the All Holy One) embroidered in the centre with a plain red satin cross (the cross of Christ, our only hope and glory), and having emblazoned in gold in its upper corners the sacred monogram (the Saviour of the World) and the Chi Ro (the Mighty Captain); and in the lower corners the Alpha and the Omega (symbols of the divine attribute and eternal headship of the God Man).

The flag is thus a most thorough compendium of Church doctrine, and also, by its juxtaposition to the national emblem, an incentive to true Christian citizenship.

At the last meeting of the Knoxville Convocation the above design was officially approved and adopted as the one to be followed in this district.

DR. GODDARD OF NANCHANG ADDRESSES JR. C. M. A.

Successful Meeting at the See House, Brooklyn

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.—Twenty-five members of the Junior Clergy Missionary Association met at the See House of the diocese of Long Island on January 8, at the invitation of the president of the association, the Ven. Charles Henry Webb, archdeacon of Brooklyn. Luncheon was followed by an address which held the close attention of the clergy for a considerable time and was prolonged for perhaps half an hour by questions. The speaker was the Rev. Amos Goddard, D.D., for five years missionary in Nanchang, China, the fifth largest city in China and the capital of his province. He stressed the difficulties of doing this pioneer Christian work in a country of dense superstition, stagnant social custom, suppression of womanhood, political graft, monastic avarice and insufficient freedom for Christian effort, and paucity of financial resources. In spite of all these things, solid results had followed hard missionary toil in the line of education, medicine and spiritual propaganda. A rented house for worship and education was being successfully maintained in moderate though considerable proportions.

Special pains are being taken to secure the intelligent preparation of catechumens. Confirmation is not allowed until a year has elapsed since baptism. It is found most needful to seek the conversion of the whole family group, lest it fall apart and decay after certain members of it have given up their ancestral bond and moorings. Their missionary schools are graded (1) for boys up to seven and (2) for boys up to fourteen years of age. A girls' school is now being attempted.

Externals in religion occupy the first place in Chinese thought, so great care has to be exercised to prevent Christianity becoming mere ceremonialism. One high Chinese official has declared: "Unless Christian ethics dominate the new republic of China, there is no hope for the republic".

Among the enumerated needs mentioned by Dr. Goddard were: (1) Christian model households; (2) Work to reach the soldiers; (3) Amusements, especially fitted to develop the character of Chinese women; (4) A stereopticon; (5) More Bible women; (6) A dignified church building as a proof of real Christian earnestness; (7) A Church come to stay.

The next meeting of the Jr. C. M. A. will be held in Holy Trinity church, Harlem, on Tuesday, February 5, beginning earlier in the day than usual because it will be a Pre-Lenten Retreat conducted by the Rev. Dr. E. S. Rousmaniere, dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston.

DEMANDS OF OUR FLAG ARE INTERNATIONAL ONES

Episcopal Church Stands by Government From Choice and Duty

CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA.—Featured by a special musical program and a patriotic address by Judge Francis D. Winston, of North Carolina, the Grace church service flag, containing sixty-seven stars, was unfurled on a recent Sunday morning.

Judge Winston's address was mainly a tribute to the flag and the men who follow it, and an interpretation of what it stands for. He characterized the Stars and Stripes as being the one great symbol of world liberty. He said in part:

"The demand of the American flag is an international one. It demands that injustice cease everywhere. No country is so powerful as to impede its progress, and none so weak as to be beneath its sheltering care and the protection of its brotherhood. It calls the world to self-sacrifice and service; out of which spirit alone can grow equal rights and equal opportunity. Equal opportunity typified by our national emblem in the lighted torch handed down to us from Calvary; the essence of the life of the lowly Nazarene. The American soldier in olive drab, standing under the Stars and Stripes before foreign capitals, calls the nations of earth to adopt the life and live it, born in Judea; and that emblem teaches the gospel of labor and of usefulness, and boldly demands that all people be freed from the aggression of despotic and autocratic power.

"With the Episcopal Church standing by the Government is both a choice and a duty; it prefers to stand with those in authority. No worse form of treason could be spread abroad than to have the churches of our land withdraw from a vigorous support of the forces of freedom in this great struggle. This is a righteous war; that cannot be gainsaid. The patriotic sons of the Church of all churches in the land, are bravely going forth to battle. The banner flung to the breeze today is consecrated by the tears and prayers of godly men and women, and our sons who fight under it must be kept hourly in our hearts and our prayers must follow them."

NE OF THE oddest out of the scores of ried ministries which Dr. John Timothy one has found open to him in his serv- as religious work director in Camp Grant Rockford, Illinois, was the rescue of a velorn soldier from the depths of despair rough writing for him a model love let-. The luckless and discouraged soldier nfided to Dr. Stone that his girl had gone ck on him completely. She did not want n to go into the army and he tried to icate her by buying her a Liberty Bond fore he enlisted, but even that, he said, l not "fetch her" and he had not heard om her in three weeks. So Dr. Stone, l of sympathy, got down beside the boy, nded him a notebook and made him copy wn word by word a love letter which the nous preacher guaranteed would win the l's heart if she was worth winning. ough there is no later report from the e, there is every reason to believe that youth was justified in the confidence h which he went away murmuring to nself, "Gosh, I'll get her yet!"

RE IS A LETTER from a Sammy to his tor:

AMERICO VESPUCIO CABRAL, JR., the son of the Ven. Americo Vespucio Cabral, the archdeacon of Porto Alegre, and rector of Trinity church, Porto Alegre, has joined the American Army and is now in training at Spartanburg. Young Cabral is, of course, a native Brazilian. He has been brought up in the Church, for his father was one of the first to join Bishop Kinsolving in the work of the American mission.

For the Fathers and Mothers

WE remember before Thee, the God of mercy and pity, the mothers and fathers of the young men who are serving in this war. Lord, be gracious unto them in their anxious days and sleepless nights. As day follows day and they receive no word, fortify their souls within them by the grace of Thy Holy Spirit. Help them to bear, and strengthen them to endure, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

CHARLES SCHNIZLER, the head of that excellent War Relief Committee at St. George's church, New York, that publishes The Servitor, a leaflet devoted to keeping the parishioners at home in touch with those at the front, writes THE CHURCHMAN that he will be glad to send copies of his paper to anyone interested. Here are two sample "items":

"The real St. George's spirit was greatly in evidence among the members towards their fellow members in the service from the generous response to the Christmas mail shower. Some 175 postcards, well distributed throughout the list, were sent out conveying the season's greetings in an attempt to 'keep the home fires burning' from loyal hearts as a token of remembrance to those near and far.

"In order to reach 'Somewhere in France', Privates Geishen, Shear and Springstead traveled eighteen days on the water, sixty hours on a train and twenty miles on foot."

THE BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW has enroled forty laymen as camp secretaries under the auspices of the Army and Navy Department. G. Frank Shelby is directing the campaign. The camp secretaries will interest men in the National Army in organizing groups which will work for the moral and the religious uplift of themselves and their comrades. They will cooperate with the chaplains and with the Y. M. C. A. secretaries in all religious activities. Franklin S. Edmonds of Philadelphia, General Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, has gone to France to arrange for the work of the secretaries.

MR. R. This house is the only religious work undertaken by any church at this university where there is no Y. M. C. A. Under the wise guidance of Bishop Jones it has been managed under a broad and tolerant policy which does not antagonize the Mormons.

THE REV. GEORGE DEW. ZACHARY, formerly of Amherst, Va., has begun work as rector of St. Andrew's church, State College, Pennsylvania. The work in Pennsylvania State College is the common interest of the five dioceses of the State. There are about 2,000 students, men and women.

OKLAHOMA

Trinity Church Consecrated — Bishop Brooke consecrated Trinity church, Guthrie, Oklahoma, on the Epiphany. It was the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Bishop's consecration and this is the first one of the churches to be freed from debt in the effort to that end, commemorating the anniversary. Joining in the service were the rector emeritus, retired (the Rev. A. B. Nicholas), and the Rev. Messrs. Sturges, Foster and Pettit. This church is the successor to the first church built and used in Oklahoma for white work. The old building erected in 1891 is now used as a parish house. The present church is a substantial brick building and, while lacking some of its furnishings, has been in use for some time. This parish was from 1893 to 1908 the pro-Cathedral, the Bishop removing to Oklahoma City in 1908.

PHILADELPHIA

200,000 New Residents—The city and the Church are making plans for the many thousand workers in the Hog Island shipbuilding plant. A large plot of ground has been purchased for the erection of homes for these men and their families. The Presbyterians have already set up a chapel in the neighborhood. The West Philadelphia Convocation will meet this problem and undertake missionary work in this new field. This seems to present a splendid opportunity for the Church; it is like a new city, and a large one.

Memorial Statue of Nurse Edith Cavell—A statue to Miss Edith Cavell, the heroic war nurse who was executed by the Germans, has been placed in St. Mark's church in Frankford by Mr. Thomas Creighton in memory of his wife. St. Mark's is in the heart of the English section of the city, which makes the memorial the more appropriate. The rector, the Rev. J. B. Harding, is arranging a series of lectures on the lives of the noble women who are kept in memory by statues in the parish church. There are figures of Saints Hilda, Agnes, Mary Magdalene and Margaret, as well as Florence Nightengale and the new one of Edith Cavell.

Candidates for the Ministry in the Marine Corps—Bishop Rhinelander has reported the good work Mr. Albert Lucas and Mr. Loyal Graham are doing among the marines at Port Royal. They expressed their regret at the dalay in their ordination, but were glad to be of use to their fellows in the service of the Nation's "crack corps".

Dr. Caley's Twenty-fifth Anniversary—On Epiphany Sunday Dr. Llewellan N. Caley kept the twenty-fifth anniversary of his rectorship of the Church of St. Jude and the Nativity. One thinks of Dr. Caley as religious educator at large; his interest and insight into the work of teaching the young is known and valued throughout the Church. His many friends will be glad to know of this milestone in his own parochial life.

Long and Faithful Service Ended—Members of the Woman's Auxiliary in the diocese can hardly remember a time when Miss Virginia F. Campbell has not shown a deep and devoted interest in the work of the Colored Commission. For more than twenty years she has given herself to this branch of woman's influence among the colored people of the diocese and the Church, as secretary of the commission. On the feast of the Epiphany God gave her rest from her labor. The burial service was held in St. Mark's church, and was attended by a great number of her friends of the Auxiliary.

War Commission Appoints Chaplains

VOLUNTARY chaplains have been appointed in nearly all of the cantonments, and in many of the National Guard and other camps. Voluntary chaplains, whose salaries are paid in whole or in part by the War Commission are appointed upon the nomination of the Bishop in whose diocese the several camps are located. In certain of the camps diocesan or provincial committees make final appointment of chaplains and pay their salaries from their own treasury. The General Fund of the Commission is used to supplement these resources where needed, and salaries provided by the Commission up to the present amount to $21,500. The camps in the southeast are being rapidly supplied with well-selected chaplains.

Professor Remington Dead—Professor J. P. Remington, dean of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, has recently died. He was the father of the Bishop Suffragan of South Dakota. The sympathy of the many friends of the Bishop, who began his ministry in this diocese, goes out to him in his loss.

BALTIMORE

Epiphany Mass Meeting—The Missionary Mass Meeting is always the chief ecclesiastical event of the Winter in Baltimore. This year it was held upon the festival of the Epiphany. Although the night was very inclement, the Lyric Opera House was well filled by an audience representing all the best elements of Maryland Churchmanship. The music was led by a great vested choir which filled the whole stage and included delegations from most of the city churches. Bishop Murray in welcoming the congregation and the speakers alluded to the many changes which have occurred within the past year, especially the expulsion of the Turks from the world's most holy shrines. He expressed the conviction that it has been the banner year in our diocesan and general Church work, and that as we look back upon it we should thank God and take courage. He gave as a motto for the new year the words, "I ought, I can, I will". Dr. William C. Sturgis, educational secretary of the Board of Missions, delivered a direct and practical address upon the unreality of the average man's religion. He is well posted as to all the details of the world's war and can talk glibly about it, but how much does he know and care about the Church's war? He oversubscribes the Liberty Loan, gives millions to the Red Cross, but says he can do no more for missions. But the Church's war demands from him no less of loyalty, self-sacrifice and devotion than does the warfare of the world. He should put first things first, the Kingdom of God over all. Bishop DuMoulin of Ohio insisted that the old era has gone, never to return, and that the glory of the new day demands a new manhood. The reclamation of Jerusalem from the grasp of the Turk is a significant guarantee of the triumph of right over wrong. The destiny of America is not only to help in winning the war but to perfect a new type of manhood, womanhood and childhood which shall help to make a new earth and a new heaven.

Red Cross Work at St. Paul's—The women of Old St. Paul's church are very busy with war relief work. They have already sent forward more than 16,000 surgical dressings, over 10,000 of which were made in one week. This has been accomplished by the organization of a cutting department with an electrical cutter such as is used in up-to-date manufacturing establishments. The Saturday evening meetings for soldiers and sailors at the Parish House have been most successful and there are generally from seventy-five to eighty men present. The attendance on Sunday evenings is smaller, but much opportunity for individual influence is offered. All who come are provided with something to eat and are directed to proper places for lodgings.

A Clerical Removal—The Rev. Francis Van R. Moore, who has done an excellent work as vicar of the Church of the Redemption, Locust Point, of an institutional character, has removed from the diocese and has become rector of Trinity church, Vineland, New Jersey.

CHICAGO

The Church Club and the Seminary—The Church Club of the diocese is in the midst of a vigorous campaign to raise $50,000 for the Western Theological Seminary. The Church Club has sent its appeal to over thirty-five hundred Church people in the diocese. More than one-half has been subscribed. The question has been raised as to whether every virile young man having the qualifications necessary for a candidate for Holy Orders should not be enlisted in some work in connection with the war; and whether the funds should not be devoted to the maintenance of the Red Cross Society, the Y. M. C. A., or Church war activities. The Dean says: "The answer to these difficulties is the answer to the quest hether the maintenance and propagation the Christian religion and morals in the orld at large can at any time and under ıy conditions be made secondary in the inds of Christians to any cause or interest hatever. The participation by the United ates Government in this war is justified ıly upon a religious and moral basis. This ıs been made clear at every step by the aders of the Nation. The campaign, then, in harmony with the purpose of the Govnment, as being one directly related to e highest interests of the Government hich are inextricably involved in the war. ıe Government has exempted theological ıdents from the first draft. Churchmen ıght to be as clear-sighted and as farghted as our congressional legislators".

ergymen in Reserve Militia—The Rev. ıomas N. Harrowell, rector of the ıurch of the Holy Nativity, Longwood, s received a commission as captain in the ıird Infantry, Illinois Reserve Militia; the ev. Oscar Homburger of St. George's urch, Grand Crossing, a commission as cond lieutenant, while the Rev. Hugh J. encer of St. Margaret's church is chapn of the same regiment.

otherhood Man at "Great Lakes"—Mr. Lawrence Choate has been appointed otherhood Camp Secretary at the Great kes training station. Mr. Choate has en a loyal worker in the Brotherhood ce his boyhood.

ıurchmen in State Council Work—nry T. Chase of the Church of the Reemer has accepted an appointment by State Council of Defense as recruiting icer for the Hyde Park unit of the Illiis Volunteer Training Corps. The Hyde rk men are drilling weekly in the Bartt gymnasium of the University of Chigo, which the university authorities have ced at their disposal. Claude Edmonds the Church of the Holy Comforter, Kenorth, is acting as captain of the Kenilrth unit of the same organization, which drilling in the Trier High School gymsium.

otherhood Men to the Front—Edward Swigert of St. Paul's Chapter of the otherhood has gone to Camp Taylor, uisville, to serve as Brotherhood Secrety for that camp, while Noel C. Bossier, Secretary of the Chapter, has gone with ambulance corps to France.

urch War Commission—A diocesan nmittee has been formed, consisting of en prominent clergymen and eleven layn, to co-operate with the Church War mmission in raising that part of the 00,000 fund for church work in the ips, cantonments and over the seas, which been apportioned to the Diocese of tsburgh. The Rev. E. S. Travers, rector Trinity church, is chairman of the comtee; the Rev. Dr. H. A. Flint of the urch of the Nativity, Crafton, secretary, Mr. Henry Chalfant, treasurer. The nmittee has set $23,000 as the goal for the cese, and is busily engaged in distributing rature and laying plans for a grand ingthering from every parish and mission in the diocese, on Sunday, January 27. The committee has its headquarters at the church rooms, 317 Jenkins building, Pittsburgh.

Loss by Deaths—St. Peter's church, Pittsburgh, has been sadly bereaved in the last two or three months by the death of its senior and junior wardens, Messrs. Harvey Childs, Jr., and Samuel R. Patterson, and that of another vestryman, George N. Munro, Esq. Mr. Childs was senior warden for fifteen years, and Mr. Patterson junior warden for thirteen years. Mr. Munro was the oldest member of the congregation, having reached the ripe age of eighty-four years.

Dean McCready Honored—The Very Rev. R. L. McCready, Dean of Christ church cathedral, was elected president of the Louisville Ministerial Association on the 8th. The association is composed of the ministers of nearly all of the Protestant denominations of the city. This is the first time that an Episcopal clergyman has held the office of president. This has probably been due in the past because of the fact there has been an aloofness on the part of the Episcopal Church. This time is past, and it is very gratifying to note that the election of Mr. McCready was unanimous on the part of the Ministerial Association.

Bishop Woodcock Makes Impression—At the Sunday afternoon mass meeting held under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. at Macauley's Theatre, January 6, the Rt. Rev. Charles E. Woodcock was the speaker. His theme was "A Challenge to Men". The theatre was packed and Bishop Woodcock in his masterly style stirred his audience to the very depths. The hearty way in which the ministers of all Christian communions are uniting their efforts at this time in a determination to arouse the people and assist in every way possible their full appreciation of their national, as well as their spiritual responsibility, augurs well for the realization some day of the dream of Church unity.

Splendid Work Among the Poles—M. L. Sosnin, member of St. Mark's parish, who for years has been an aggressive layman in the diocese, has taken up a splendid work at Camp Zachary Taylor in connection with some 3,000 Poles and Russians who are undergoing training as American soldiers. Mr. Sosnin is holding regular services every Sunday afternoon for these people, many of whom cannot speak a word of English. In fact, he is about the only agency that is able at the present time to minister to them. Through his work a number of them are being prepared for Confirmation. He finds his work intensely interesting and certainly those men, to whom he is ministering, find in him a great friend and companion.

Social Service Work Co-ordinated—There has been formed in Louisville within the past few months the Louisville Federation of Social Agencies. Elwood Street, formerly assistant director of the Cleveland Federation, is director of the local organization. Practically all of the social service work of the city is banded together under this head, twenty-five organizations participating. The Episcopal Church is represented in the Federation through the Home of the Innocents, of which Bishop Woodcock is president, thereby making him one of the Board of Presidents which governs the Federation. The budget for this years of the Federation is $203,000 and Mr. Street says that he hopes to raise that through the quiet educational work that they are doing without putting on a regular pledge campaign. The office at Louisville is thoroughly organized and is working along similar lines to the Council of Social Agencies in Cincinnati and in other cities.

The Growth of Parishes—We are likely to hear, nowadays, of population changes as serious embarrassments to parish life and growth. The incursions of foreign-speaking peoples into many of our city neighborhoods has depleted and will continue to deplete parishes and missions in such localities until the Church is ready to grasp intelligently and vigorously the problem of her responsibility for the shepherding of souls of other than Anglo-Saxon races. It is pleasant to recognize, however, that there is also the brighter side to the shifting of population as it affects our parishes. Many of our suburban parishes in particular are receiving a splendid infusion of new blood. The Church of The Holy Spirit, Mattapan, is an excellent instance of this happy tendency. In a resumé of the last ten years the rector, the Rev. Alan McLean Taylor, tells the story graphically:

In 1908 Mattapan was a rather remote region with poor facilities for transportation. But in ten years it has changed from a rather quiet suburb to a thickly populated section of the city. Because of this, and because of strong leadership, the communicant list has grown from 209 to 436. There have been 211 baptisms and 188 confirmations. A new parish-house and rectory have been built and paid for. Every parish apportionment has been met or exceeded and an endowment fund started which amounts at present to nearly $800.

The significance of this story of Mattapan is that it is typical of a considerable number of our parishes and missions. Brookline, Newton, Winthrop, Roslindale, Fall River, New Bedford, Lawrence, Brockton, Lowell, Quincy, these and numerous other towns and some sections of Boston have felt the impulse of fresh life made evident by changes in the distribution of population.

Perhaps the most dramatic instance of the influence of population changes on the upbuilding of parishes is St. Andrew's, New Bedford, which has grown in ten years from nothing to a vigorous mission of nearly 400 communicants, with an average Sunday morning attendance of over 250, which uncomfortably crowds its present quarters and which will undoubtedly increase still further when added facilities have been provided. The Rev. Henry E. Edenborg is the priest-in-charge.

Naval Receptions—The Sorority of Trinity church, Boston, gave a pleasant reception and dance recently, in Trinity house, for twenty young naval men from the Radio School at Cambridge. Music was furnished by members of the Navy Yard Band. The young men present came from Texas, Oregon, Missouri and Pennsylvania.

The Men's Club of Trinity church gave a dinner to fifty naval men on the evening of January 21. After the dinner there was a reception with music and dancing.

Consolidation of Services—The coal shortage has sent several of our parishes into their parish-houses for services until the stringency is past. Bishop Lawrence has written all parish priests suggesting the possibility of community use of one church building in rotation by several congregations of various religious bodies. Nothing definite along this line apears to have been arranged as yet, but several of our parishes that are closely contiguous are arranging to worship together for the present. Christ church and the Church of the Ascension, Waltham, begin united services in Christ church the first of February and the Church of the Redeemer and St. Matthew's church, South Boston, are combining in the Church of the Redeemer every Sunday. Suggestions of this sort have been heard regarding Trinity and Emmanuel, Boston, whose church buildings are but a few moments' walk apart, but nothing definite appears to have been arranged as yet. St. James' and St. John's, Roxbury, are considering the combining of their Sunday afternoon Evensong in St. James' church.

MINNEAPOLIS

Church Club Meeting—"Many of the American people are learning the lessons assigned to the world by the year 1917, others are trusting that the day of recitation will never come and there are many who have still to learn that the lessons have been assigned." As the speaker of the evening at the annual meeting of the Church Club of Minnesota, President Marion LeRoy Burton of the University of Minnesota told the members of the club that the year 1917 had assigned to the world the lessons of thrift, giving, loyalty and the greater problem to be solved, the problem of good and evil as exemplified in the struggle between democracy and autocracy. In concluding his address Dr. Burton paid a warm tribute to his country when he said that with him America had kept her promise that every boy should have a chance; for back in the 80's his father died and his mother was left penniless and he himself sold papers on the streets of Minneapolis for a living and gathered wood from the roadside to keep his mother and himself from freezing.

Bishop Remington's Consecration—In St. Paul's church, Minneapolis, on January 10, the Rev. William Procter Remington was consecrated Bishop Suffragan of the Missionary District of South Dakota. Assisting the presiding bishop in the service and in the laying on of hands were the Bishops of Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Michigan, Eastern Oklahoma, and the Coadjutor Bishop of Colorado. The sermon was preached by the Bishop of Michigan and the attending presbyters were the Rev. James E. Freeman of St. Mark's church, Minneapolis, and the Rev. Edward M. Cross of the Church of St. John the Evangelist, St. Paul. The testimonials, etc., were read by Bishop Thurston, the Rev. George S. Keller, Dean Pinkham and Mr. G. B. Lyon.

Some of the striking things Bishop Williams said in his sermon on the text in St. Mark 10:42-45 were: "Jesus here enunciates the fundamental principle and the essential ideal of all true democracy. All real authority comes from above. But even the will of God does not impose itself upon men by irresistible grace. As Prince Metternich said, 'You can do everything with bayonets except sit on them'. To my mind the kingdom of God is, as Bishop Gore has so well defined it, 'all human society regenerated until it shall be according to the will of God'.

"Jesus calmly disregarded and set aside the rules and precepts of ecclesiastical observances. He served men's needs. And only the Church that serves men as Jesus served them can win men as Jesus won them.

"The only apostolic succession the world will recognize to-day is the apostolic succession that succeeds.

"Look at our General Convention. Where is there in it any representation of the toilers? Is it not wholly made up of representatives of the class called capitalistic"?

The Y. M. C. A. and Our Chaplain

THE religious director of the Y. M. C. A. in one of the cantonments writes about the voluntary chaplain who has been appointed by the War Commission: "I want to thank you for sending us your representative. I consider him an ideal man for the place. We are more accustomed to hear of our men only when they are subject to criticism, but I appreciate the work of your chaplain so much that I deem it a privilege to remind you of our joy in working with a man of his strength, breadth and vision."

Good Work—"In the last two months I have presented six or seven people for baptism, built up a Sunday school, and you see the church full this afternoon", said a brick mason recently who has a lay reader's license and is in charge, under one of the clergy of Minneapolis, of a new mission at the edge of the city.

FREDERICK D. TYNER.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

New Hampshire Ordination—The Rev. Wm. E. Soule of Exeter was ordained priest at Christ church, Exeter, on the Feast of the Epiphany, by Bishop Parker. The Rev. Victor M. Houghton, rector of Christ church, presented the candidate and the Bishop preached the sermon. Mr. Soule will live in Exeter, and will have charge of the Church of the Redeemer, Rochester, and the rural work in forty-five towns in that part of New Hampshire.

Service Record—St. Paul's church, Concord, has established for itself a notable record for men in the service. On Sunday, January 13, the Bishop, assisted by the vice-rector of St. Paul's, Rev. W. Stanley Emery, dedicated a service flag with one hundred stars, representing St. Paul's, the mother church, and the chapels in different parts of Concord, which owe their origin to St. Paul's. The different congregations of the Church in Concord joined in the service.

BUFFALO

Bishop Burleson in Town—Bishop Burleson was in town for three days, speaking before different parishes and groups about his work in South Dakota. We do not see any difference in him since he—to quote his own pleasantry—"descended from the post of secretary to the obscurity of the Episcopate". He was always full of missions and full of love for the Indians, and his message was filled with both. It was great fun for us "Intermediates" (who are neither numerous nor influential in this part of the world) to be Bishop Burleson's hosts and to be granted permission to make his other engagements. We graciously lent him to big parishes, for Sunday services, and to Little Juniors and to the Woman's Auxiliary—and all the time we "swelled wisibly". Our drawing-room meeting, at Mrs. Rochesters, was an altogether charming gathering the atmosphere helping mightily to make the occasion helpful to the girls and leaders.

Gifts From Late Bishop's Wife—When Mrs. Walker left the See House to go to her new home on Linwood avenue she presented all the appointments from the late Bishop's private chapel to the Indian mission at Cattaraugus—a most loving and lovely thing to do, as Bishop Walker was very fond of his Indian people and they were devoted to him. They will treasure this gift with great affection and thankfulness and use it reverently.

Brotherhood Chapter Established—At a rousing meeting of men in St. Philip's parish, a few weeks ago, when one hundred and fifty sat down to supper, a Chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew was established under most encouraging conditions. The rector, the Rev. Robert Bennett, is doing fine work among his own people. The parish is sixty years old and—"Tell it not in Gath"!—someone said during the evening that it was the first time in all those years when they had been visited by a body of their white fellow-Churchmen. If this be so, at least they were not resentful, for they made their guests most welcome and happy. All who are familiar with the Parish of St. Philip's prophesy good things under the present active and earnest rector.

The Feast of Lights—The Juniors of the Buffalo District presented a charming celebration of the Feast of Lights in the Church of the Ascension on Saturday afternoon, the 5th, when the Wise Men brought their gifts and they and a full choir chant the sweet old carol, "Star of Wonder", while all the lights were lowered except the candles on the altar.

Bishop Burleson made an address, most happily pointing out the beauty of the gifts of the Wise Men and the gifts of little children and the gifts of all who love our Blessed Master and long to honor and serve him. His illustrations from the touching generosity of the Indians were listened to with eagerness by the many children gathered in the church, and—we are sure—as much laid to heart by their elders.

Every one in the church went forward with gifts of money or offerings for the box—sent by the Juniors at midwinter—and each received a candle, lighted from that of one of the Wise Men, and then the choir, Rector, Bishop, Wise Men and all the congregation formed in procession, with the twinkling lights, and repaired to the guild room, where the wee people had another sort of small feast. The whole service was extremely pretty and fitting.

PROVIDENCE

War Fund—The campaign of raising its diocesan apportionment of $15,000 for the War Commission was inaugurated in Rhode Island on January 10 by the Churchmen's Club at its regular dinner in the Turks Head Club. Bishop Perry urged the need of providing for the spiritual as well as the material needs of our men in service. The Rev. Philemon F. Sturges of Grace church, Providence, narrated his experience as voluntary chaplain for several weeks at Camp Devens, Massachusetts. The president, Mr. William A. Viall, laid upon the members of the club their responsibility to work for the War Commission in their parishes.

The large new organ at St. Stephen's church, Providence, was formally dedicated by Bishop Perry at a special service on Sunday afternoon, January 13, before a congregation which filled the church. The rector, the Rev. George McC. Fiske, D.D., officiated, assisted by his curates, the Rev. C. E. Jones and the Rev. C. J. Harriman. Bishop Perry in his sermon declared that the history of St. Stephen's church was written in music.

Memorial to Professor Packard—A bronze tablet in memory of the late Professor Packard of Brown University was unveiled at St. Martin's church, Providence, on Sunday morning, January 13. Prof. Francis G. Allinson made an address, and the rector, the Rev. Arthur L. Washburn, read dedicatory prayers. The tablet is placed on the north wall of the nave, and is the gift of the faculty of Brown University. It bears the inscription: "In memoriam, Alpheus Spring Packard, M.D., Ph.D., LL.D., 1839-1905. Professor of Zoology and Geology in Brown University from 1878 to 1905. A member of the vestry of this parish from 1899 until his death. A scientist whose world-wide reputation added fame to his university. A devoted Christian, whose gentle humility and kindly courtesy made him ever an example of Godly life. This tablet is placed by his colleagues of the University faculty." J. M. HOBBS.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Church Unity in Clerical Club—The Clerical Club of Syracuse, with two bishops and thirty priests in its membership, is holding a series of meetings of a kind valuable in the way of preparation for the World Conference on Faith and Order. The program includes addresses on the general topic of what the various Christian Communions can contribute towards Church unity. The addresses deal, among other things, with the origin, history and doctrine of the respective Communions, the speaker being asked to bring out the special contribution which each religious body can make to that great body of truth which reunited Christendom can hold. The addresses are being delivered by leading clergymen of the different Communions, and specially by representatives of the Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist, and Universalist churches. It is expected also that a clergyman of the Lutheran and Congregational churches will be asked to contribute. The last address will be made by Bishop Fiske and will deal with what the Episcopal Church can contribute to this larger unity. After each address a friendly discussion follows, with the speaker of the day ready to answer questions.

Clerical Changes in the Diocese—The Rev. Wilson E. Tanner, who has been rector of St. Andrews church, New Berlin, has accepted the rectorship of Trinity Memorial church, Binghamton, made vacant by the recent appointment of the Rev. Dr. Hegeman to be Archdeacon of the diocese. The Rev. Karl G. Heyne has resigned his work as missionary at Oriskany Falls, Augusta, Holland Patent and Trenton to become assistant minister at Zion church, Rome. The Rev. William J. Willson has resigned the charge of Christ church, Sacket Harbor, to become rector of St. Mark's church, Clark Mills. The Rev. George T. Gruman, until now curate of Christ church, Binghamton, has accepted a call to become rector of All Saints' church, Fulton, succeeding the Rev. Minor J. Peters, who resigned on account of illness. The Rev. George M. Brewin of Western Michigan has been transferred to this diocese and is to be rector of the Church of the Evangelists, Oswego. The Rev. Messrs. A. L. Byron-Curtis and L. A. Davison, who have for a time been nonparochial and have engaged in other duties, are again to assume pastoral work. The first-named is to have charge of Christ Church, Sacket Harbor, and the latter is to work in Trinity church, Camden, New York.

WALTER E. JONES.

GRAND RAPIDS

Christmas Service — The children's Christmas service at Grace church was an unusual one, and took the form of a reverent interpretation of the story of the advent of the Christ-child. The offering of the Church School presented to the Christ-child by one of the Wise Men was a very large one for the children to give. Fifty dollars went to the suffering Armenians, and $35 was given as an Advent offering. The sacred interpretation of the Advent was written by Dean Bell, and published by either the Social Service Commission or the Religious Education Commission. It made a great impression on the children of the school, sinking deeply into their hearts, and eradicating in some degree the modern impression that St. Santa is the moving spirit of Christmas. Then the children visited the various hospitals, hotels and homes, and also the homes of poor families in the city, distributing gifts. At the Blodgett Home for Children warm bootees for the babies and stockings for the older boys and girls were given. The Junior Bible Class of the school went to the Old Ladies' Home and cheered the old people by their Christmas songs and hymns, and the rector spoke to them of the Christmas story. At the Golden Rule Hospital one class of young people gave oranges and gifts to the children on the upper floor, and another provided for those on the first floor of the hospital. The choir went caroling, visiting the hospitals and shut-ins, who could not otherwise have shared in the Christmas singing. Before they went about to sing their carols they joined in the services about the Municipal Christmas tree in a downtown park, under the leadership of the organist and choirmaster, Mr. Verne R. Stilwell. No presents were given or received among the members of the school, but they learned the beautiful lesson that it is more blessed to give than to receive. During the last few weeks the Grace church members of the D. A. R. have been making a set of flags of all the Allied Nations, and they are now hung in the church as decorations, and will remain there until the end of the war.

Sunday School Rally—On January 13 the Union Epiphany Rally of the Sunday schools of the Church in Grand Rapids was held. All the Sunday schools in the diocese were invited to take part in this missionary rally and Lenten Mite Box Offering Drive. This will culminate in the rally on the Sunday after Easter, when all the Sunday schools of the diocese will present their offerings at St. Mark's pro-cathedral in this city.

TEXAS

Message to the Diocese—In a recent message from the Bishop to the diocese published in the diocesan paper Bishop Kinsolving says: "The Church's Place is at the Front! The Church cannot afford to allow the adversary the least occasion of gainsaying in these days of stress and strain by accusing her of being without vital interest and the spirit of leadership when the whole civilized world is engaged in a life and death grapple. When fighting an enemy who apparently recognizes no laws, human nor divine, and who sings Te Deums over the maiming and slaughter of innocent women and children, to say that the Church has no serious mission or voice in such a crisis is equivalent to degrading our religion into a decadent cult formed by a 'gentle dreamer' and of little value in a matter-of-fact world."

LONG ISLAND

Dr. Melish—The congregation of Holy Trinity church, Brooklyn, are rejoicing at the return of their rector, the Rev. John Howard Melish, who has made an almost complete recovery from the effect of a fall from an elevated station many months ago.

Each member received an invitation to join with him in a Corporate Communion on the first Sunday of the New Year and, it is needless to say, nearly all took advantage of it.

Keep the Home Fires Burning—Mr. Thomas, field secretary of social service in Brooklyn, speaking at the Woman's Auxiliary meeting, said if he were preaching he would take for his text, "Keep the Home Fires Burning". The Red Cross has taken nearly all his workers; he wants women who will give two hours once or twice a week, to read, to talk, to help poor souls in the hospitals, some of whom know nothing of Christ. Six hospitals need attention, and eighty per cent. of the people in them are without spiritual care.

A Choir Prepared—St. Bartholomew's parish, Brooklyn, received a lesson on meeting an emergency, when in the middle of a largely advertised carol service, held on the evening of Epiphany Sunday, the organ stopped, and absolutely refused to be heard.

It was in the first verse of the first carol, "See, Amid the Winter Snow", that this occurred. Were those boys annoyed or nonplused? Not at all; on they sang like so many angels, and went through the whole seven carols, without even seeming to see the funny side of it, as so many of their elders, who could not control their faces, did. Truly, as their rector, the Rev. Frank M. Townley, said from the chancel: "Soldiers and sailors have to be prepared to meet emergencies; now, we know choir boys can be also." He is to be congratulated on having a choir composed of real heroes as well as real musicians.

Story of Morganton Mission—The Rev. George Hilton of Morganton, North Carolina, was the speaker at the January meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary. He described the colored work, undertaken in 1895, when the Rev. Mr. Satterlee went to Morganton, and how it had grown under Father McDuffy, a colored priest. He feels that he is not able to do the work justice, as there is too much for one man to do, with the cotton mill people, the mountain people and the colored work. He asked for help for St. Stephen's, which needs an assistant, and told of his own bitter disappointment when having $60 a month promised for this he was not able to get a man. On finally succeeding, the promised money was withdrawn. The mountain people, he said, are realizing what they have missed and are now leaving their homes in the mountains so that their children may go to school.

New Rector for Glen Cove—The Rev. James S. Holland of Yonkers, twin brother of the Rev. T. Bond Holland, M.D., of St. John's church, Brooklyn, has accepted a call to St. Paul's, Glen Cove, and will take charge February 1.

"The Calling of St. Matthew"—A beautiful new chancel window is soon to be placed in St. Matthew's church, Brooklyn, of which the Rev. Dr. Frederic W. Norris is rector. "The Calling of St. Matthew" is the subject of this memorial, which has been presented to the Church by Mrs. Mortimer Leonard and Mrs. Howard Sayre in memory of their parents and sister.

Dr. Kennedy Resigns—The Rev. John D. Kennedy has resigned from the Church of St. Mark, Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn, where he has been rector for twenty-seven years.

English Church News

Protests Against Dr. Henson's Appointment—The Bishop-designate of Hereford does not lack partisans. Broad churchmen like Dean Beeching, Dean of Norwich, and Professor Sanday, and the Suffragan Bishop of Jarrow (Dr. Quirk) have all written to the Times approving the appointment. It is only fair to mention this. No great weight can be attached to the letters of the typical Times correspondent, of which there have been several. One feels that such letters are simply an expression of anti-ecclesiasticism: the writers approve of Dr. Henson because he is so loose in his churchmanship, they have not fairly considered whether he is the best man available for Hereford diocese. It is simply a question of giving a brilliant man his natural reward. It is against this spirit that the protests are being loudly raised.

It is perhaps a pity that the chief spokesman should be Lord Halifax. It gives the impression that the cleavage lies only between the English Church Union and the rest of the nation. Statesmen, and bishops who are out of sympathy with the Union, will have no hesitation in flouting it. The body of Oxford clergy who met together and framed a protest will be disregarded with contempt. The people entitled to be heard are the clergy and faithful laity of Hereford. They are at present silent, but the silence is itself significant. Even the Dean and Chapter, who, considering that they are mostly the creation of the late Bishop, and the very reverse of "ecclesiastical", ought to be rushing in to praise the selection, have said nothing.

Attitude of the Church Press on Dr. Henson—The Church Press is not as a rule given to being critical as regards Crown appointments. Crown patronage has been on the whole no worse than private patronage, though both are far from being ideal, and our Church papers generally hope for the best, even if the nominee is not of their own school of thought. So it may be assumed that the condemnation of the Church Times, the Guardian, and the Challenge is significant of more than a disapproval of theological views. Even the Church Family Newspaper, the organ of Broad Churchmanship, is not very enthusiastic. It has no doubt that the great majority of churchpeople will welcome the appointment, and speaks of Dr. Henson's "superb debating skill". The Church Times devotes two leading articles to the subject, and calls for a wholesale reform of the method of choosing bishops. Its correspondents are agreed that this calm disregard of the wishes of churchpeople, and of the needs of Hereford, have brought Disestablishment very much nearer. Indeed, one curious result has been that the "Church Defense Committee" has come in for strong criticism. The Church Establishment "is not worth defending". The Guardian does not take the B. C. U. point of view. Its chief objection to Dr. Henson is his instability. A man may change his opinions, of course, but Dr. Henson's have "changed full compass in the course of his rather kaleidoscopic career". And it is "nothing less than a misfortune that Hereford should exchange one unsympathetic bishop for another". And the Guardian also calls for reform in the manner of appointing bishops. The Challenge would probably have been more favorable if Dr. Henson had not taken it upon himself to oppose the movement for Church Reform. He is for the Establishment, and Parliamentary control of the Church. Such Erastianism today is really hopeless, and is only supported by the laymen who want "to keep the parsons in order". The Churchman who cares for his Church repudiates it altogether.

International Friendship Through the Churches—There are at least some who believe that spirit rather than matter is to rule in future. They call themselves a "World Alliance for promoting international friendship through the Churches". It is a sufficiently formidable title, and the object of the alliance is equally formidable. Some very good names are to be found in it: the Bishop of Peterboro' (Dr. Woods) presided at a recent meeting, and he was supported by Dean Inge of St. Paul's, Dr. Scott Lidgett, the Dean of Worcester (Dr. Moore Ede) and the Warden of Keble, Oxford (Dr. Lock). Serious men, all of them, and much respected in the Church. They were not afraid to call for reconciliation and brotherhood as the basis of a lasting peace, for the provision of some international machinery for administering justice and conciliating differences and for the necessity of a "common waiting on God to ascertain His Will", so that all public sentiment and action should reflect the mind of Christ. It is rather unfortunate that the meeting was not fully reported. The daily press seized on some characteristic expressions of Dean Inge, and made great play with them, ignoring the great objects of the meeting. The Dean certainly traveled beyond the bounds of the resolution which he moved, by describing the Germans as the "best governed people in the world". We are by comparison inefficient, and might as well make peace now, because Prussian militarism can never be defeated by its inefficient enemies. It is a great pity he said this, as of course, it is at once retorted that the German Government, like others, can only be judged by its fruits, which are horrible enough. The Dean's opinion has been repudiated by his brethren of the Chapter of St. Paul's, and a hopeful movement for the spreading of a Christian solution of the world's difficulties has been compromised.

Christian Reunion—Nothing further has been heard of the proposal to find some method of uniting the Church with the Wesleyans, but the longing for reunion is as great as ever. It has been seriously proposed that there should be a new Savoy Conference. Bishop Welldon, Dean of Manchester, writes sympathetically, but points out that Episcopacy is the great obstacle. To surrender Episcopal Ordination he says, would rend the Church of England in twain. He reviews the principal proposals — conditional reordination and other—which have been made, and asks non-conformists to state what they could accept. Some sympathetic replies have been given, mostly rather vague, but on the whole promising.

Letters to the Editor

Save the Church From Prussianization

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

Permit appreciation of the letters to the Editor column in your splendid weekly. The letter of Dr. Drown anent Bishop Jones is so sane, so careful and so convincing that all who are interested in saving our Church and our country from the spirit of Prussianization that the "excited condition of public opinion" is shielding must sincerely hope that the Commission will either rescind its action or else make full answer to the pertinent questions that Dr. Drown's letter opens up.

Oppose Bishop Jones Under Cloak of Patriotism

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

There is a side to the situation in Utah which has been given little if any publicity. In fairness to Bishop Jones I think that his clergy should let it be known that he has proved a fair and efficient and conscientious Bishop of this district. It is only in his attitude toward the War that there has been found anything substantial to criticise. Up to the time of our declaration of war he was a most useful and devoted citizen. His loyalty to his country has not changed. When we changed our methods from those of peace to those of war he refused to follow our lead, convinced that all was is unchristian and that its methods defeat its own great purpose. In his public stand against war he is still doing what he considers best for his country and for the world. Not even his enemies seem to question his moral integrity, nor his orthodoxy on all other points, nor that he is standing solely by his conscience. It is in regard to war alone that he is regarded as a heretic. And therefore I can see no valid reason why his clergy, who differ perhaps totally from him in this regard only, should not be willing to accept his able and consecrated leadership in the other affairs of the Church. For he has never, by word of act, sought to force his war views upon his people, nor restrain the utterances of those who differed from him. We must acknowledge that he has, in every way, been a fair opponent, and wonderfully magnanimous toward those who have injured him in unfair ways because of his public stand.

All but three of his clergy signed, last Spring, a statement protesting against any curtailment of the right of the Bishop of Utah to speak on public matters according to his conscience and as a Bishop of the Church. It was not unreasonable to suppose that much the same interests that opposed Bishop Spalding were now trying to silence Bishop Jones under the hue and cry of patriotism. Perhaps it was necessary to take some drastic action in order to convince the country of the patriotism of the Episcopal Church in Utah and elsewhere. But to remove the right and responsibility from the clergy and bishops of speaking according to their Christian conscience would render the Church to that extent contemptible.

I therefore trust that the House of Bishops will not accept the resignation of the Bishop of Utah. To do so would establish a precedent which would not only injure the future of our Church work in Utah, but also injure the position and influence of the office of bishop throughout our Church. There seem to be other legitimate courses open. One would be to prove him guilty of something for which he should be deposed from all office and leadership in the Church. Or else clear him on the ground that the charges are not proven or are not valid grounds for such procedure. Or transfer him in an honorable way to some other jurisdiction on the ground that elsewhere there is greater opportunity for his work in the Church. Because I know him to be as sincere a Christian as one can find, I believe the Church ought to adopt the second and possibly also the third of these suggestions.

"The Episcopate Has Discredited Itself"

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

The report of the special commission appointed by the House of Bishops to investigate and hear testimony in the matter of Bishop Jones has brought out and emphasized the fact that there is at least one man in the American Episcopate who holds his conscience above Episcopal jurisdiction.

The logic of the findings of the special commission is that in the opinion of his brother bishops the stand taken by Bishop Jones with regard to the War is inopportune and out of harmony with the excited state of public feeling and sentiment in this Nation at this time, and that therefore he must be deposed from his Episcopal jurisdiction, though not from his Episcopal office.

Seldom has an Episcopate, by its own deliberate action, discredited itself more seriously before the bar of history.

I suppose it is necessary for me to declare that I do not sympathize with Bishop Jones in his attitude with regard to the war; but his firm, modest and manly Christian bearing throughout these scandalous proceedings challenges the admiration of all fair-minded men. G. MONROE ROYCE.

New Windsor-on-the-Hudson, New York.

"Not for Three Men to Decide"

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

I regret the action taken by the Commission of Bishops re Bishop Jones. They admit that "In principle the Bishop of Utah seems to be at one with this Church and with the American Government", and that "It is in method only that he differs". He is charged with no doctrinal or ecclesiastical offense. His error is in his method of expressing his personal and individual opinion. His offence is a political one. Then why not let the political authority, if it sees fit, deal with him as a citizen, as any individual? If the State or National Government can stand his offence, the Church ought to be able to. One recalls the outspoken criticism of the Boer war by the Bishop of Hereford and other leaders in the Church in England. Were they asked to resign? When King Jehoiakim of Judah was angered at the preaching of Jeremiah, he burnt his sermon in the fire, and when the prophet persisted in his appeal for righteousness as he personally understood it, he was dropped into a deep well and later on imprisoned. So it has ever been with prophets or protestors against the principles or methods of the powers that be. Personally, I think Bishop Jones to have been unwise in some of the things he has said, and do not agree with him in his position that no Christian can ever engage in war, but that question, it seems to me, is not for any Church commission of only three men to decide.

Where is the Commission, or the Church, going to stop? Other influential members of our Church were also enroled in the pacifist organization of which Bishop Jones was accused of being a member.

The action of the Commission was apparently taken chiefly by reason of the "excited condition of public opinion". Public opinion frequently gets excited, as when it lynches negroes, condemned or uncondemned by a jury. But public opinion does not always stay excited, and it would seem as if some other advice might better have been given to a Bishop of the Church. Not even this war will last forever. Even the militarists and anti-socialists of Utah might survive an Episcopal interregnum for a few months. GEORGE L. PAINE.

New Haven, Connecticut.

Questions Mr. Chapman

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

Somebody ought to reply to Mr. Chapman's article in THE CHURCHMAN, on "Faith and the War". Perhaps you will allow me to do so.

I believe that in this War our soldiers and sailors are fighting for everything that makes life worth living. They are fighting for freedom and righteousness and the Gospel of Jesus and the establishment of the will of God. They are fighting, as it is their duty to do so, for Christian civilization. They are worthy followers of Jesus, who said, "Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friends."

But it is a very dreadful thing that these young men should have to be killed in the glory of their youth. When Mr. Chapman says, "To what better use could these young heroes . . . have been put? It was for this they existed", the spirit of Nietzsche must look down (or up) from its present abode with warm approval. It was precisely this sort of talk in Germany that brought on this war, and whenever it appears in this country it is the duty of all good men to hit it hard. It is a sad thing that Germany forced us to fight, for war is at best a necessary evil. The nineteenth century was an era of happiness, and prosperity and peace and good will to men. It was not a materialistic age, and it is not materialistic to hope for a return of its blessings. Mr. Chapman says, "Once dwell upon horror and indulge in analysis, as Macbeth did, and you confuse the conscience", but as I remember the play, it was not the conscience of Macbeth but the conscience of Lady Macbeth (who did not indulge in analysis) that was confused and darkened. Mr. Chapman says, "To count the cost and dwell upon the life and property sacrificed in heroic action is to doubt the value of truth". "Count the cost" is a Biblical phrase. In Luke XIV a certain very great Teacher advised men before building a town or going to war of becoming His disciples to "count the cost". Why is it to doubt the value of truth to count the cost? Mr. Chapman says that we have "muddled the issue by commiseration", and that "pathos is the enemy of courage". I wish feudal Scotland could send back to us the Douglas to tell what he thinks of this theory that a man cannot be "tender and true". I know one or two mighty kind-hearted soldiers and sailors that will be interested to learn that bravery and sympathy are inconsistent.

Mr. Chapman "cannot see that Christ valued his own life or that of others except as a means of spreading the truth, which he taught. For this reason he heals the sick", but St. Mark (I, 41) says that when the sick man asked for aid "Jesus, moved with compassion, put forth his hand and touched him". Mr. Chapman says, "Death is a trifle". Jesus died for us. Many are dying for us now. Death is not a trifle. We are the recipients of rich gifts, which ought to inspire us to hasten the time when men shall open their hearts to God and to His Gospel, "and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes".

A Prayer for Absent Ones

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

On page 574 of THE CHURCHMAN for November 3, 1917, is a letter about "A Prayer for Absent Ones". I first heard the prayer at Delafield (near Nashotah), Wisconsin, in 1867. It was used at the close of the weekly Lenten services, which were held in the evening in the parish schoolhouse. A year later, in California, I heard it daily in the family of a clergyman. Both men who used the prayer were graduates of Nashotah. About that time, in 1868 I think, I saw a current catalogue of the Nashotah Theological Seminary and found there the printed prayer, said to have been written by Bishop White for the use of the seminary. There was also a picture of Bishop White Hall, one of the seminary buildings which had recently been completed.

I learned later that our beloved Bishop Kemper had been associated with Bishop White in Philadelphia before going to what was then the Northwestern Territory.

Pacifists and Jerusalem

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

This discussion anent the position of Bishop Jones and the quasi defence of that position by the Rev. Dr. Edward S. Drown in the current issue of THE CHURCHMAN is all very well in its way in the abstract; but I am moved to remark that while the pacifist bishop et al. are spending their time and brains in defending their position as to the war being an "unchristian thing" and necessary in condemnation of the war we are in and of the young men who, like the "Son of God, go forth to war", I say, while they are arguing why war should not be and is "incompatible with Christian principles", the British army under the splendid leadership of Allenby, has entered Jerusalem, the ancient holy city, rid it of the unspeakables who robbed its sacred shrines to send immense treasure to Berlin, and placed the city of wonderful history and precious memories under the power and administration and protection of the most appropriate nation on the earth to have and to hold and defend it, we trust forever.

According to these theories about peace, the Turk and the Ottoman would still possess Jerusalem. Now, many of us believe that there is no question now worth the discussion. We should give loyal support to the Government at Washington and the army and the navy. REGINALD R. PARKER.

A Soldier of Christ

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

I have learned through the Church press of the death of the Rev. Rodney Rush Swope, D.D., late rector of All Souls' parish, Biltmore, Missionary District of Asheville. I desire, as a humble admirer and friend, to bear testimony to the loss sustained by the district and the American Church in Dr. Swope's death. His splendid executive ability, his earnest missionary spirit, his devoted Christian sympathy for nearly twenty years have done far more for work among the good people of Western North Carolina than those unfamiliar with his activities may ever know. A true soldier of Jesus Christ has gone to Paradise, and I am confident that there, with his Master, this noble Christian personality is at work for the good of others. Such men as Dr. Swope surely can never die.

A Correction

In the letter from the Rev. David L. Fleming, chaplain Second Cavalry, Fort Ethan Allen, Vermont, published in THE CHURCHMAN December 22, the word "influence" in the last line should have read "emergency", as follows:

"Let us be fair, loyal—and close up ranks for the vast emergency that is upon us".

A Chaplain's Appeal

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

The blind poet realized the awfulness of knowing of the world's activities, yet not being able to participate in them, and he sought solace in the philosophy, "He also serves who only stands and waits".

Marking time in mid-Pacific is probably the hardest duty borne by American soldiers. Men, though they are in Hawaii, the Paradise of the Pacfic, find the duty of waiting irksome and trying when they realize that their fellows are in France or are preparing to go there.

There are vast movements on foot throughout the nation to assist in that all important work in the Army represented by the chaplain. But the garrison of Oahu, thousands upon thousands of men, are being little benefited by these activities. Yet there is probably no other garrison that has such needs. It remains with chaplains of Hawaii to soothe the restless spirits and to teach our men that "they also serve who stand and wait". The chaplains urge the co-operation of those who are inclined to assist in this work.

We need ten thousand dollars to complete a post gymnasium at Schofield Barracks. This is a vital need. Smaller but very vital is the need for writing material. As little as twenty-five dollars a month would meet this demand. Are there not twelve people who will pledge the necessary funds for the coming year?

We have a great demand for Victrola records, popular songs, games of chess, checkers, dominoes, parchesi, jig-saws, etc. When you have finished your newspapers and magazines mail them to the undersigned and he will see to it that they are placed in the eager hands of our men who are confined in our hospitals, recruit camps and guard house.

Contributions will be placed to meet vital demands if sent to Chaplain H. L. Winter, First U. S. Infantry, Schofield Barracks, Oahu, Hawaii.

Shortening the Communion Service

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

May I be permitted to answer the communication of the Rev. Howard Key Bartow in your issue of December 29 in re the Eucharistic service in military camps? He advocates intinction for two reasons, (a) to avoid the spread of infectious diseases, and (b) to shorten the service.

With the first of these reasons I have nothing to say, except that I refuse to believe that disease of any kind has ever been spread from the chalice, and challenge anyone to produce a single instance where it can be proved that a communicant was infected in that way. In regard to his second reason, however, I would like to ask how much time is saved by this mutilation? I venture to say that in the case he cites of administering to twenty-five persons, not two minutes, five at the very outside, would be saved. But I cannot understand how he can offer any such plea in recommending a change from the established order, as the following: "A military religious service ought to be bright, short, definite and clear-cut." He is speaking entirely of the Eucharistic service, and when one considers that the Eucharist is a memorial of the death and passion of our dear Lord Christ; a showing forth of His death till He come, I cannot bring my mind to dwell upon it in such a sentimental and nonsensical way, as being "bright". It ought not to take much more than thirty minutes to celebrate and administer the Holy Communion to twenty-five persons; this is surely "short" enough in or out of camps. If the service itself is not "definite" or "clear-cut", how intinction is to make it so is a mystery to me.

I feel very keenly that your correspondent has not made good his point, and that a halt should be called in the mad rush for quick service and a "get-it-over-as-soon-as-possible" spirit, in the celebration of the Divine Liturgy.

Some War Books

THE HIGH CALL. By the Rev. Ernest M. Stires, D.D. New York: E. P. Dutton & Company. $1.50.

It is an art worth cultivating for the preacher to know how to select a topic which shall be striking without being sensational; and it is equally valuable for him, having chosen his theme, to be able to find a text which shall seem to have been made tc order for the occasion. No man can do that who does not know his Bible. In both of these respects, the gifted rector of St. Thomas' church of this city, judging by this volume of sermons, is a past master. In illustration of what I mean, note the following subjects with their several texts: Practical Patriotism; "Shall your brethren go to the war and shall ye sit here?" The Rediscovery of God and Humanity; "I saw a new heaven and a new earth." Hurry Up! "The King's business requires haste."

As to the discourses themselves, of course any series of deliverances addressed to such a congregation as that which attends St. Thomas' church, in a parish which, with its chapel, embraces more than 4,000 communicants, and whose interest and generosity toward every good work is surpassed by few, if any, of our churches in these United States—such a series would be of interest under any circumstances. That interest is greatly augmented, however, when the discourses are of such a character as those contained in this volume. They are spiritual, they are uplifting and they are timely. There is not a barrel sermon among them. They deal with the twentieth century. There is nothing to remind us of "the old oaken bucket, the iron-bound bucket, the moss covered bucket that"—for the last thirty years—"hung in the well".

It is interesting to note the announcement that all royalties from the sale of the book are to be devoted to the fund for equipping chaplains serving with the troops.

POLITICAL IDEALS. By Bertrand Russell. The Century Company. New York. 1917. Price, $1.00 net.

Perhaps no other of the writers that have been developed by the War is making a more important contribution to the stimulation and clarification of popular thought than the great Cambridge philosopher. Heretofore his books have appealed to the intellectual few capable of following his teaching in a new science. Since the outbreak of the War he has written for the people clear-sighted, sane explanations of the things many feel but most are too muddle-headed to understand. Political Ideals in the course of 172 delightfully written pages sets forth the things for which many are feeling out.

"The aim of politics should be to make the lives of individuals as good as possible," is the opening statement. "The best life is the one in which the creative impulses play the largest part and the possessive impulses the smallest. . . . What we shall desire for individuals is now clear: strong creative impulses, overpowering and absorbing the instinct of possession; reverence for others; respect for the fundamental creative impulse in ourselves. . . . Political and social institutions are to be judged by the good or harm they do to individuals. Do they encourage creativeness or possessiveness? Do they embody or promote a spirit of reverence between human beings? Do they preserve self-respect?" For the fulfilment of this aim, the author believes that our political ideal should be: "Autonomy within each politically important group and a neutral authority for deciding questions involving relations between groups", to apply alike within and without the Nation. This he believes is what we are fighting for on the industrial battlefields of England, France and the United States, as well as on the battlefields of Europe. His elaboration of his theme in his chapters on "Capitalism and the Wage System", "The Pitfalls of Socialism", "Individual Liberty and Public Control" and "National Independence and Internationalism" well reward the careful reader. THE MENACE OF PEACE. By George D. Herron. Kinnerley Co. New York. 1917. Price, $1.00.

"For the war to close and man to fail to see what it was about would be a supreme catastrophe". "The peace of pacifists would be unaccountably worse than any kind of war". "A compromise between contending belligerents would be a betrayal of the peoples of every nation". It is not love for mankind but the lack of it and the lack of spiritual brain and nerve "that evades judgment, avoids justice and seeks compromise and wishes a cessation now".

"The world has failed to stand where Christ stands". Prussianism's quest is for "an objective and material might and not for an inner and spiritual right". "Prussianism has debarred the German peoples from the liberty of a democracy and social initiative",—they are under the mastery of a doctrine that holds the State to be supermoral and that "the chief political sin is the sin of material weakness". Her philosophers abandoned Jesus Christ because His spirit is that of love and truth and brotherhood.

"Today Prussianism aggressively blocks the way of the world and her sword must be broken in the interests of the race and right", an automatic mass of humanity under military mastery for commercial and military purposes must be transformed and freed and the rest of the world must likewise redeem its soul and be protected.

"There are thousands of Germans who pray for Germany's defeat as her only hope of salvation." "We want that peace that is on the side of Christ." "We fight for the universal good that is in Christ." "Prussianism has made war on humanity." "God is not neutral"—"This war must be fought through." "It matters infinitely which side wins!" "Our choice is irrevocable and eternal."

George D. Herron has come back, with a vision and a message that shames slackers and supplants neutrality with constructive convictions. Many of us who enjoyed the brilliant utterances of Dr. Herron years ago, though we decidedly disagreed with some of his socialistic positions and interpretations of religion, will welcome this concise, earnest and rapid thought fire against the menaces of mankind converged in the world war. WAR. By Pierre Loti, translated by Marjorie Laurie. J. B. Lippincott Company. Philadelphia. 1917. Price, $1.25 net.

M. Julien Viaudi (Pierre Loti) is a captain in the French Naval Reserve. As such it was not given him to plunge at once into the conflict of the trenches. His letter to the Minister of Marine, written as early as August 18, 1914, bitterly bewailed this inaction, and begged the privilege of special service which should bring him into the heat of the battle. This letter quite characteristically opens the volume of sketches which Messrs. J. B. Lippincott and Company have just brought out in an excellent English translation. The author's visits to various parts of the Western Front, to ruined cathedral towns, to camp and hospital and cemetery, to the Alsace country, to the headquarters of the King of the Belgians, where he was sent on official business or where he traveled on some personal errand, provide the ground-work for these sketches. The point of view is eminently that of the artist-journalist, the onlooker, who sees the pathos and the heroism which are mere commonplace to the soldier, but misses the grime and the mud that looms up so much larger in the misery of the trenches. And yet, especially when writing of the men of the Naval Brigade, Captain Viaudi is one of the fighters, a soldier of France, part of the terrible defensive force that is pushing back the enemy from the desecrated provinces. All the time, of course, it is Pierre Loti who is writing, delicately sensitive to color and form and the little things that make up the beauty and the tragedy of life, self-conscious, gallant. Above all he is fiery in his denunciation of the Boche and in his invective against the "German Beast". He can see nothing good in the German nation, and nothing but hate and extermination as the rightful outcome of the War. M. J. H.

ALSACE-LORRAINE UNDER GERMAN RULE. By Charles Downer Hazen. Henry Holt and Co. New York. 1917. Price, $1.25.

Professor Hazen has done a notable piece of work. No subject is more pertinent to the present time than that of Alsace-Lorraine. The volume covers the period from the treaty of Frankfort to the opening of the war. His portraiture of the events during these feverish years is lucid and striking, leaving us convinced that no settlement or peace can be lasting and just which is not based upon the acknowledgment of the principle enunciated in the protest against annexation delivered in Bordeaux February, 1871: "Modern Europe cannot allow a people to be seized like a herd of cattle"; and a similar one made three years later in the Reichstag: "Citizens possessed of souls and of intelligence are not merchandise to be traded, therefore it is not lawful to make them the subject of a contract". And our own President's thrilling words in the Senate: "No right exists anywhere to hand peoples about from sovereignty as if there they were property". Professor Hazen's book deserves at the present crisis a wide reading. W. A. S.

LEST WE GROW HARD. By Edward F. Russell, M.A. Longmans, Green and Company. New York. 1917. 40 cents net.

A series of addresses and papers on spiritual subjects delivered by the writer during a period covering many years while the author was the chaplain of the Guild of St. Barnabas for Nurses. They all deal with the duties and problems which claim the attention of Christian nurses, "those trained servants of the sick", who need to keep "sympathy and pity fresh and faces heavenward, lest they grow hard". There are thirty discourses, ten on special subjects of a deeply spiritual character intimately associated with matters which come into the life of a nurse who is a devout Christian, causing doubt and sometimes perplexity as to duty and belief. Nothing just like this has been published for a long time.

THE COMING DEMOCRACY. By Hermann Fernau. E. P. Dutton and Company. New York. 1917. Price, $2.00 net.

Mr. Fernau is the author of "Because I am a German". It was in this book that he fastened on his own government the inescapable guilt of having brought on the war. He fled to Switzerland at the opening of the war and with his pen has been fighting the German policies ever since. Though written before many of the changes now occurring in Russia and in Italy, what he says has just as much force. His cry is "Onward to Democracy. This will and must tomorrow be the battle cry of Europe in general and of Germany in particular. Germany for the Germans".

He demands the abandonment of hereditary dynasties and the creation of democracies such as have been "possessed by the English, French, Americans and Swiss for the past 150 years". For such revelations as Mr. Fernau has made in this and his previous volume he is now the particular object of the Kaiser's government's wrath. Possession of his first volume is now punishable in Germany by death. R. P. K.

THE BOY'S BOOK OF SCOUTS. By Percy K. Fitzhugh. Thomas Y. Crowell Company. New York. 1917. Price, $1.25 net.

The boy who does not revel in stories of adventure is not a boy. He should put on dresses. Here is a book to rejoice the heart of full-blooded boys, whether they are "boy [illegible] Think of a real ten[illegible] a corner on a rainy [illegible] George Rogers [illegible]ot yet twenty-six [illegible]ly appearing "a tall man in buckskin" in the doorway of the little fort in which the British officers, all unmindful of any danger, were dancing with fair ladies, and announcing that "he was sorry to interrupt their festivities, but he had come to take the fort; adding that while he would be glad to see them continue their dancing, they must bear in mind they were dancing in honor of Virginia, and of the United States of America—not of Great Britain and King George". And he took it.

There are twenty chapters of such adventures, each chapter devoted to the story of one scout. Among them are such names as Davy Crockett and Kit Carson and Sam Houston and Daniel Boone and Buffalo Bill. The best of these stories is that they are all true. The boy, while being absorbed in interest, is being educated and inspired with a love for the land of his birth. Thus it is a patriot-making book.

A JOURNAL FROM OUR LEGATION IN BELGIUM. By Hugh Gibson, First Secretary, American Legation in Brussels. Doubleday, Page & Company. New York. 1917. Price, $2.50 net.

Another damning arraignment of the world's barbarians, from a source which cannot be disputed. Mr. Gibson, who, at the time of Germany's rape of Belgium, was the secretary of the American legation in Brussels, is able to speak authoritatively from first-hand information. This is consequently an official story of Belgium's tragedy. He was present and listened to King Albert's great speech of defiance, when Germany demanded that Belgium should be false to her treaty. He was in Louvain during the burning and pillaging of that historic city. He was in Brussels when the Germans entered, and was a personal witness to their unbelievable barbarities. He spent forty-eight hours arguing and pleading, and finally threatening, trying to save Miss Cavell from murder. This is a book which every American ought to read.

THE VOICE OF BELGIUM. Being the War Utterances of Cardinal Mercier. Burns & Oates. London. 1917. Price, 2 shillings and sixpence.

The thousands who have watched with deep admiration the intrepid leadership of Cardinal Mercier, his tender care for his destitute flock, his restrained yet fearless protests against the outrages inflicted by Von Bissing and the German Army of occupation, will welcome the opportunity to peruse at length his splendid war utterances. Beginning with that masterly letter on Patriotism and Endurance written to the people of Belgium and read in all parish churches on Christmas, 1914, and extending through his message Courage, My Brethren, sent out at Sexagesima, 1917, the war utterances cover 330 pages. The letter of the Belgian bishops to the cardinals and bishops of Germany in November, 1915, appealing to them to institute an investigation by a joint board of inquiry into the alleged outrages practised by Belgians against Germans and the protests of Cardinal Mercier against the deportations are already well known. Not so familiar yet far more significant are the pastoral letters written frequently to reassure his suffering, poverty-stricken, terrorized countrymen. Courage and dignity; order and, so far as was consistent with virtue and patriotism, patient submission to the German government; industry, economy, charity, above all faithful adherence to the teaching of the Church and faithful performance of all religious obligations, these are the notes that he sounds over and over again. The quiet, calm doctrinal teaching and spiritual interpretation is perhaps the thing that strikes the reader most forcibly, unless it be the utter absence of hate and recrimination that pervades every page. This absence of the hate that disfigures many another war utterance, is more than a mere passive submission to the German censors. One feels in every page the absolute superiority to this littleness, the disciplined calm, the spirit that has found its treasure eternal in the heavens. The Voice of Belgium is a great book and one that should help to restore the balance among those two groups of extremists in our own country, the fire-eating haters, and the pacifists.

PEACEFUL PENETRATION. By A. D. McLaren. E. P. Dutton and Co. New York. 1917. Price, $1.50.

Peaceful Penetration suggests the quiet creeping of a snake or the deft approach of the surgeon's needle or the advance of some good missionaries of religion or commerce in some foreign land. All these surmisings are correct, for the author gives a complete expose of the way the German government has in time of peace waged war on unsuspecting nations.

Radiating from Berlin, a network woven by German schools, churches, clubs, business houses, banks and other agencies had effected a system to strengthen Germany and cause disintegration among the friendly nations who offered Germans hospitality. For years Germany has been preparing to make the world unsafe for Democracy, and Mr. McLaren has gathered the facts by an exhaustive study throughout the British Empire. He lived in Germany for several years. He has documentary evidence in abundance, and the book is timely for the world needs this evidence, and convincing because Mr. McLaren had stated his conclusions before the War broke out and now gives them ample proof. We who would make the world safe for democracy and democracy safe for the world will find in this book an "X-ray" of the monster cancer traced root and branch. We must know where it radiates if we are to pull it out entire.

FOR FRANCE AND THE FAITH. By Alfred Eugene Casalis. Association Press. New York. 1917. Price, 60c net.

W. E. Bristol, the translator of this mosaic of letters home by a French soldier who died on the field of honor at the age of nineteen, in a foreword says: "They are published that those who read them will be strengthened in seeing how, while serving France, this young soldier wished also to serve Jesus Christ, and wearing the horizon blue uniform of the republic, pursued to the end his 'Marche à l'Etoile'." Dr. John R. Mott in an introduction remarks that "the English edition has helped many a soldier of Britain to live his life and fight his battles on higher levels. May these simple records of self-revelation, self-discipline and devotion help American young men to stand fast in the faith, to quit them like men and to be strong". The letters as a personal revelation of a young man's inner self as he passes through the fire that tries men's souls, in this little book, might well be selected as one of the priceless treasures of our abundant war literature. Our boys in the field and anxious mothers and fathers carrying the fight at home will find in these letters the quiet undercurrent of loyal faith and the invigorating thrill that accompanies the expression of such faith in a glorious service to the one great end—the "Marche à l' Etoile".

Domingo has voluntarily sought this annexation. It is a weak power, numbering probably less than one hundred and twenty thousand souls, and yet possessing one of the richest territories under the sun, capable of supporting a population of ten millions of people in luxury. The people of St. Domingo are not capable of maintaining themselves in their present condition, and must look for outside support. They crave protection of our free institutions and our laws, our progress and civilization. Shall we refuse them? The acquisition of St. Domingo is desirable because of its geographical position. It commands the entrance to the Caribbean Sea and the Isthmus transit of commerce; it possesses the richest soil, best and most capacious harbors, most salubrious climate, and the most valuable products of the forest, mine and soil of any of the West India Islands. In case of foreign war it will give us command of all the islands referred to, and thus prevent an enemy from ever again possessing himself of rendezvous upon our very coast.

"The acquisition of St. Domingo is an adherence to the Monroe Doctrine; it is a measure of national protection; it is asserting our just claim to a controlling influence over the great commercial traffic soon to flow from west to east by way of the Isthmus of Darien."

In view of the twenty-five millions we spent in 1917 to get the Danish Islands, and the many other deals we have had to put through to protect the Panama Canal, we can almost weep to think of the folly which prevailed over Grant's farsighted wisdom—but it is simply too big an "if" to stumble over.

Enough has been said I hope to make the reader realize that Mr. Wyllie, our missionary to the Dominican Republic, is going to a land of abundant memories, a land than which no other in the New World possesses for us more interest.

And this sending of a missionary has another distinguishing fact connected with it, for instead of its being a case of our sending out a man to gather sheep, in this case the sheep have rather sent out and gathered us. For there are in the Republic between five and ten thousand Church of England people who have been waiting for us these many years.

An explanation of this last statement calls for an explanation in the history of the decline of the British West Indies. There was a time when those little islands could profitably be used for sugar planting. Occupation and a day's wage there was for every one. Then came a series of events which rendered them valueless as plantations and the inhabitants had to emigrate. One of the events which put them in the economic discard was the rendering safe for commercial enterprise of the adjacent, more fertile and larger islands to the westward—the greater Antilles. Our new field of missionary adventure comes under this category since revolutionists are now as quiet as Columbus, thanks to the presence of Marines. Large planatations have been opened up, and to them thousands of Windward islanders have migrated and found an abundance of occupation.

Just a word about the presence of our Marines. It is merely a matter of benevolent protection. Some years ago there was an immediate danger that certain European countries would have to occupy the Republic in order to administer its finances and recover the rather large sum of money which had been loaned the Government. Though General Grant's annexation idea was foreign to the people in Washington, action was none the less imperative to prevent others taking steps which would have endangered the approach to the Panama Canal. And so we went in, and by treaty secured the right to administer their financial affairs and to direct their constabulary. The experience of ten years has proven that our act was in more than one way wise and just.

Some years ago the Bishop of Antigua had asked the American Church to care for the Church people who had left his diocese in search of work, and for several years we have been endeavoring to respond to the appeal. It is a great joy that in Mr. Wyllie we have at last found a man to whom the task can be cheerfully entrusted. He sailed from an Atlantic port, as we say nowadays, early in January, and the Church can confidently expect to hear of splendid developments in the near future. Let us pray that his efforts may result in converting that liability of the Caribbean into an asset in comparison to which fabled Ophir will seem small and trifling. Viva Española!

was wont to say that the best thing he had ever done for the diocese was to give his assistant to be its general missionary. Bishop Vinton came to recognize the unusual character and ability of the man, gave his strong individuality free rein, loyally supported him and his work, and between the two men there developed a strong friendship and attachment.

The work done by Archdeacon Sniffen and under his direction was the most evangelical work done in that part of the State comprised in the bounds of the diocese. A prominent physician in Berkshire recently said of the work, "I do not know of any work equal to it being done anywhere". First by horse and then by automobile he journeyed through districts remote from the centres, seeking Church families and those without any Church connection and ministering to them, baptizing children and preparing persons for confirmation. Connection made with families was maintained. Sponsors were found in strong parishes and a Diocesan Guild of Sponsors was formed. Records of visits were kept, and homes of people ministered to were marked on the large government maps. Mrs. Sniffen helped by keeping records and by correspondence. As the work grew beyond their reach students in the New York Deaconess Training School, on hearing an address by him on his work, volunteered to give up their vacations and work under him. When they returned to their studies in the Autumn, it was found necessary to engage one or more deaconesses to maintain the work.

Out of the ministrations of faithful women grew the idea of a centre for women's work. The Misses White, two generous Churchwomen, who had a Summer home in Heath, observed the work done in the country districts by the Archdeacon, and, as an expression of regard for him, gave him a farm for his personal use. This he gave to the work and converted it into a place where Summer workers might live, and from which they might go forth on their errands of help, and to which young women workers in the diocese might come for instruction.

An intense love of the soil and a desire to do something to redeem for use the waste farms of Massachusetts, combined with his love of boys and his pity for boys deprived of advantages, suggested to his mind what is now the Ascension Farm School in South Lee. At the funeral services were counted nineteen boys now in the school and receiving education for the mind as well as training in morals and religion.

As the Church in Stockbridge gave the man to the work, so in Stockbridge originated St. Paul's Society, which existed to help the Archdeacon in his missionary efforts with personal and financial aid. The organization grew and its membership included interested persons in Great Barrington, Lee, Lenox and Pittsfield. Its annual meeting was a considerable event. At one of these, the late Joseph H. Choate was present and listened to a description of the work with deep interest and then volunteered the opinion that, if the nature and the extent of the work were sufficiently known, there would be no limit to the support which it would receive.

The activities of Archdeacon Sniffen were not confined to the remote and sparsely populated regions. He was keen to recognize the call for the help of the Church in growing industrial centres. One evening he came in late to South Barre, a community which was growing up around a recently erected woolen mill. There was no church of any kind there and there were very few persons who had had any connection with our Church, but the people quickly rallied round the man who had come to minister to them and services were established. The mill-owners came to know the Archdeacon and to admire and trust him, and, in conse-

Obituary

THE REV. JOHN HENRY HOUGHTON, D.D.

On Saturday evening, the eighth day of December, 1917, our Heavenly Father saw fit to take unto Himself the soul of His servant, John Henry Houghton, priest and doctor.

For nearly twenty-five years he served St. Mark's, Denver, as rector, giving to the parish the whole-hearted love of a deeply loyal and devoted nature.

To know him was to love him; no one ever appealed to him in vain; the rich and the poor were alike to him, for he administered to all with equal sympathy and affection. He was unselfish to a degree of depriving himself of actual needs—his big heart could not see others in want if he could help them. Spiritually, his life was a reflection of the pure Gospel that he so consistently preached.

To look back upon his completed life is to recognize the high privilege that was ours in having him as our spiritual adviser. For all he was and did, for all he is to be and have, we give God thanks.

In reverent respect for his memory the rector and vestry of St. Mark's parish have ordered this minute to be entered on the records of the Church, a copy to be sent to his daughter and to be published in our Parish Leaflet, The Witness, The Living Church and THE CHURCHMAN.

Signed by
FRED. INGLEY, Rector.
EDW. M. SPARHAWK, Senior Warden.
ROBT. M. SIMONS, Junior Warden.
FRED. W. FELDWISCH, Clerk of the Vestry.
And the other members of the Vestry.

IN MEMORY OF
THE REV. CHARLES JAMES SNIFFEN

We, clergymen of the diocese of Western Massachusetts, assembled on the occasion of the funeral services of the Venerable Charles J. Sniffen, take this opportunity to place on record our high appreciation of our brother as a friend and a man of God.

St. Faith's House at Heath and the Ascension Farm School at South Lee owe their origin to him and memorials of his work are to be found throughout the diocese in churches built and in missions begun and organized. We feel that within the diocese no work in recent years has equaled his in evangelical effectiveness. His ministry was chiefly among those in remote and desolate regions to whom he brought the messages and services of the Church, and who except for his consecrated efforts would have been untouched by our Church or any other. Wanderers were reclaimed, homes were made happy and communities were blessed by his words, his example, his presence and his helpful ministrations. The missionary methods which he devised and followed, with conspicuous success, gave distinction to the diocese and were adopted by missionary leaders elsewhere.

Our brother had a peculiar genius for friendship; always a welcome visitor in our rectories, he formed a bond between our scattered homes, to which he brought courage and sympathetic understanding. Gifted with a keen sense of humor and an understanding of human nature he was always loyal to his associates, by whom he was greatly beloved. It was due to personal devotion to him as much as to confidence in his judgment that he was repeatedly elected as clerical deputy to the General Convention and led the clerical delegation from this diocese.

With the Heavenly Father whom he served with a pure heart and utter devotion, we leave our friend and fellow-priest. To his widow we extend a sympathy made keen by the sense of our own bereavement. His memory we will cherish, and his life and example will continue to stimulate and encourage us throughout our ministry.

Fell peacefully asleep in God, January 7, 1918, after a brief illness, in the fifty-sixth year of his age, the Rev. Arthur Russell Taylor, priest, beloved rector of St. John's church, York, diocese of Harrisburg. He served the diocese of Harrisburg in many official positions, among them on the Standing Committee, the Board of Missions and as delegate to the General Convention. fluence, co-operated with him and the people so that there was soon erected a substantial church which was fully paid for and now there is in South Barre a self-supporting parish. In Morningside, Pittsfield, he established a mission which now finds its home in a church built and paid for. Missions in Palmer, Turners Falls, Millers Falls, Belchertown and other places owe their origin to his missionary zeal and their development, to his guiding hand.

Among the clergy of the diocese the Archdeacon was greatly beloved. He was a welcome guest in the rectories, and clerical studies rang with his laughter and the laughter which he provoked. Frequently visiting them in the course of his travels, he was a bond between them and a kindly channel of communication. It was as much out of personal affection for him as for trust in his good judgment and known loyalty to the Church that he was sent repeatedly as a delegate to General Convention, and for the last Convention led the the delegation and was elected on the first ballot. The wife of one of the clergy said that she noticed a certain tenderness come in the voice of her husband whenever, in announcing the coming of the Archdeacon to preach, he mentioned his name. Among the laity he had a wonderful number of friends, and parishes came to look forward to his visit on behalf of his work as an annual event. A young man in a neighboring city who is not a church attendant met him in the course of business and took such interest in him and his work that from time to time he would send him tires for his missionary automobile. To many people in our parishes he was "our Mr. Sniffen".

He was the friend of persons of all classes, but for the plain people he had special sympathy, with a particular interest in the unfortunate and the erring. Many will recall how his voice would break when he spoke of a certain Amos Phelps who shot a policeman, and paid the extreme penalty for his act and whom his friend, the Archdeacon, felt to be hounded by the authorities and a victim of the law. On the way to the funeral a certain clergyman remarked, "A good many 'soaks' down this valley will miss him. Their lives were made better by his cheery greeting".

He never complained though his work was hard and took him away most of the time from the family he loved. Through Summer heat and Winter cold he took his long and tedious journeys. He would return from his trips to face accumulated mail. He took little or no vacation. Doubtless his death was hastened by the strain of arduous labor.

As was remarked by a man who knew him well, many books are [illegible] the lives of lesser men. He was the most valuable asset of the diocese. The conditions of his life were hard, and the rewards, except in affection, were few; he never had salary enough to have a home of his own but lived to the end in a boarding house. In the light of this life, so remarkable in nobleness and accomplishment, we feel the need of new standards for estimating men and meting out rewards.

It is sometimes jauntily said that no man is so valuable that his place cannot be filled. Those who have at heart what he stood for and the work he so wonderfully built up, would devoutly say, "Would to God this were always true"!

I did not see you go.
There was snow on the ground,
And it was cold;
And since that time
No word from you has come.
What shall I do?
What can I do but wait?

O, send across the snow
Some thought to me,
On thoughts' swift, subtle wings,
That I may know
Love throbs, and breathing life
Yet throbs, for me!

The Poorest Church in Easton

The following letter, though not originally directed there, has strayed into The Churchman office:—

"All Faith's church, Tunis Mills, Maryland, diocese of Easton, is the poorest church building in the diocese and must be very near to the heart of the Master. There are no better or more devoted people, or people more worthy of something better than those that attend the services there.

"I wonder if someone who reads this will help us start a fund for a new church. There is no need greater. Direct to

LABOR BULLETIN ISSUED ON STANDARDS IN WAR

Social Service Commission Discusses Problems in Latest Publication

New York City.—The Joint Commission on Social Service is just issuing the fifth of its series of War Service Bulletins (begun last Spring) on the general subject of "Labor Problems of Wartime". The bulletin discusses the industrial experiences of England shortly after the outbreak of the war, and the recommendations made by the special Health of Munition Workers' Committee appointed by Parliament to look into the causes of obvious dissatisfaction on the part of labor with conditions which ensued during the few months following August, 1914. This experience of England points a lesson for America which the bulletin in question considers—in such terms as the danger of relaxing industrial standards attained during times of peace; the treatment of strikes; the protection of women and older children, increasingly drafted into industry to take the place of men who have gone into military service; compensation for industrial accidents and diseases, especially in view of the hazardous nature of wartime trades; the need of a Federal board of industrial control and of a national system of labor exchanges to overcome the shortage of labor and to protect from undue strain workers now obliged to do more than their normal share. The bulletin closes with a brief indication of labor problems after the war and contains also in appended tables a summary of labor legislation since April, 1917, issued by the American Association for Labor Legislation, together with resolutions for the protection of war-workers passed by that association's executive committee; resolutions of the National Child Labor Committee; findings of the Russell Sage Foundation Committee investigating conditions among women munition workers at Bridgeport, Connecticut; and a selected list of magazine articles, etc., dealing especially with problems of women and children in wartime industry.

Copies of this bulletin may be secured on application to the office of the Joint Commission, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

Indians Build Memorial to Mr. Burt

The Crow Foot Indians in South Dakota have recently begun an interesting memorial in honor of the forty-five years af service of the Rev. Hachaliah Burt. Bishop Burleson writes that an attractive and comfortable cottage is in process of building and on the church grounds, where some day, when its present occupants no longer need it (Mrs. Burt and her sister), it will make a useful building for the general purposes of the mission. This is called the "Burt Memorial", and a very fitting one it is; for the best memorial to those who are gone is to care for the dear ones they leave behind. The cottage will cost $2,000; of this the Indians have given $600 and the Bishop hopes that many throughout the Church, who knew and loved Mr. Burt, will want to have a share in this act.

Bringing Fruit to Perfection

AN earnest Christian recently asked her rector why so many good people seem to get just so far in the Christian life and stop. They carry the struggle for perfection on to a point and beyond that the years seem to add nothing beautiful to the story of their lives. They bring no fruit to perfection. The Parable of the Sower, which we read on Sexagesima, deals with this problem of character.

How like individuals are the communities of Christians that form our parishes! Each church has a soul, as has every parishioner his individuality. We feel this unmistakably when we get to know a parish. Sometimes the thing is so marked that we feel it almost instantly when we enter a church to worship. There are churches that impress us as making precisely the same struggle to grow in grace, to act and think more and more like the Christ, as do people whom we know. It is apparent that the essentials of the Christian life are the supreme objects of desire in that parish. It is a very wonderful, inspiring and beautiful experience to have when one goes to church.

But sometimes we have a quite different experience. Just what kind of fruits the parish is trying to bring to perfection isn't quite clear. We wonder if the rector has made it clear to his people. We wonder if he is clear about it in his own mind.

St. Paul was the most anxious pastor of whom we have any record. He was great as an organizer and administrator. He was toweringly great as a thinker, but as a pastor he reveals all the burning love of his soul. No one can read thoughtfully the Epistles of St. Paul without seeing how troubled he was over this problem of bringing fruit to perfection. It is touching to see his anxious eagerness to make those parishioners of his, distributed in little groups throughout the Roman world, grow more and more like Christ. It almost broke his heart to hear of their worldliness, their dissensions, their lack of faith and their listless wills. He couldn't possess himself with patience, waiting to see them grow better men and women. He longed to have the visible fruits of their conversion. It was the pastor, not the theologian or administrator or ecclesiastic, that wrote the Pauline Epistles.

Have our churches kept that singleness of aim? We must admit that the problem is more difficult now than it was in the Apostolic days. Lack of organization has its advantages. If one of St. Paul's little churches did not produce Christian character, it couldn't hide its failure, for there was nothing else that it was trying to produce. Its purpose had not as yet grown complex and therefore hazy. It must show Christian character, or it had nothing to show. There were no beautiful Gothic churches or an "incomparable liturgy", no marvelously administered parish houses. The one aim, to make Christians, shone like a blazing jewel in its simple setting. You saw that or there was nothing to see. There is, after all, a gain in having our organizations so simple that if we fail in the great thing, we are made to see how greatly we have failed.

The Church is too tolerant of some kinds of imperfect fruit. We are postponing too many virtues for the millennium. There are fruits of the Spirit which, by this time, Christians ought to be bringing forth in perfection and abundance. In some things that the Christ requires of his disciples the world has a right to demand 100 per cent. success of the Church. The churches are often bitterly criticised because they are not producing fruits which the world believes it has a right to demand of us. We are too patient with our own imperfection. Take for example "unworldliness", has not the world the right to measure a Christian's sincerity by the otherworldliness of his life? We think that it has. In some respect salvation is as swift as love. The heart need not wait till the millennium to learn to love. Like a flash it descends from heaven upon us and, behold, all things become new! Such a soul instantly brings forth deeds that are perfect, glorious, beautiful.

The fruit we bring to perfection is the measure of our conversion.

The Pews We Own

THE CHURCHMAN would like to make a bold suggestion. It is bold because it involves our comfort and our not insisting on rights that we have paid for and are entitled to enjoy. We mean the privilege of having seats retained for us in our churches until ten or fifteen minutes after the hour when we have been summoned to worship God in His holy temple.

We doubt whether there is an Episcopal church in any of our large cities that is turning people away who desire a place to worship—except upon Easter. At the hour appointed for services to begin there are few churches which we have visited that are more than one-third full. Twenty minutes after service is begun there is seldom anybody standing in the aisles for lack of seats in the church, and yet, generally speaking, there is still room for more strangers. But during those twenty minutes the worship of visiting strangers, as well as of those who own pews and are occupying them, is disturbed by the going to and fro of ushers who appear to be anxiously struggling to find a vacant place for a stranger, when, to all appearances, there is vacancy to right of them and vacancy to left of them.

Among the people standing in the aisles, with the cold draughts blowing upon their backs, are sometimes to be found devout Christians who really desire to begin their worship when the service begins. One dare not kneel in the aisles for fear of discommoding the busy usher, who ten minutes after service has begun is busily trying to find a vacant seat for a small person in a large pew that to the initiated appears not to contain anybody.

We do not wish to make light of this precarious problem, for we know with what our rectors have to contend; nor are we unduly sympathetic with the claims of the people who never give a dollar to the support of religion yet think that, on a fine Sunday morning when they feel like going to church, the church ought to turn itself upside down to make them comfortable. The question has a good many sides and we think we know most of them.

But even supposing that a considerable percent of the people who stand in the aisle waiting for a half-filled church to receive its quota of paying worshipers have little claim upon our consideration, the churches at which these scenes occur are heavy losers. In the first place, it is difficult to make visitors understand why they should be compelled to stand ten or fifteen minutes outside the fast-closed door of a pew where there are vacant seats, while the Church has asked them to fall upon their knees and confess their sins.

Say what we may about the difficulties of financing free churches, the difficulty of creating an atmosphere of Christian worship, to say nothing of hospitality in the churches where pew-holders are given the right to keep a third or more of the seating capacity of the church vacant while the ushers are trying to discover whether the pew-holders intend to come to church, has consequences more serious to Christianity than any created by an impoverished purse.

There is unusual and very gracious hospitality shown in some of our city churches; pew-holders go out of their way to beckon visitors to their pews and to make them welcome; but we know of other churches where strangers are occasionally made to feel that if they venture beyond the closed door of a pew they do so at their peril. The rector does not know this because he is in the chancel, but he can't afford not to know it, and his people ought to be told that nobody really owns a pew in Church.

A case was recently called to our attention where a stranger was kept waiting in the aisle of a New York church for fifteen minutes. Near where he was standing there were at least fifteen pews containing altogether not more than five parishioners. Some of these parishioners seemed to sit menacingly at the aisle end of their pews with the conveyed inference that they intended holding their ground. The church was under contract, published in the porch, to throw open its doors to strangers ten minutes after the hour when service begins. The stranger, relying upon that contract, seized a seat; but the less bold remained standing until the ushers were fully assured that they incurred no risk by seating visitors in pews that might, even twenty minutes after service began, be claimed by the legitimate owners. The case is unusual, but our present system of showing undue deference to pew-holders makes possible just such glaring exhibitions of discourtesy. As we recall it, the sermon upon this occasion was upon love and Christian democracy, and the stranger noticed with what apparent approval, minus any conviction of sin, the pew-holders in that chilling zone listened to the stirring words of the preacher.

THE CHURCHMAN's bold suggestion is that during the coming Lent the churches of America be thrown open to strangers five minutes before the hour of service. Our invitation to soldiers and sailors to share our worship would then imply real hospitality and incur no risk of being marred by any discourtesy. We believe, if the experiment were tried, that there would be such a gain in reverence and Christian fellowship that none of us would be willing to return after Easter to the privileged security of finding the seat he has paid for held for his dilatory convenience. These are times when the Church can afford to make some radical ventures in behalf of Christian democracy.

Dr. Hall's Dogmatic Theology

THE seventh volume, "The Passion and Exaltation of Christ", of Dr. Hall's monumental work in dogmatic theology is now in the publishers' hands, but this and the remaining three volumes of the series will not be published unless enough subscriptions have been received to secure the publishers against loss.

Dr. Hall has devoted his life to the writing of a comprehensive work covering the whole field of doctrine. The work thus far presented to the public represents wide reading and consecutive thinking. It stands fairly in the tradition of Anglican scholarship. It tries to present the Christian religion as a coherent body of truth, worthy of the serious consideration of thoughtful men. If it may seem to some of us to lean too heavily in the conservative direction, it does not have the fault of wabbling in all directions. We should not expect Dr. Hall always to do justice to the Protestant tradition, but we have known Protestant writers who have done scant service to that tradition through their neglect of the vast stores of its Catholic heritage.

Dr. Hall is an able and devout scholar. The Episcopal Church in America has been very shy about risking an investment in scholarship. In this respect we have wandered far from the tradition of the English Church. Why scholarship has not prospered among us, while the Presbyterian Church can boast of so creditable a group of theologians, is a vexed question. May it not be that our indifference to learning is responsible for the decay of preaching among us? The best preaching was done in those periods when men were industrially trying to think things through, and were not content to let their feelings be the only measure of religious values.

THE CHURCHMAN sincerely hopes that Dr. Hall's new volume will receive enough subscriptions to secure its publication as well as to give its author the assurance of a wide appreciation of his consecration to a fine task.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

Candlemas

THE Feast of the Purification is above all others the Feast of the Blessed Virgin. It commemorates Mary's offering of the Gift she had received from God to Him for His use. It is a festival that should bring special comfort to the mothers who have been called upon to offer their sons upon the altar of a righteous war. Their gift like hers has been a willing gift made for the sake of the Kingdom her Son established. Their spirit is shown by a letter that recently came into our hands from the mother of a young lad who had been transferred to that most dangerous division of the Army, the Trench Mortar Battery, a division that means the front line trenches and constant fire besides the danger of handling the mortars themselves: "When I think of my lad's doing that kind of work, I can not help shrinking. But this is no time for shrinking. He is in God's hands for life or for death." This is the spirit of Mary's offering in the temple nineteen hundred years ago.

An Incredible Report

THE report that comes from our Washington correspondent of the closing of two-thirds of the churches in Washington beginning January 27 by order of the Fuel Administrator is incredible. It is unbelievable that the Fuel Administrator or any Government official dare issue such an order in an American city, and it is equally hard to believe that the Christian churches of a great city like Washington should permit such an order to go into effect without doing something more than passing resolutions. It is doubtful whether any Government official has legal right to close a church. It is one thing for the church officials themselves to offer in behalf of the conservation of fuel to close some of the churches, but it is quite a different matter for a Government official to assume the right to say whether or not the church shall remain open. Such an order savors of an autocracy America ought not to tolerate even in war. We hope that we have been misinformed as to the purport of the Fuel Administrator's edict. We hope that he has issued merely a courteous request to the churches to unite, where such union is possible, that fuel may be saved for the great cause that every patriot has most deeply at heart. Such a request would receive the most respectful and sympathetic consideration.

One would suppose that Washington was the last city of the country that could afford to close any of its churches. The population of Washington has increased during the War by hundreds of thousands. The streets of the city are filled with soldiers, with Red Cross workers, with Government officials hailing from every community in the land. Can Washington afford at this hour in our national history to shut down two-thirds of its houses of worship? A strange commentary indeed upon the function of worship in our national life.

Phillips Brooks

THE impressive service and gathering in Trinity church, Boston, where on January 23 was held the memorial service marking the twenty-fifth anniversary of the death of Phillips Brooks, bore eloquent testimony to the enduring love and reverence that Boston, New England and indeed the whole Nation hold for the greatest preacher that America has known and the most striking religious leader that our country has produced.

That New England as a whole, through its representatives, and not merely the Episcopalians of Boston should, after the lapse of a quarter of a century, gather to pay tribute to a clergyman of the Episcopal Church is eloquent proof that his popularity was not due to the glamour of his rich personal gifts. His work endures.

To people of our day it seems incredible that only twenty-five years ago there were Churchmen in America who looked upon the election of Phillips Brooks to the Episcopate as a calamity. No one would wish to recall the bitterness and unlovely spirit of that controversy, but it is encouraging to remark that no one could be found in the length and breadth of America today holding so unchristian a definition of orthodoxy as to question the fitness of a man like Phillips Brooks to enter the House of Bishops.

Miss Scudder's Letter to "The Churchman"

WE are glad to publish in our correspondence columns, the letter of Mrs. Amelia Schepp, protesting against some statements made by Miss Scudder in her letter to THE CHURCHMAN in our issue of January 12. We, of course, do not agree with everything contained in Miss Schepp's letter; but we are in complete sympathy with her protest against Miss Scudder's statement that "All the time we fight Germany, we know if we are honest how much reason Germany has for despising our claim to a kinder and more just civilization than her own."

The editor of THE CHURCHMAN suppressed that paragraph in Miss Scudder's admirable article in our Christmas number, not because he was afraid of public opinion but because he thought that nobody could defend the statement. To say that Germany has reason for despising our claim to a kinder civilization than our own is, as it seems to us, to be blind to the whole moral issue of the war. Americans are willing, we hope to the last man, to lay down their lives rather than to see Germany win this war, because they are convinced that the German civilization, as now dominated by Berlin, is diabolically cruel and unchristian. The Kaiser, as the symbol of Prussianism, comes, to our imagination, about as near the Antichrist, as human personality can come. It is amazing to us that anybody with an adequate knowledge of what has been coming over the spirit of Germany during the last two generations can speak of that civilization as one kinder than our own.

Our Debt to England

THE Rev. Dr. Hugh Birckhead, who has been spending a few months in France and England in connection with the work of the Red Cross, has been emphasizing in his recent addresses in New York the importance of our recognizing the debt we owe to England for the almost superhuman burden she has been so valiantly carrying in this War for the safety of us all.

The love of England is strong in the hearts of Churchmen. Her traditions are ours. We speak the same language of religion. The protestantism of her national Church is our protestantism. Her catholic heritage she reserved and handed on to us. It ought not to be necessary to plead with Churchmen to love their Mother. But Churchmen can do a great service to their country now by glorying in the marvelous deeds of sacrifice and valor that England's soldiers have been doing in this war. England has fought in Belgium, France, at Gallipoli and wherever her sons have gone, with a spirit that has never been surpassed in all the annals of history.

We must not for one hour forget that fact. America is not yet ready to defend herself. England and France are still pouring out their blood for us. We must acknowledge this debt over and over again, if only to make us not merely willing but joyously glad to do our part.

From an Address by Dean Abbott

GENERAL BYNG, the hero of the November drive on the Western Front, said recently in the course of conversation with a friend of mine, a conversation which was repeated to me verbatim two weeks after its occurrence: Give me Christian young men. They endure the monotony better than non-Christian men, and their valor is unequaled in the hour of crisis. This prevalent idea that the Dare Devil and Harum Scarum men make the best fighters is all wrong. The decent living man is the decent fighting man". "General", replied my friend, "I am glad to hear you say that. As a parson it does my soul good. It is a comfort to know that when put to the test the work of the Churches has stood the strain. I should like, however, to ask just this: Could you, through your experience, differentiate between the Christians? Are the members of any one religious body, taken in the aggregate, better soldiers than the members of any other religious body"? "No", answered the doughty commander, "there is no distinction of sect. Irish, Scotch, English, Canadian, Australian, New Zealand Christians all fight like hell"!

A Free Press and the Zone System

AMERICANS who value a free press for the dissemination of news and the expression of diverse convictions should insist upon the repeal of that section of the Revenue Bill, passed at the last session of Congress, establishing the Zone System for periodicals.

In the January Atlantic, Mr. Villard in an article that every American ought to read, calls attention to a most dangerous tendency in the evolution of daily newspapers. The day when a restless spirit like Norton, Garrison or James Russell Lowell could resolve, when the fires of indignation or of aspiration flared forth in his soul, to start a newspaper, even if he had only two or three hundred dollars in his pockets, has gone, apparently forever. You can't start a paper today without a million dollars or more in your bank account. Publishing a newspaper is about the most expensive luxury that an individual or group of men can indulge. We have all marked with apprehension the disappearance, one after another, of vigorous dailies, while the process of consolidation has been going on. There are great cities like St. Paul that haven't one strong daily paper; competition has disappeared and the people of these great communities must read one local paper or none at all. Cleveland has only one morning newspaper. Indianapolis, Detroit, Toledo, Columbus and New Orleans has each only one morning daily.

What is to become of American politics if our cities are to have only one medium of news and opinion? With the decline of the daily paper as a medium of protest and of vigorous free opinion, there has been a marked development of the periodical. The editors of our great weekly periodicals exercise a tremendous force in shaping public opinion. But with the increasingly high cost of publishing a paper, it looks as if, ultimately, the periodical will go the way of the daily paper. A millionaire like Mr. Hearst can afford the luxury of moulding public opinion, but a Godkin or a Lowell will have to let his soul burn itself out in silence.

And now, to speed up the process of elimination of the poor but honest weekly, Congress passes a law that, unless repealed, will kill at a stroke most of the religious periodicals of the country. We may be weak and perhaps ineffective; we know we are poor; but such as we are we desire to live. But killing religious periodicals is not the greatest calamity that the Zone system is likely to produce. Perhaps the country can limp along without papers like The Living Church, THE CHURCHMAN, The Southern Churchman and many another. That is conceivable. But if Congress proposes to pass laws that will tend to speed up the present tendency of eliminating every newspaper and periodical except those that have millions of money behind them, then we must believe that our Republic has perilous days ahead.

The Zone system is a stupid blunder. If it remains on the statute books, it will mean a death blow to our struggling weeklies.

Unless all the "kick" has seeped out of the American character, the Government in Washington will be made aware that America values the freedom of the press. If only the very rich can publish a daily or a weekly paper, the press will not long be a force that ignorance, self-interest or iniquity need worry about.

Let us utter our protest to the Government in Washington.

What Spiritual Freedom Is

By THE REV. R. J. CAMPBELL.

ONE of the subjects on which the last word will never be said is that of the freedom of the will. It reeks of ancient controversy, of days when philosophers and theologians wrestled with each other in desperate argument as to whether man is really free to choose his own destiny or whether it is ordained for him beforehand in every detail. In our own time it is men of science who have led the discussion rather than reasoners in the fields of metaphysics and religion, and there is no denying that on the whole a scientific training predisposes the mind towards determinism, as it is called—that is, that everything happens in the universe, including human life, not as the result of the free exercise of the will, whether of God or man, but by the inevitable sequence of cause and effect. As the late Professor Huxley once remarked, every pebble that is thrown up on the beach by this morning's storm was destined to be thrown up on that very spot by that very force from the ages of ages; nothing could have stopped it; the play and interplay, the action and reaction of material forces have been working towards this particular event since time began, making it precisely what it is and no other; there has never been anything contingent or uncertain about it; it was bound to happen—if "happen" be the right word to describe an incident so rigidly and immutably fixed and precise in the factors of its operation.

It is not wonderful that habitual contemplation of nature's laws as thus illustrated should have led many people to view human nature in much the same way and to estimate human responsibility accordingly. This has been one of our greatest dangers of late years. The veteran German biologist, Professor Haeckel, who is still living to watch the effect of his own theories on the conduct of his countrymen in the present war, has done unmeasured harm in this respect. A decade and a half ago he wrote in a work which has been popularized in our language that "God, freedom and immortality are the three great buttresses of superstition which science must make it her business to destroy". Popular writers in this country took up the cry and labored in season and out of season to prove that man is only a mechanism and as subject to the control of the cosmic forces which have brought him into being as a stone or a tree. Free will, they shouted, is a pure delusion; it never existed and never can; what we mistakably call an act of the will is only obedience to a motive supplied from without; we did not make ourselves and we do not really make our environment, we are only the puppets of fate; to will anything whatever is only to behave in accordance with the last and strongest desire which rises into our consciousness, and so on.

Now it may be freely admitted at once that there is no cogent argument which will overthrow this kind of reasoning. Neither the determinist nor the advocate of free will can claim to score finally off the other; the issue is too great, and the ultimate sources thereof lie beyond our ken. You appeal in vain to the determinist when you point out his inconsistencies. You may tell him that, like the Calvinist of old, he ought not to blame anybody for anything, seeing that on his theory none of us can help being what we are and doing what we do; he will merely reply that the disposition to blame is as much part of the inevitable process of things as anything else. You interrupt his flow of thought by telling him that a thief has just picked his pocket and is running down the street with his watch; instantly he tears off in a fine state of indignation to recover his property and give the purloiner in charge. You venture to remonstrate that this is against his principles, and perhaps he promptly gets angry and threatens to give you in charge too. You point out that anger is rather strange in this connection, for it presupposes culpability in the offender and therefore some measure of discrimination between right and wrong and power to choose one or the other at any given moment. He will not listen to you until he has recovered his temper, and that achieved he will blandly inform you tha he was as inevitably fated to be angry and prosecute a the thief was fated to steal his watch and go to gaol. O the other hand, if you begin to argue that neither the dee nor the emotion was foreordained but was within the con trol of the subject in each case he will laugh at you an demand to know who told you so; and you are helples to answer, the fact being beyond rational demonstration

We are on safest ground in holding with the late Mr Lecky that whether we can prove our possession of mora freedom or not we know we have it. "The best argumen in its favor is that it is impossible really to disbelieve it No human being can prevent himself from viewing cer tain acts with indignation, shame, remorse, resentment gratitude, enthusiasm, praise or blame, which would b perfectly unmeaning and irrational if these acts coul not have been avoided. You can have no higher evi dence on the subject than is derived from this fact. I is impossible to explain the mystery of free will, but un til a man ceases to feel these emotions he has not suc ceeded in disbelieving in it."

But is there not a further consideration also, and on less readily perceived and understood in this connection It is that if we were perfectly free we should know noth ing of what is ordinarily termed a moral struggle; it i just because we are not free, or only partially or rela tively free, that we are called upon to exercise the wi in making choice between desire and duty. We are a born limited more or less by our passional nature; we ar drawn this way and that by our propensities which w did not create and can only imperfectly control—henc our experience of conflict, inner disharmony, victory o defeat in the hour of temptation. "To will is preser with me, but how to perform that which is good I fin not." What every spiritual nature craves is to be deliv ered out of this bondage, this dualism of flesh and spiri so that will and disposition may ever be on the same sid and we shall live the good as perfectly and spontaneousl as a flower opens to the sun. When we attain to that w shall know in its fulness the freedom which is the birth right of the sons of God.

Let it be remembered that the real freedom we ar aiming at and which is promised to us in Christ is some thing higher than the freedom to choose this or that, t reject the evil and cleave to the good; it is such a fre dom of the whole being that evil will not longer be ab to exercise any attraction upon us. We shall then be fr as God is free, as all sinless beings are free—to will th good and nothing else. And just as it is inconceivab that a refined and cultivated nature would want to wa low in filth though free in the abstract to do so if it like so is it inconceivable that a soul perfectly conformed t the image of Christ would ever want to do wrong. Be ing free, utterly and completely free, his joy is to do th will of God. In other words, his is the service whic alone is perfect freedom.

LONDON.—The institution of the Rev. R. J. Campbe to the parish of Christ Church, Westminster, drew large crowd, as was expected. Institutions do not ofte take place in public. The Bishop of London, in this in stance, was assisted by the Dean of Westminster (Bisho Ryle). It is recorded in the Church Press that M Campbell answered the formal questions with great clea ness, and one descriptive writer speaks of the impressiv scene when Mr. Campbell raised the Bible above his hea while he took the oaths of allegiance and canonical obed ence, "with the light shining on his white hair". The kneeling before the Bishop, he received the Deed of Inst tution, the Bishop adding to the usual ceremony by lay ing his hands on the head of the new parish priest. Th Bishop then gave an address on thanksgiving, exhortin him to keep the spirit of joy and courage high in h church.

Sketches from Life, III - Bishop Whipple

By ROMNEY REYNOLDS

I CANNOT remember when I did not know Bishop Whipple's name. Through my boyhood I thought of him as the great friend of the Indians, working for them in Minnesota, pleading for them in Washington, a patriot of the sort Washington would have liked, a primitive patriot who had survived into our own time. As I learned more of him, he seemed, rather, like St. John: for in the reports of his words there was the same insistence upon the primacy of love. This double judgment may have been keener than I suspected. For the Bishop in his early manhood had dipped into political life; and his experience with men of all sorts stood him in good stead in his later missionary labors, when he combined the wisdom of the serpent with the gentleness of the dove. One of his old friends used to say, "Bishop Whipple is ninety-nine parts St. John, and one part New York politician".

At last I saw this interesting man face to face. He had come to Boston to act as one of the presenters at Bishop Brooks' consecration; and in calling upon an old rector in an hotel, I found myself being presented to Bishop Whipple. He was gaunt, tall, with long hair, with a patriarchal face. (I think Henry Irving must have learned from Bishop Whipple how to walk as Becket.) He passed from one to another, saying his word of affection to this old friend or that; and his voice could not be forgotten. In his youth, I have been told, this voice had a marvelous resonance and appeal: to the end, though diminished, it was such a voice as would awaken a man's thought of the open fields and the wide skies.

A number of years passed, and I became Bishop Whipple's neighbor, in the Minnesota community which for more than forty years was his home. When I began my work there, he was away, and for several months I could see how, even in his absence, his spirit dominated everything in the town. It was not only that people were proud of him: they looked up to him as to a father, and all seemed to have some personal association with him. If he had not confirmed them, he had said a kind word in some great sorrow, or he had preached a sermon which helped, or one had years before worked on his Cathedral, and each Saturday night the Bishop had paid him with the rest. The Church schools as well as the Cathedral had been built up through his energy and persuasiveness. One of the chief benefactors of the boys' school had said, "I will not see that old man." But he was not old, and he some way did see him; and afterwards she reported, "When he had talked about his work for half an hour, I was ready to give him every penny I had." The Chicago fire followed hard upon the pledges she made, but from the burning city she telegraphed to the Bishop that he should have the building she had promised if they took all she had left. Such stories the people told of their Bishop; and awaited his home-coming as they would have awaited a beloved member of their own families.

His sermons always had the spirit of his patriotism and the spirit of his devotion to the Indians. He nearly always made some reference to our earlier generals or statesmen, and one could be sure to hear of "our dear red brothers of the forest." There were certain recurring phrases. He would speak of the Holy Communion as "the trysting-place of love." Or he would mention some colleague as one who "gave him love unclouded by a doubt." Making much of earnest Christian people not of our Communion, he pleaded constantly for Christian unity.

To know Bishop Whipple in his most characteristic leadership, one must have seen him among his Indians. When his diocese was divided, few Indians were left under his direct care; but he would go at least once a year to Birch Coulee. On Saturday night he would gather the Dakotas about him for religious instruction, as preparation for Baptism and Confirmation the next day. He spoke to them as to children, in homely, practical words which not one of them could fail to understand. Because they told him all their hopes and troubles, he knew their sorrows and temptations. He was their great chief, and they loved him as only children can love a father.

I was set one day to examine a solitary Indian for Deacons' Orders. If the Bishop loved white men, there was no word strong enough to tell his devotion to the Indians. On this particular day he did not intend to leave the fate of his beloved Indian to any chance. He met me in the hall, warning me that the candidate had been dispensed from Greek. I said that I remembered. "And remember," added the Bishop, "that he is an Indian. You must ask the questions simply." I gave my promise. Even so, the Bishop thought it well to accompany me, and sat close beside me as I put my questions. I was encouragingly inquisitive at first, asking how many Gospels there were, who wrote the Epistles to the Corinthians, and, after a few more such questions, I said, "How does the Epistle of St. James differ from the other Epistles in the New Testament?" A look of dismay came over the face of the handsome Indian. Without looking at the Bishop, I could feel that he was growing uncomfortable. After a long silence he leaned over to me and said, "You don't quite know how to put questions to an Indian. Do you mind if I ask him?" Of course, I begged him to put the question. Whereupon, with a radiant smile, which told the would-be deacon that help was coming, the Bishop said assuringly: "Now, John, St. James doesn't tell you what you ought to think; he tells you what you ought to do. Now, doesn't he, John?" After a moment's hesitation, with fine Indian dignity, there came the slow reply, "Yes, sir." "You see," whispered the Bishop to me, with a look of triumph, "he understands perfectly." Is it wonderful that the Indians, and all others who knew him, loved him? He was perpetually coming to our help.

On another morning I was summoned to the Bishop's study to examine some white candidates for the ministry. We sat in the pleasant room lined with books, many of which were presentation copies from men like Lightfoot and Westcott. Hardly any set of books was complete, because he had a way of urging students and clergy to borrow what they liked—and alas! many books went out never to return. Pictures of his friends in England and America were everywhere. Bits of Indian bead-work were hanging over chairs and screens. The room could have belonged to no one but Bishop Whipple. Well, there we sat, and the young candidates refused to be frightened in so genial an atmosphere. At length one was so far from worried about his attainments that he sallied forth to examine the Bishop. "Bishop," he began, "Bishop Tuttle has lent one of our churches in St. Louis to the Presbyterians for their services, because their church has burned down. What do you think of that, sir?" Bishop Whipple slipped still farther down into his big chair, and looking out into the leaves of the June maples, said, "I have all I can do, taking care of you youngsters: I leave Bishop Tuttle to take care of his own diocese." There were no more diversions.

The more strenuous days of Bishop Whipple were over when I knew him. His son once told me something of the rigors of the early days, when the Bishop on his visitations would sleep in winter bedrooms which were not only cold as only Minnesota can be cold, but had perhaps not been open since the previous May. Once this son went with his father, and they were assigned to the same room; naturally he began to make the usual preparations for bed. The Bishop noticed him. "Charlie, Charlie," he said nervously, "what are you doing? Keep your clothes on; keep your coat on; keep your hat on—keep everything on. Get into bed just as you are!" The Bishop never got colds through indiscretion. In spite of incessant travelling, he never ceased to fear that he would lose a train. He must have spent in railway stations what would make an ordinary lifetime. His sister-in-law said to him one day, as he was urging Mrs. Whipple to start with him for the train long before the time: "Brother Henry, why do you want to go now? You know she never loses a train." "I know it," he said in despair, "that's the worst of it." He was quite as eager to begin a service. He was always sitting in the robing-room fifteen or twenty minutes before the hour appointed, turning to the rector every moment or two with the cheerful question, "Now, my dear brother, it's time to begin; isn't it"? One had to keep telling him that the congregation hadn't come, then that the choristers hadn't all come, then that the bell hadn't rung—and at last it was a wise rector who hid himself till the right moment was reached.

He was one of the most generous of men. I remember that one morning he gave me a surplice which he thought would be convenient for a visiting clergyman. In the afternoon he sent me a note, asking me if I wouldn't give it back; for a missionary had dropped in, who, he was sure, needed it more than the imaginary visitor. I remember, too, what a difficult task it was to give out Church notices if I was near him in the chancel: he kept up a rapid series of whispered suggestions as I was talking, "Now, my brother, tell them this; now, my brother, tell them that." He wanted all possible invitations to be given them!

This childlike love is what one remembers most in thinking of him. He was pleased and grateful for any word of appreciation. He had so much adulation from the great of the earth that we felt that he did not care for our poor words at home. But he did care deeply. He had letters of frank affection from one Archbishop of Canterbury after another, or, for example, from Mr. Gladstone; he knew nearly all the leaders of his generation in the English-speaking world. He had Mr. Gladstone's walking-stick, which was the great man's parting gift to him on his last visit. When he returned from a Lambeth Conference with a new degree from Oxford, he put on his beautiful doctor's gown, at Mrs. Whipple's request, to show it to his sister-in-law, who was also his very old friend. When he turned about, Mrs. George Whipple said, "Oh, Brother Henry, don't you feel grand"! "Oh, Sister Mary", said he, "you do say such uncomfortable things". "Well", she answered, "I don't want to spoil you". At which he winked, and said, "That's a sin, Sister Mary, that will never be laid at your door". Being Scotch, she liked the compliment.

He was in truth fond of color. When he returned to us after a long absence, he was wont to invite his friends and neighbors to his house. I remember, before one such reception, he came downstairs with his usual elegance of appearance, winning the evident admiration of his family, till they looked at his feet, and there they saw, above his shining low shoes, the most brilliant of red stockings. The ladies instantly decided that he must change them. He was crestfallen, but obediently withdrew. In a few moments, as the first guests came, he entered, altogether in black; but there was a gleam in his eye, and, as he passed me, he whispered, "I have on a pink undershirt, anyway."

Days and months went by. His young Coadjutor died, and he did more work in his diocese than he had done for many years. Almost eighty, he seemed to have the strength of a young man. He was used to thinking himself ill when the doctor thought him fairly well; and he would refuse to leave his bed, till suddenly it occurred to him that he must keep a distant engagement, and from bed he went upon long journeyings, evidently none the worse. When his pocketbook was stolen from him he said, "I don't mind the loss of the money, but I do mind losing those excellent prescriptions; I think I had twenty in that pocketbook"! We laughed, and felt confident that the elastic constitution which had borne him through many vicissitudes would bear him far into old age—especially since he was daily guarded by a wise and watchful love.

But the end was sudden, one September night after a brief illness. I was with him all that night. Indians came from the Dakotas and the Chippewas to speak their last loving farewells in the familiar house where his body lay. Men strong and good whom he had known from childhood bore his body to the Cathedral, and throngs of people within and without gave thanks for all that he had been to them and to countless others. I never heard, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul" sung as I heard it sung that afternoon to old St. Martin's. Then the Dakotas sang a hymn in their own tongue within the church, and the Chippewas sang a hymn in their language outside the church. When the people with bowed heads were moving towards their homes, one of the bishops who had officiated said, "You buried your Bishop like a prince". We hoped we had for he was more than a prince: he was a dear friend and counsellor, a most loving father.

What Shall We Do With Our Synods?-I

By THE REV. EDWIN AUGUSTINE WHITE, D.C.L.

THE powers at present granted to a provincial synod are not such as to make the active business man elected to the synod wildly enthusiastic to attend its sessions. A casual glance at the program of a synod's session is sufficient to show that those sessions must be in large part, as has well been said, a more or less interesting debating society on missionary, social and educational questions.

Unless something is done to give more power of legislation to the provincial synods, something to make them more of a live factor in the Church's life, they will soon fall into innocuous desuetude.

I firmly believe that many questions now dealt with in the General Convention can be more efficiently dealt with in the provincial synods. More than that, I believe that, in time, most matters that now occupy the time and attention of the General Convention will become a part of the provincial synod's work, and the Convention itself left free to give its entire attention to the larger matters which only a General Convention can consider and settle.

Those of us who have been members of the General Convention for any length of time realize that something must be done to relieve the Convention of much of the work that now devolves upon it, and which militates against the careful consideration of important matters during the short time that it is possible to hold the members of the Convention together.

Matters of the gravest importance to the welfare of the Church are now laid over from one Convention to another, because there is no time for their consideration. And even when there is consideration given to some important matter the legislation enacted is too often hasty, careless and ill-advised, simply because there is insufficient time in which to give the matter careful consideration.

Take the matter of the report of the Joint Commission on the Revision of the Prayer Book in the last Convention, for example.

The Commission presented a most interesting and exhaustive report, recommending many radical changes in our liturgical worship. It was a matter in which the whole Church was extremely interested. It was supposed that much of the time of the Convention would be taken up in its consideration. What are the facts in the case? After taking out the time given to the joint sessions of the two Houses for the consideration of missionary, religious education and social service questions the General Convention was in session eighty-five hours and only about fifteen of these hours were given by the House of Deputies to the consideration of the revision and enrichment of the Prayer Book.

But more than this. By agreement the proposed revision of the Prayer Book was divided into two nearly equal parts, and one of these parts was to receive the primary consideration of the House of Bishops, and the other of the House of Deputies. When one House had completed its action on the proposed revision of any one office, such completed action was sent down to the other House for its consideration. This was a most wise provision as it prevented the primary consideration by both Houses of the same matter at the same time, and was in the interest of economy of time. But what was the result? The completed action of one House regarding the revision of certain offices failed, in a majority of cases, of any consideration in the other House, for lack of time, with the result that such action had to be referred back to the Joint Commission to report to the next Convention. Thus the time spent by one House or the other in the consideration thereof was practically wasted, because, though a question may have received completed action by one House, if such action is not ratified by the other House, then it must be considered de novo by the next Convention. This waste of time is most serious in the House of Deputies, because of the radical change in its constituency from Convention to Convention. In every General Convention of recent years nearly, if not quite, one-half of the members of the House of Deputies are new men, wholly unfamiliar with what has been done in the previous Convention, with the result that, no matter how carefully any question has been considered by the House in the previous Convention, it again has to be threshed out afresh.

But even more than this, press of business and lack of time in which to accomplish it leads to careless legislation. And careless legislation in such a matter as the revision of the Prayer Book is most deplorable.

It is very difficult for anyone reading the Journal of the Convention of 1916 to say just what was actually accomplished by the Convention in the matter of Prayer Book Revision. Let me give you one concrete example. On one page of the Journal of the House of Bishops you find that that House adopted an amendment to a certain office, and sent it down to the other House by message in the regular way. You turn to the Journal of the House of Deputies, and you find that the House of Deputies concurred in the message of the House of Bishops, thus completing action in the matter so far as the Convention of 1916 is concerned. But you turn again to the Journal of the House of Bishops, and you find it stated on a later page thereof that the House of Bishops referred this same proposed amendment back to the Joint Commission to report to the next General Convention.

This action was communicated by message to the other House and that House concurred therewith in referring it back to the Joint Commission. Here we have two absolutely contradictory completed actions on the same question. This is only one example of the careless legislation of the General Convention, due entirely to the mass of business which the Convention attempts to do in a too short space of time. Something must be done to relieve the General Convention of this congestion in legislative matters, and it can only be done through a larger use of the provincial synods, giving to them the power to legislate on many matters that now occupy the time and attention of the Convention.

While any transfer of large powers from the General Convention to the provincial synods must necessarily be gradual, there are ways in which the provincial synods can be given increased authority and responsibility almost immediately or as soon as the General Convention shall make the constitutional and canonical changes necessary for the transference of delegated powers.

Many questions that are now referred to special joint commissions could be better sent to one or more of the provincial synods to consider and make report thereon to the next Convention. The Journal shows that the last Convention created or continued twenty-eight joint commissions or committees. Because of the understanding that, as far as possible, each province shall be represented upon a commission, these commissions are composed of men from all over the United States, making it impossible to secure the attendance of all the members at a meeting thereof. Probably the majority of these commissions will not have a single meeting until they meet in General Convention, when, without any careful consideration of the subject committed to them, they prepare a report to be submitted to the Convention. No wonder that the Convention has begun to tire of these commissions, and that the House of Deputies in last Convention finally refused to appoint any more such commissions. A provincial synod, on the other hand, could give extended consideration to the subject committed to it, and make a thorough and well digested report to the Convention. And more than this, many of the subjects now referred to joint commissions are somewhat local in character, and are of especial interest to the Church in some one of the provinces. There is every reason why many of the questions now referred to joint commissions should be referred to some one or more of the provincial synods.

Because of the local character of some questions that require legislative action, the power of legislation thereon should be given to the provincial synods directly interested in the matter. Far more satisfactory legislation would be secured from the provincial synod, where the members thereof thoroughly understand the conditions which the proposed legislation is designed to meet, than from the General Convention, the majority of whose members have no knowledge whatever of the conditions and the requirements of the case. Perhaps in some cases confirmatory action on the part of the General Convention might be advisable, but the synod should be given the power of primary legislation in the matter.

(To be concluded)

Some Letters Home—VI

FROM CHAPLAIN ERNEST W. WOOD

November 12, 1917.

Today I took a trip on a motor ambulance to a fairly good sized city about twelve miles from here. It was my first time outside of our peaceful little valley since our arrival nearly six weeks ago, and it was certainly fine to see a real town with paved streets, and no mud or manure piles, and stores and nicely dressed people wearing shoes of leather instead of wood. I went to do a little Christmas shopping, but I did not find many things suitable for mailing, not to mention the limitations of my pocket-book. No pictures can be sent home, for which I am sorry.

Orders have come from the G. H. Q., A. E. F. (= "Great Headquarters, American Expeditionary Force") in regard to the ration for the men on Thanksgiving Day, which I suppose will be repeated on Christmas. Every man is to have, among other things, 16 oz. of turkey, nuts, raisins, sweet potatoes, "half a lemon" and one apple. The half lemon I suppose is for pie.

We now have some horses, and they surely are "some" horses. Our own animals have not yet arrived, but these horses were sent to us from the French front, and they are probably condemned artillery horses. They have a habit of going on two legs, and you can never tell which two it will be. A very nice horse has been assigned to me. He ran away with my orderly, and as a consequence the orderly was relieved for being "absent without authority". I should like to write and tell the boys all about things here, but it wouldn't pass the regimental censor!

A new version (uncensored): Sherman said, "War is hell". We say, "This is the hell of a war".

Religious Conditions in the Middle West

By THE REV. GEORGE P. ATWATER

II

MAY I mention several other characteristics of our Midwestern condition? I believe that I am within the bounds of truth when I say that in the Middle West such masses of the people as are not Roman Catholic are distinctly anti-Roman Catholic. This feeling varies according to the education, environment, and nature of those who share it, but it is real. The Roman Church casts no spell beyond its own borders and will never convert the unchurched unless they have shared in early life the traditions of that church. In fact, this antipathy seems to be most keen among those who have no religious affiliation worth the name.

Beyond the Roman Catholic Communion there is no recognition of authority in religious matters. And as matters stand there is absolutely no hope of establishing the principle of authority. All the king's horses and all the king's men are ineffective. Authority has vanished as a vital factor in the religion of the Protestants. With authority vanishes uniformity and with uniformity vanishes religious momentum.

Religion among the Protestants of the Middle West has become the avocation of amateurs. Amateurs, committed to individualistic prerogatives, preach the Gospel, teach Sunday school, and proclaim liberty of opinion from every platform. This is the Middle West as I see it.

It is not without some feeling of temerity that I venture to forecast the future of religion in the Middle West. My own best judgment is that there will be no improvement until the primary problem of nationality is on the way toward solution. The Middle West, racially and socially, is a chaotic mixture of diverse elements. When these blend there will be at the same time an automatic judgment upon the experimental conditions through which we are passing. In education, industrial relations, social conditions, forms of government and religion, there will be a gradual elimination of the relatively ineffectual forms and methods. There will be a constant approach to the enduring and effective forms and methods. In the realm of religion there will be a discrimination between the accidents and the substance. I have enough confidence in the people of our Middle West to believe that underneath their present chaos of method there is a real consciousness of the fundamental religious values and sanctions and a capacity to discern the truth. They are committed now by training and tradition to some form of loyalty, or of denial, which concerns itself more with the forms rather than with the substance of religion. As time passes there will emerge from the deeper reaches of the heart an insistence on the primary elements of religion. The efforts of any organization to capture this force as a stimulus to some passing manner of the exercise of religion will be futile. The rising tide of religion will dig its own channels, will recreate its own methods, will form that which will satisfy its own need for expression. Present-day modes will either be modified or pass away. For example, Sunday is now practically gone. If its passing means the passing of godliness then it is a calamity. If its passing is but a phase in the transition from the recognition of the sacredness of a time to the sacredness of all time, we need not be so much concerned.

We make efforts to stay the disintegrating tendencies. We attempt to arrest the process. Social service and sacramentalism, revivals and educational efforts, are erected as bulwarks against the flood. They are upbuilded by honest and God-fearing men. And it is right that those convinced of their efficacy should try them. For it may be that one of them will prove to be the agent which will precipitate or crystallize the religious substance now held in solution. Each adherent of any of these agents naturally upholds the efficacy of his particular agent. But each is no more than experimental in its nature. We cannot now be sure that any agency has been effective enough to commend itself as the ultimate way.

In the face of millions of unchurched, yet not necessarily irreligious, in the face of social problems, shifting populations, and rapidly changing conditions, what is to be the program of our own Church? For though I may arouse a suspicion of failing to take advantage of the privileges of this body, and of trespassing within the limits of orthodoxy, yet I say that in my heart I believe that the Episcopal Church may become the torch bearer to lead the hosts of the Middle West into the path of a satisfying and enduring religion.

In view of what I have just said you might properly ask what is to be her relation to this inchoate mass of human diversity. Why the Episcopal Church? Because the Episcopal Church is comprehensive of every principle which I have mentioned. She is both social and sacramental, revivifying and educative. Her faith is sane, reasonable, and of right proportions. Her practices are stimulating and satisfying and strengthening. Her methods are calm and healing. She has an atmosphere of joy and peace. The Church is the hope of the Middle West because she is inherently possessed of elements whose abundance would alone be equal to the task.

But the method. Here again I am amazed at my own rashness in daring to propose that the methods now in vogue ought to be subject to some critical scrutiny. Are we quite convinced that a survey of the Church in the Middle West, parish by parish, mission by mission, would encourage us to believe that we are conquering the vast territory? I fear not. We are doing noble, heroic, self-sacrificing work in countless places, but it is being undermined by the conditions mentioned earlier in this paper, over which we have no control. This immediate work cannot be allowed to relax, of course, but I venture to return for a moment to the analysis of the situation as I have just suggested it, and try to relate our possible efforts to that.

The great unchurched masses, assisted by the discontented within religious affiliations, will in time, with the unifying of our varied social elements, express their religious elements in a new manner. The duty of our Church is to help to free these restrained forces in their struggle for expression, and at the same time to saturate the consciousness of the unchurched mind with the spiritual content of whole faith of which that mind has some slight portion.

I am afraid that our Church will never do this by a mere effort to extend geographically, and to occupy feebly an increasing number of towns and villages. These may be contact points, but they have failed in the Middle West to be sufficient to reach the unchurched. They need the reinforcement of a mightier central dynamo.

One of our disadvantages is the multiplication of weak mission stations, which exhaust the resources of the diocese and the strength of the bishops and only in rare instances blossom into strong centres of work. This Church must touch humanity at the points of richest contact. If the energy and money now enlisted in carrying out intermittent efforts in small and already overchurched communities, where we at best succeed in glossing a veneer over a few lives whose interior is already saturated with denominational influence of some sort, if that energy and money were put into our great education centres, in places where the current of life runs full and strong, where we can fight battles, and not engage in skirmishes, I believe that we should find the Church growing in power.

The problem of our Church is likewise to make the whole body of people familiar with all the essentials of Christianity, irrespective of any further effort to enrol them in our ecclesiastical household. We must capture their thinking and captivate their imagination.

The unchurched must first be persuaded to think of Christianity and the Church as an essential aid to their living. The unchurched must be taught to know the fundamental idea of God as living and loving, of Christ as saving and healing, of the Church as the place of joy and service.

How are we to do this? To put the matter in a modern form, it is a matter of publicity. The attention of the masses must be gained. Their thinking must be enriched by the simplest of fundamental truths.

The teaching functions of the Church must be strengthened. But that teaching must not be confined to those already within our influence, but must be directed toward the people who now distrust the churches. Magazines of wide circulation, newspapers and other popular mediums must be the means, if it can be done, of bringing to the minds of the unchurched the best thought of the Church, expressed in dignified but simple language. People's difficulties must be met by a courageous admission of the presence of those difficulties and their obstructive influence in preventing people from Church affiliation. A "mission" to the readers of the Nation is as much needed as a "mission" to the hearers of the Nation. Who will arise and write the "best seller" that will be defensive of the faith, and will be as much read as novels that are critical of the faith?

Some say that it is impossible. The world has not found it so. The world has often achieved it. If our aim is really the conversion of the world we must achieve it, too. It will require wisdom, wealth, and work, but it may be done.

I have written to one hundred ministers asking of their work, and from their replies I have gleaned that a shadow of despair has fallen upon them. They feel that present methods are inadequate to meet present conditions. Have we no untried methods? I venture to suggest that we have. Fantastic as it may seem to you, I wish to suggest but one of many which might seem to avoid the usual obstacles confronting us when we try to approach the masses. You may consider me a dreamer or an enthusiast, yet I shall venture to speak. May I say, in extenuation of my boldness, that for twenty years I have served one parish, situated most favorably for growth in the midst of a large population of the best American type, and with every possible advantage of equipment. For, during twenty years, I have tried every method which seemed possible to propel the Church. Yet I feel that the result is not commensurate with the effort because I have been compelled to strive for one thing, to mould men and women to a system. It has been a case of individual education in almost every instance. The masses, the unchurched, seem not to have been touched at all.

So I do not speak from insufficient experience when I venture to commend to your attention an experiment in attempting to charge the minds of the unchurched with some sound religious content that in the course of time might impregnate the popular consciousness.

Let us face the facts. Countless people do not like to go inside the church buildings. It requires some courage, for they know not what they may face, what unexpected approach, what appeal for money, what wearisome discourse. A crowd will stand for an hour listening to a street speaker while in the same block a comfortable church will be empty. People see farther than the distance at which they can hear. I should like to see erected in the heart of one of our large towns an open chancel, without a nave; a spacious, well-lighted, flag-bedecked and joyous chancel, perhaps like a Greek portico, opening onto a large area on a street corner. I should like to see simple services conducted in that chancel, with bright music and familiar hymns. Every passerby could see the picture, could stop, if he wished, could stay as long as he wished and no longer, could stand as near as he wished and no nearer. To each one who stopped an order of service should be given, and also a manual with the principles of religion clearly and plainly set forth. There should be a short robust sermon. The joy, the helpfulness and the desire and the faith of the Church should be presented. I know the objections. Weather and cost. But the objections should be met and overcome. Such an effort would free the Church from the suspicion of being a small group of highly trained specialists, dressed in their best clothes, gathered in a more or less privately controlled structure, indulging in a complex worship.

This suggestion may seem to you the vagary of an enthusiast. My next possible suggestion I dare not even speak of. It would seem madness. But the need is so great that any method deserves a passing appraisal.

The Church in the Middle West has the hardest task that ever confronted a band of Christian men. But by the help of God a way will be found, a method discovered, by which she will become equal to the task.

When we are tempted to despair, when the substitutes for the religion of Christ, in whatever form they may present themselves, would tempt us to compromise with them, even as Sanballat and Tobiah, and Geshem of old, tempted Nehemiah to leave the work of building the walls of Jerusalem and to meet them in the plain, so we, each one of us, bishop, priest, layman, must answer as Nehemiah answered, "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down".

Epiphany Vespers in the Greatest Cathedral in the World

By THE REV. MELVILLE K. BAILEY

TO one who for thirty-five winters has never missed a wintry Epiphany in a church where the pine and the fir and the box tree rejoiced together, it was a super-seasonal contrast to stand on Epiphany at the edge of the Grand Canyon of Arizona just as the rays of the setting sun were level with its upper rim. The pine and the cedar had, indeed, made a processional up from the high plains. Now the colors of sunset blended with the rock hues to produce falling lights and cross lights surpassing those which De Amicis describes as the glory of St. Sophia. The profound and rich solemnity of the mass of colors was the more compelling impression. Of man's conceptions of religious expression the cathedral is the greatest. But before us lay a long street of cathedrals. In a manner it suggested pictures of the rising mass of the monastery at Lassa, the Buddhist capital of Tibet. The cathedral street lay there six thousand feet deep to its pavement. On the right side four great cathedrals stood, foundation by foundation. The architectural plan of each was clear. Over the main porphyry walls hung a great bronze-green roof. From this rose the clerestory in light plum color. Upon this sat the belfry in rose sandstone and clay yellow, roofed low. On the left was a church of the same plan, save that a side chapel clung to its walls, which if any architect of men shall repeat it will make him famous above all builders forever. Relation of mass to slope can never be dreamed better. Beyond stood the ruin of the greatest. That was the chief temple, walls and belfry standing, but the roof open as at Tintern. Beyond that was one sublime sanctuary, imposing as the rest.

Men have not yet learned how to build. When they see that nature does not use horizontals or perpendiculars or arcs or planes or spheres, perhaps they will know how. Till then the cathedral street through the great canyon with its incomparable solemnity will outrival all.

As it did Epiphany evening, till Hesperus drew an altar veil of rose and gold across the West, while day swept out with trailing chasuble, and night with her invisible taper kindled all the vesper lights of heaven, to the recessional of what Ignatius called "The Silences of Christ".

NO one is safe until he learns not to dally with temptation but to repel it immediately and instinctively with fierce indignation. . . . Christ's perfection of character does not come from inability to sin, but from ability to conquer.—Fosdick.

The Woman Movement and the Deaconess—I

By THE REV. EDWARD L. PARSONS, D.D.

THE feminist movement of modern times concerns itself primarily with the status of women "in general". The suffrage, the equalizing of property and marital rights, the opening of all educational opportunities, the doing away with artificial standards of conduct are examples of aims which touch the condition of practically all women. On the other hand, the equalizing of the general conditions of women's life brings to the fore the interests and needs of special groups. Among these the workers of course take first rank. The economic independence of the worker is sought; and wherever the work is of the kind which is known as "professional" or is related to a profession, a standing is asked which shall be of the same kind as that accorded to men.

This professional standing is much more difficult to secure than is the opportunity to acquire training or to do the work. It was many years after women had secured the right to study medicine before the profession or the public could take them seriously. In the development of the nursing profession everyone was glad enough that women should have some special training. They always had nursed the sick, for men were not much good at it, and a little more knowledge would be a help. But to let them learn was quite different from according them professional standing. The effort to acquire such standing and to raise the work to a real profession has met difficulties all along the way. There are still people who do not see any real difference except in dress between the graduate of a first-class hospital and the kindly motherly soul who came in to help our grandparents in emergencies because she loved to coddle people and make them comfortable. But there is a difference and a great one.

The modern woman demands that where that kind of difference exists, a difference of training and efficiency, as well as of self-dedication, it shall be recognized, just as it is among men. The trained nurse is now securing a definite professional standing in relation to society which is quite of a kind with that accorded to the medical profession. The woman social worker is no longer a woman who has a little spare time to visit the poor, or because of private means can devote herself pretty constantly to "good works". She is a woman with a university training, a graduate of a school of philanthropy, and she expects that whatever professional standing be given to a man for that kind of work shall be given to her.

Women want professional training and they exact from the public the recognition in a definite, tangible way, such as is given to men, of the service which that training makes possible. The woman movement brings with it the entrance of women into numbers of professions chiefly belonging to men, the creation of new professions largely belonging to women and the growing refusal of women to give their life service after training upon any other basis.

The Episcopal Church has to meet the same problems. The status of women "in general" in the Church is quite clearly an unsettled problem; but one which not even our most optimistic conservatives (a generously large group among us) can hope to settle by ignoring. Women vote in many parishes through the country and almost universally in the far West; they serve on governing committees in many small missions, but I have not heard of them on vestries (except in China). They certainly are delegates in some diocesan or missionary district councils, but practically such bodies are made up of men, as are entirely provincial synods and General Convention. In a few dioceses the House of Churchwomen has filled a greatly useful place, and the province of the Mid-West has lately adopted the plan; but so far these houses have no legislative power and the question of the scope and lines of their evolution is by no means answered.

In education and social service the women work with the men, although the G. B. R. E. includes them only on its co-operating councils. In missions the women have their own woman's organization and there is great divergence of opinion as to whether they should be on the Board or not. The discussion of Recommendation 6 makes it plain, however, that some new status is soon coming to the women in that work. In all this the Church is in much the same general position as the rest of society. In the organization of society as a whole we see how far things have gone. We know that some things, such as the suffrage, are coming. We know that some other things are coming; but we do not know just what is coming or when or how.

The Church is quite as uncertain of its ground and perhaps far less responsive to the forward movement when it comes to the matter of woman's professional standing. In the early Church, although there was no "woman movement" to agitate the matter, the democratic spirit of Christianity on the one hand and on the other the restrictions upon the social relations of men and women led quickly to the establishment of definite groups of women officially serving the Church. Of these at least the deaconesses, an order which grew to large importance, especially in the Eastern Church, received the most solemn recognition of their standing. Deaconesses were ordained by the laying on of hands; and their ministry was widely, if not universally, accepted as analogous to that of the deacon. In the Middle Ages the monastic life challenged every earnest and devout woman who desired to give herself to the service of the Church, and thus again, although there was nothing in the social situation which forced to the front the question of recognizing a professional standing for such women, that end was practically achieved. The nun was regarded as definitely consecrated to the Church just as was the monk.

But the life of the "religious" community is gone forever as a means of meeting any large social needs or responding to any great social movement. It is gone because the conception of the world is gone upon which it was based. We are no longer pilgrims in an evil world; but God's children in a world which He meant to be beautiful and wholesome and full of joy. For practical ends a man or a woman may choose the celibate and community life, but only the abnormal person would consider such a life normal, and there must be few left among us who attach any special religious value to the "counsels of perfection".

Sisterhoods are doing noble work among us. The Church would be the poorer if deprived of their work to add to the richness and variety of its ministries. They meet also the special needs of certain women, just as religious orders do those of certain men. But, while we want them in the Church and ought to give them the utmost freedom to expand and serve their special ends, the point I make is that they serve only special ends. They cannot meet the larger social movements of today. As a practical matter, also, the community life and the obedience to the Church through the order makes the Sisterhood difficult of adjustment to the needs of ordinary parochial work.

The "religious" ideal cannot today do for the Church what it did in the Middle Ages. The deaconess order offers us the only natural modern means of meeting the need. But before suggesting some of the ways in which the order can be developed to do so let me first comment on the kind of demand which is made upon the Church. The demand is that the women who desire to give their lives to the service of the Church shall hold a position in the Church somewhat analogous to that of the clergy. It is not primarily a question of "orders" in the theological sense. Determinations of that kind can wait. It is that these women shall be recognized as constituting a definite ministry in the Church, entitled to the same consideration, the same kind of safeguards and protections, both canonical and educational, and the same kind of opportunities for training which are accorded to the men.

To be concluded.

The Quest for El Dorado*

By THE REV. ARTHUR R. GRAY, D.D.

I WELL remember being fascinated years ago by a book on the world's great delusions, and since the subject has continued to be of interest to me I picked up with avidity Dr. Zahm's new book on The Quest of El Dorado. The author's name likewise attracted me, since he had for some time been known to me, his Along the Andes and Down the Amazon having been responsible, I believe, for my first enthusiasm for those dauntless adventurers who endured so much three hundred years ago—more or less.

The book before me is well worth reading, as might have been expected, despite its unbecoming brevity. For though Orellana and Quesada and Pizarro and Aguirre and that German, born out of due time, Philip Van Hutten, and Raleigh—equally agile in casting cloaks before ladies and preposterous legends before would-be adventurers—though all these men are told about one can't help wishing it had been a bit longer so as to give Dr. Zahm's descriptive power a better chance. However, he has packed a lot of information in his two hundred and fifty pages and we thank him for the book.

Apparently the author would have us believe that the story which the Wandering Indian from Bogota told Belalcazar about the gilded man was not entirely a myth. You remember it, do you not? Namely, that in a certain kingdom the ruler was wont to appear in public clothed in gold—the method of investiture being that his naked body was covered with a viscous earth on which was overspread a generous coating of gold dust—the inference being that where gold was plentiful enough to do this it was—but enough said.

As I animadverted, Dr. Zahm believes that there may have been truth in this tale. Referring to those who scout the story Dr. Zahm says:

"Holding such views, they naturally find fault with Humboldt for having spread broadcast the error, as they regard it, concerning the connection between El Dorado and Lake Guatavita—an error, they assert, into which the great German savant was led by conceding undue authority to what the historian of Granada, Bishop Piedrahita, writes on the subject. Plausible as they are, however, the reasons of these writers for rejecting the testimony of such veracious and conscientious chroniclers as Fresle, Padre Simon, Castellanos, and Piedrahita are far from conclusive, and most readers who will take the trouble to consult what these four writers have to say on the matter in question will, I think, agree with Humboldt and be satisfied that the accounts given of El Dorado by the early chroniclers named are founded on facts that can not be gainsaid."

As one goes deeper into this subject and reads how later on the same story, with embellishments pianissimo and forte, was given out with regard to Lake Parime, and then how the scene was shifted to the fabulous city of Manoa—when one learns the different places whereof the legend was told, one cannot help doubting the truth of the tale about Guatavita. Still stranger things have happened in lands whereof the archeologists love to tell, and the gold investiture may have happened once and thereby set tongues awagging.

However, the real interest in the matter is not centered about the truth or falsity of the legends, but in the bewildering deeds which men accomplished in pursuit of the ignis fatuus. As Zahm reminds us, Herrera said: "I do not believe that any of those who took part in the expedition would have taken so much trouble to get to Paradise."

In another place he estimates that Gonzales Quesada's hunt cost the equivalent of two millions of our money, a sum of vast proportions before the insolent Teutonic power worshipers started us thinking in billions. Surely never in the world was so much money and blood and bravery thrown away on a dream. The first expedition of Columbus cost, say, about $60,000; whereas, when De Vera appealed in Spain one hundred years later for money wherewith to find the fabled golden king the people and court poured money on him at such a rate that when it was counted he was found to have seventeen times as much as Columbus had had. Moreover, so many people volunteered to go that La Mancha and Estremadura and the Kingdoms of Toledo and Castile could have been depopulated. Spain was El Dorado loco, all of which shows how the accomplishment of an impossibility (discovery of the new world) turned men's heads and changed the thought atmosphere four hundred years ago.

And after all is said it seems to me that there was as much reason for believing the legend as Columbus ever had for his faith in a way to the Indies, or as Cortez had for his belief in the wealth of the Aztecs, or as Pizarro had for his trust in the story of the Inca's gold. Aye, more, it was but an Indian's tale which led Balboa across the isthmus, and all of those myths came true! So far be it from us to laugh at those fortune hunters' credulity.

The only one of the lot who went too far was Raleigh—his report being unqualified rubbish. Whether he was sincere or not, whether he really believed Juan Martines who claimed to have spent seven months in the city of Manoa, and who said that it was so vast that "he entered the citie at noon and travelled al that daie til night thorow the cities and the next daie from sun rising to sun setting ere he came to the Palace of the Inga"—whether Raleigh really gave credence to this we shall never know. Suffice it to say that the Englishman out-Spaniarded the Spaniards in his credulity and filled the world with never-to-be-forgotten balderdash about the mythical El Dorado.

It seems to me that this search for the city of the gilded man is a parable. Given the experience of the first conquistadores there was good reason for the adventurers to push forward in search of El Dorado. Where they erred was in not sticking to the text, in branching out into unwarranted fields, and in believing blindly everything which they heard as they went along—no matter how much the newer tidings conflicted with the old. Even thus have scientists of the last seventy-five years been led astray. They began with certain reasonable, empirical suspicions and launched out boldly into the deep in search of truth—but like the El Dorado hunters they have been led astray as they have got deeper and deeper into the forest, until now they believe about as many wild things as Raleigh's Ewaipanomas, "whose heades appeare not above their shoulders; which though it may be thought a mere fable, yet for mine own parte I am resolved it is true". In many ways empiricism leads men into bogs, and the simplicity of some empiricists is, considering their training and advantages, no less extraordinary than that of Quesada or Philip Van Hutten.

To those who want a good account of the legend of El Dorado I can commend most heartily this little book of Dr. Zahm.

INTERNATIONAL POISON IN HEARST PUBLICATIONS

Sidney L. Gulick Condemns Propaganda Aimed at Japan

NEW YORK CITY.—The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ of America has sent out for publication the following statement by Sidney L. Gulick, who has lived for thirty years in Japan, and is now serving as secretary of the Commission on Relations With the Orient of the Federal Council:

"The pernicious doctrine sedulously instilled for two generations into the rank and file of the German people, asserting the intrinsic superiority of their race, religion and Kultur and prophesying that they and their Kultur are to secure world domination by military prowess, has been the chief cause of the present world tragedy.

"A similarly pernicious doctrine of 'white race superiority' is being sedulously instilled into the minds of the American people. Its advocates talk continuously of 'white race world supremacy' and the 'inevitable conflict of the white and yellow races for world dominion.' This propaganda is preparing us for another world tragedy. If this psychological poison is not overcome soon enough by the appropriate anti-toxin, it is not difficult to foresee what the future has in store for the world.

"The latest injection into the veins of the American people of this international poison is a two-column editorial in a recent edition of the New York American, from which the following quotations are taken. The editorial is no doubt reproduced in all the Hearst papers throughout the United States, which are more widely read by the rank and file of our people than any other papers in America:

"'Americans * * * must be deeply alarmed by the success of Japanese diplomacy and the situation created by that diplomacy.

"'We do not know whether there is a danger of the Japanese joining with Germany which makes our Government so considerate of Japan, or whether our Government is merely unsuspecting of the very obvious designs of Japan. * * *

"'It is a thousand times more dangerous to the United States to have East Siberia fall into the hands of Japan than to have it in the hands of the Bolsheviki, or even to have it fall under the influence of the Germans. * * *

"'What is to protect the United States itself from the attack which the then great Oriental nation, embracing China, Japan, Korea and Eastern Siberia, may launch upon us? * * *

"'The war in Europe, hideous as it is, is merely a family quarrel compared to the terrible struggle that will some day be fought to a finish between the white and the yellow races for the domination of the world.

"'The only battles (of the past) which count are the battles which saved white races from subjugation by the yellow races, and the only thing of real importance today is the rescue of the white races from conditions which make their subjugation by the yellow races possible. * * *

"'The great problem with which the white races have to deal is the inevitable and irresponsible (irrepressible?) conflict of the white races with the yellow races for the dominion of the world. * * *

"'Is it not time that the white nations settled their quarrels among themselves and made preparations to meet their one real danger, the menace to Christianity, to Occidental standards and ideals, to the white man's civilization, which the constantly growing power and aggression of the yellow races continually and increasingly threaten?'

"Are the abominable writings of Bernhardi, Treitschke and the whole cabal of Pan-Germanists any more damnable and fundamentally destructive than those quoted above? Wherein does the doctrine of 'white race superiority' differ in arrogance from that of a 'Teutonic superiority'? And is the brand of Christianity of which the last paragraph speaks a religion peculiar to the white race and its God particularly concerned in their victory over the world?

"The true antidote for this poison is a campaign of education promoting fair dealing, honest statements of facts and constructive legislation. We should remove the humiliating conditions we now impose upon Asiatics. By such measures America can win the lasting good will of Asiatics and make of the alleged 'yellow peril' a golden opportunity for the practice of genuine Christianity."

NATION GAVE $415,000,000 FOR CHURCHES LAST YEAR

About $21,000,000 Was Given for Foreign Missions

The American public last year paid out $415,000,000 to support the work of its churches, synagogues and other religious institutions, according to the annual report of the Church News Association issued last week. The report also states that $76,500,000 was contributed by the Nation for work among enlisted men, this sum including the fund raised by the Y. M. C. A. The war, according to the report, has resulted in economy in church building and less than $25,000,000 was spent in construction and equipment, as compared with amounts ranging from $45,000,000 to $60,000,000 in previous years. About $21,000,000 was devoted to foreign missions. Besides these sums, the report says that the United States contributed $420,000,000 to charities.

Discussing the general work of the churches last year the report says:

"War years are apt to be religious years. They have proved such in Italy, where Quirinal and Vatican are co-operating as they never did. It is so in France and in England. It is so in the United States, where the Bible trade increased $200,000 the first two months after we really got into war and where one standard book on prayer reached a sale of 275,000 copies.

PENSION FUND TRUSTEES' FIRST ANNUAL MEETING

Plans Made for Efficient Use of $8,750,000 Gifts

The trustees of the Church Pension Fund had their first annual meeting on December 18, 1917. Information concerning this meeting has just been issued officially.

The trustees found that they had at their disposal cash and subscriptions amounting to $8,750,000. Through the merger of the General Clergy Relief Fund with the Church Pension Fund they also had at their disposal about $450,000, coming from the General Clergy Relief Fund, and of which only the income and not the principal can be used. They also have at their disposal $350,000 coming from the $5,000,000 Commission appointed by the General Convention of 1907, of which the Rev. J. J. Wilkins was financial agent.

The trustees acted as follows: They set apart the $450,000 coming from the merger with the General Clergy Relief Fund as a perpetual fund, the income of which should be used toward carrying the grants also taken over from the General Clergy Relief Fund. Eventually, when these grants are extinguished, this amount of $450,000 will remain as a separate fund, the income of which will be used as heretofore by the General Clergy Relief Fund.

They also set aside in a perpetual fund the $350,000 received from the former $5,000,000 Commission of 1907, to be used according to the intent of the donors. That is, the trustees of the Church Pension Fund have set aside the money which came into their hands through the various mergers, as separate funds, only the income of which is to be used, and that income according to the intent of the donors.

This left their own initial reserve of cash and subscriptions amounting to $8,750,000 to be disposed of. The trustees first set aside out of this $5,064,000 for accrued liabilities. It will be remembered that the trustees asked originally for $5,000,000 for this definite purpose. Accrued liabilities are the amount necessary, and in this case it is both principal and interest, in order that the present active clergy and their families may receive the minimum pensions. There left $3,750,000 in subscriptions at the disposal of the trustees.

The trustees found that, while they have received over from the General Clergy Relief Fund $450,000, of which the interest only is available, the cost of carrying the present grants of the General Clergy Relief Fund is approximately $2,000,000. They therefore created a guaranty fund entitled "The General Clergy Relief Fund in Liquidation", consisting of $2,000,000. Therefore the present grants of the General Clergy Relief Fund are put upon an absolutely safe basis.

As the beneficiaries of the General Clergy Relief Fund die off, this guaranty fund will be released. It is then to form a permanent capital in the hands of the trustees, the

AIDING ENLISTED MEN TO ENTER ANNAPOLIS

Seamen's Church Institute Provides Free Instruction

Special arrangements to aid the enlisted men of the United States Navy to prepare for examinations to enter Annapolis have been made by the Navigation School of the Seamen's Church Institute of 25 South Street, New York City, according to the announcement made by the superintendent, the Rev. Dr. Archibald R. Mansfield.

The naval regulations provide that youths who are less than twenty years of age and have been for a year in the United States Navy may ask permission to take the examination for entrance to the Naval Academy. Of those who pass, the first one hundred are eligible for appointment.

Applicants must have in general attainments the equivalent of what would be required for the beginning of the second year in the average high school course. The Navigation School of the Institute prepares students along technical lines for the taking of the examinations. It offers to give information concerning text books, to furnish the books at a merely nominal profit, and to form classes in view of the next examination, April 15 of this year. The school is also organizing special courses of two weeks each for advanced candidates and arranging for a correspondence class.

The institute since the first of last December, in co-operation with the United States Shipping Board, has been instructing sailors in navigation, so that they may take their examinations for officers' certificates. The great merchant fleet which is being built will require many captains and other officers. Of the eighty-seven who entered this course eighteen have already passed their examinations and received licenses as second and third mates. By special arrangement with the Government instruction in this course is free.

The Navigation School of the Institute has also many students in its own private classes who are preparing themselves for the service of their country. Among these are many business and professional men, most of whom have for years been interested in yachting and water sports of all kinds. They are studying to pass the examinations for master so that they may be well qualified for positions either in the United States Navy or in the Naval Reserve. Among those in this division are also several applicants for aviators' licenses who are learning the uses of the compass and gaining other information.

Captain Robert Huntington, an experienced navigator, is the principal of the school, and he is assisted by four instructors. The school is open on week days from nine o'clock in the morning to four in the afternoon and from seven to ten o'clock on Monday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings. On certain days practical instruction is also given on the steamship "J. Hooker Hamersley".

Interesting Boys in the Ministry

New York City.—At the General Theological Seminary the students have followed the example of the men at the Philadelphia Divinity School in organizing an informal club for those boys in the City of New York who are thinking of the ministry. Perhaps it would be more accurate to say that the point of organization has not been reached, and many question the wisdom of becoming so formal.

The Seminary students who knew of boys in New York parishes who were considering the ministry invited the boys to Vespers and supper at the Seminary. After a half hour of entertaining the boys in students' study rooms the group met in the gymnasium for brief talks by some of the Seminary men. A second meeting of a similar nature has been held, at which Dean Fosbroke addressed the boys. About fifteen boys have thus far been drawn into the circle.

come of which will enable them to extend the benefits of the pension system.

The trustees of the Church Pension Fund are desirous of relieving the dioceses of the necessity of continuing to appeal for money to carry the present grants of the diocesan funds. They therefore are arranging mergers with the diocesan funds, two of the greatest dioceses in the country having already asked for such mergers. To accomplish this object, the trustees created another guaranty fund of $1,000,000 in order to carry the present diocesan fund grants when mergers are accomplished. This $1,000,000 will eventually be released, as the beneficiaries of the present diocesan funds that are going to be merged die off. The $1,000,000 will then be added to the similar $2,000,000 released from the guaranty fund provided for the General Clergy Relief Fund, the income similarly to be used in extending the benefits of the pension system.

This left at the disposal of the trustees the sum of $750,000. Of this amount $500,000 will be necessary in carrying the grants of diocesan funds that were taken over by the Church Pension Fund under agreements made prior to the inauguration of the pension system. The remaining surplus of $250,000 is, of course, too small to dispose of.

To sum up, it will be seen that the trustees of the Church Pension Fund have used the overflow which the Church has placed at their disposal for three purposes:

First, so as not to render it necessary to touch in any way the principal of money coming over from the General Clergy Relief Fund or the $5,000,000 Commission of 1907. Second, to enable the present grants of the Church to be placed on a perfectly solid basis and to enable the cessation of appeals from diocesan funds for money to pay their present beneficiaries. Third, to create eventually through the release of the guaranty funds necessary to carry out the previous purpose, a permanent fund of $3,000,000 to extend the benefits of the pension system.

That is, the $8,750,000, which the Church generously placed at the disposal of the Church Pension Fund trustees, has enabled those trustees not only to inaugurate a pension system as originally planned, but also in the future to have a separate account similar to the old General Clergy Relief Fund, only with a capital six times greater than that which the General Clergy Relief Fund had been able to accumulate.

The Church has, therefore, through its generosity during the 1916 campaign, not only created a solvent pension system but also, at the same time, provided for doing exactly what the General Clergy Relief Fund used to do, only on a more adequate financial basis and also on a sound administrative basis.

WORK FOR COMMON GOOD AND SERVE THE NATION

Mr. Melish Says All in Parish Should Deserve Stars

Brooklyn, New York.—In a recent sermon the Rev. John Howard Melish, who has recently returned to his work at Holy Trinity church, emphasized the glory of the right sort of war service on the part of those who remain at home.

"When the nation faces a supreme issue every citizen is either finely touched or remains an unshaped block or a lifeless stone," said Mr. Melish. "The late John Fiske wrote in 1861, when he was a college student: 'What fools people make of themselves about this confounded war! Why, I forget there is a war half the time. What's war when a fellow has "Kosmos" on the shelf and "Faust" on his table?' But after Lincoln's Proclamation of Emancipation Fiske wrote: 'What a splendid thing the President's Proclamation is! I am really enthusiastic about the war now. I feel as if we were fighting henceforth with an end in view. I am studying the war hard, strategy and everything.' Fiske had been finely touched, and was thereby fitted to serve his nation as one of its greatest historians.

"In the coming months of fiery trial and sacrifice every man can put into his task, whatever it may be, the high motive of national service. What is your task—growing food, mining coal, making things, investing dollars, rearing a family, educating, guiding, helping the youth? You can perform that task either in order to get your living out of it or as a contribution to the common welfare. If you do it for your living you serve yourself; if you do it for the common good you serve the nation. The miner keeps the nation warm, the architect roofs the nation over, the farmer feeds the nation, the physician keeps the nation well, the manufacturer clothes the nation's body, the teacher trains the nation of tomorrow and the preacher of unwelcome truth serves the nation that is to be. Let any one of these vital factors fail to serve and the nation fails.

"It always makes a mighty difference in our lives whether we live to get or to give. But in times of fiery trial and sacrifice like these the difference is as between good and evil, truth and falsehood, heaven and hell. It is well to put a star for every one engaged in national service upon some flag. But let us remember that these conspicuous servants of the State can do their part only because the many inconspicuous men and women behind them are doing their several parts. The true service flag of any parish, city or nation ought to have as many stars as there are men, women and children within it. 'Blessed are the valiant that have lived in the Lord. Amen, said the Spirit.'"

'ADESTE FIDELES' SOUNDS THROUGH VILLAGE STREETS

How American Troops Celebrated Christmas in French Town

How the American troops stationed in one little French village helped to celebrate Christmas is recorded in a letter written to a clergyman of the Episcopal Church by his son. It follows:

"La France, Le Jour de Noel, 1917.

"Dear Father:

"We are simply rushed to death with work and training, but I must write you this Christmas day.

"Being adjutant of the regiment I have charge of the band. This morning I got them out early to play, as was the custom in the old army in the Garrisons. This is a little town of some four or five hundred people. It is placed in a little hollow among low rolling hills. This morning was cold and clear and beautiful.

"Everything was very still, and I gather not so unlike that little town two thousand years ago. And early in the morning through the streets of this little village, there came the sound of 'Adeste Fideles', that beloved song of all ages, and 'Joy to the World'.

"The wondering and sleepy-eyed inhabitants could look out and see soldiers of a far-off land telling them that Christ was born again. It was beautiful. The hymns worked on my mind, 'The Little Town of Bethlehem', 'It Came Upon a Midnight Clear' and all the old Christmas carols I could remember.

"Then, after breakfast in the morning, Captain J. and I had a little service of our own. I knew that at ten o'clock you would be preaching in some great church there, with vaulted roof, full choir and crowded worshipers. In our room here we had our own little service. We repeated as best we could 'The Lord Is in His Holy Temple', the Confession, such chants as we could remember, the Creed and the Benediction and some Christmas hymns, albeit haltingly and stumblingly as you used to say of Paul, but here truly.

"Then I arranged a morning concert by the band. Overture from 'Semiramide', 'Aida', 'Traviata', 'Joy to the World' and ended up with 'The Hallelujah Chorus'.

"It was stunning. In the afternoon we had in the little Roman church here a big Christmas tree and presents for all the children. The priest very kindly lent us the church. We procured an enormous tree all decorated. The soldiers had each given a franc, making in all nearly 2,000 francs, so we were able to buy a little something for all the children. It was lovely. There are lots of little refugee children in all these little towns from parts of France still held by the Germans. And they all got warm clothes and some little toy or candy.

"I thought of my brother when we had our little service. He is always the one to be doing things like that. But this time it was the weaker brother. I have not always been, perhaps, but I am now and shall always be in the future a Churchman. I found myself going around to all these peasants in the village and saying, 'Jesu Christ est né encore'.

"You know me perfectly well and I am not the kind who would ordinarily do that. But over here I know He does live. He is with us here now, with the soldiers, stooping down to us, helping us, comforting us. He is here with us, I know. This is His war.

"And He is over there with you, Father, and He tells you of me perhaps. I knew this morning that you were preaching the word of God to the people there in America. And I could picture the great church, all white with snow and the choir boys and the 'Te Deum', the 'Venite' and the 'Jubilato Deo,' and I knew as you preached you were thinking of me. There was no doubt in my mind, I knew at that moment you were thinking of me. And now I know your spirit is with me here, too, to guide me, sustain and comfort me.

"Well, I may not come home. Those that take the sword must perish by the sword. I like to think now—am I justified?—that we are modern crusaders, that although we wear the modern uniforms there is over each heart the cross of the crusaders.

"Twenty miles from us on very still days you can hear the noise of the guns. And very soon now we shall be there, carrying right nobly, I hope, the white cross of God. Are we not, my Father, fighting that there may be peace on earth, good will to men?"

At Service of Social Worship, Christ Church, Springfield, Illinois

Springfield, Illinois.—"From Slidertown to South Park," the story of the redemption of a community, was the film picture given at the evening service of Social Worship at Christ church, January 20. It is an illustration of various community activities in the suburb of South Park, Dayton, Ohio, of the efforts to create a community spirit, and the results achieved by the enthusiasm of social activity.

The Rev. Lester Leake Riley, rector of Christ church, was challenged recently on the use of such religious terms as redemption, conversion and salvation as applied to communities, and in reply said: "The more closely we observe the co-ordination and concentration of social activities, especially through the present pressure of war demands, the more do we begin to realize the truth that our poets and prophets of all ages have been telling us that we have another life here on earth that is a community, even a national life, that is lived in common and that determines many of our activities and tendencies, because it has a conscious directing life of its own. To speak of such a life you must use these terms of spiritual experience, because this community can only be understood as a spiritual organism and with a spiritual experience akin to the individuals that we can only express intelligently by speaking of the soul of a community, as we now use so frequently the expression, the soul of America."

C. M. H. Annual Meeting

New York City.—The annual service of the Church Mission of Help will be held in Trinity church, Sunday, February 3, at 3.30 p. m. Preacher, the Rev. John Mockridge, D.D., rector of St. James' church, Philadelphia. The offering will be devoted to the work of the society.

WORK AT LEPER COLONY DEFENDED BY MISSIONARY

In Answering Criticism He Gives a Striking Picture

San Juan, P. R.—In a recent issue of El Tiempo appears a letter by our missionary, the Rev. Harvey P. Walter, giving a vivid picture of the work of the Episcopal Church for the Leper colony. It was written in answer to certain criticisms, and says:

"The article, both in Spanish and English in the Times of Saturday, January 5, about a visit to the Leper colony by certain persons, does a great wrong to many charitable persons and societies, which have remembered our afflicted brethren out on the reef during the entire year. In justice to them, please say that a representative of the Episcopal Church goes to the Leper colony twice a month. The Church has not failed once during the year 1917.

"Only twice, so far as I can remember, did I go empty handed. During the year I received four boxes, valued at considerably over $100 from different parishes in the States for the lepers. At Christmas every patient and every helper, fifty names and fifty packages were supplied. Each package contained at least four articles. In addition to these individual gifts, there were games, rupe de las cabezas, pictures, checker boards, etc. Miss Jackson supplied each one with a 'stocking' of candy. Mr. Linn Bartholomew sent over 500 oranges. With one consent, they said it was the best Christmas they ever had. And it would have been better yet, but for the unfortunate drowning of the Jeffe. He was coming to San Juan to get the milk and Christmas tree. And while I was to hold the Christmas service, he was to put their parcels on and around it, light it up and then sing a carol or two and call out the names. Everybody was to be there—cook, washer woman, cleaners, helpers. All were there and their names were called but we did not have the tree and we were all distressed on account of the accident, but otherwise we had a 'Merry Christmas' indeed.

"During the year, Mr. T. P. Lippitt furnished several bags of pineapples, Dr. Smoyer gave them five gallons of honey, Gilles & Woodward furnished pipes, the American Tobacco Co. and Temple Lodge of Masons in the States kept them supplied with tobacco the entire year, Hermanos Real and the Boletin Mercantil gave books and magazines, forming the nucleus of a library, Swiggett Brothers, an umbrella to a man who wanted one badly, Plaza Provision Company, candy; others have given me candy, cakes, chewing gum, tobacco. In fact every time I take a visitor with me, I tell the passage will cost them a treat for the patients, and how cheerfully it is given!

"You will see from this partial list, for I cannot remember all the donations, that our wards on the little island have not been forgotten nor neglected during the past years by the kindly disposed people of San Juan and vicinity, and it is cruel to make the charge in view of what has been done and given for them.

"However if some charitable society or societies wish to take up this work and supply them regularly with services, I am ready to hand back my commission to the sanitary department any time. There is nothing in it but the joy of service."

FINDS CHURCH IN WEST FULL OF WAR ENTHUSIASM

Melville K. Bailey Writes of Los Angeles Church Club Dinner

The Rev. Melville K. Bailey, vicar of the Chapel of the Holy Spirit, New York, who is spending the winter in California, has sent to THE CHURCHMAN the following description of a Church club dinner in Los Angeles: The Bishop of Los Angeles gave the closing address, reviewing in most genial and winning spirit the history of the diocese during the twenty-one years of its independent existence, and supporting the war drive and the cause of the Allies with all the eloquence and authority of his position.

Charming music was furnished by the choir of All Saints', Pasadena, and the program was admirably carried through by the presiding officer, Dr. A. S. Lobingier.

Taken altogether, it was an intensely interesting evening, and an inspiring manifestation of the position of California in the great war.

The enthusiasm for the meeting itself was notable. The banquet hall provided this year was larger than last, yet could not accommodate all who applied to Mr. E. D. Williams, who had charge of arrangements.

The next characteristic to attract attention was the fact that it was a war meeting from beginning to end. This was in accord with everything I have heard in the West. Like many others in the East, I had heard the question, "Has the West waked up?" Now, from Chicago to Los Angeles my impression has been of the undivided zeal of the West, and I have never attended any Church meeting so exclusively and intensely devoted to winning the war as that of the Church Club in Los Angeles.

The Rev. Dr. George Davidson, whose parish service flag has 113 stars in it, made a most eloquent and fervid appeal for raising the war drive apportionment, showing himself thoroughly acquainted with practical conditions in the cantonments.

Major E. G. M. Cate, who was with the Canadian forces at the Somme and Vimy Ridge, who is now convalescing, gave a detailed account of his personal experiences from his enlistment to his relief for recuperation. It was most instructive, and received with that kind of applause which indicates resolute purpose to support making "the world safe for democracy".

Henry Lewis Morris Dies

NEW YORK.—Henry Lewis Morris, one of the most prominent Churchmen of this diocese, died at Atlantic City on Tuesday, January 8. Owing to enfeebled health he had recently resigned from the vestry and as warden of St. Bartholomew's church. The following appears in the Year Book of St. Bartholomew's parish which is just printed:

"Henry Lewis Morris rendered to St. Bartholomew's parish long and valued service. He was a warden of this parish for more than twenty years and a vestryman for many years before that. He represented this parish in the Diocesan Convention and on the Board of Trustees of the Cathedral. He was also a deputy from this diocese to the General Convention for a number of years. All the honors of the Church were bestowed upon him but he repaid them by wise counsel and faithful service."

Mr. Morris was for many years a member of the Board of Missions, on the Seamen's Church Institute, and many other boards and committees. He is survived by Mrs. Morris and one son, who is in the service and about to sail for France.

LARGE SERVICE FLAG FOR UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH

To Hang With Tattered Sewanee Flags of Other Days

SEWANEE, TENNESSEE.—A monster service flag, bearing some 300 stars, one for each of Sewanee's men now enroled in the world war, is being prepared and will shortly be hung in All Saints' chapel at the University of the South to keep company with the stained and tattered war flags of other days.

And while the big service flag is being made, a movement is on foot over the university campus to send another ambulance unit to France, the first having already arrived and gone some time since into the thick of service.

The new flag, which is being given by a Sewanee alumnus, will not have a mere numeral in its center to indicate the number of Sewanee men that have responded to the country's call. There will be a separate star for each man and space left, probably, for the addition of new stars.

The stars will represent not only the scores of men whose active connection with university was interrupted by the call to arms, but will also represent the alumni, a complete list of whom is now being drawn up by Chaplain Henry D. Phillips.

The service flag probably will be hung before Easter, and an imposing religious service will be arranged to mark its dedication. Plans for the new ambulance unit are moving slowly, but indications are that with the arrival of early spring its organization will be well under way.

BOSTON PARISH ACTS FOR BUSY MOTHERS IN CRISIS

Opens Parish House When Coal Famine Closes Schools

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—St. Stephen's church has a happy reputation for community service which combines the intimate and the practical. A temporary bit of service of just this sort is a rebuke to some of us who do not see the opportunities of acute crises quickly enough to act effectively. While many of the Boston schools were shut down last month for want of coal, St. Stephen's opened its schoolroom in the parish house for its own and other children during every morning, thus relieving busy mothers of the necessity of caring for their children at a time when they would ordinarily be in school, and giving to some of the children the chance of a warm room which their own homes did not possess. The women of St. Mary's Guild were in charge each morning and the time was spent in games and work. The children were furnished with a substantial lunch in the middle of the morning. ing.

ALLIED NATIONS SERVICE ATTENDED BY 1,200 PEOPLE

Hundreds Turned Away From Grace Church, Orange

ORANGE, New Jersey.—More than 1,200 people attended a patriotic service of the Allied nations, held Sunday evening, January 20, in Grace church, and fully 500 others were turned away when it proved impossible to accommodate them. Hundreds were obliged to stand throughout the service.

Explaining that the issue is whether the world is to be ruled by force or by the great ideals which are interwoven with the highest principles of civilization, Bishop Stearly, who preached the sermon, declared that it is necessary not only for the young men to respond to the call for service, but for "each of us remaining behind to play our part well, to do our bit with money, influence, words and works".

Delegations from patriotic and fraternal organizations in the Oranges attended, and the Allied Consuls and the British and Canadian Recruiting Mission in New Jersey were represented.

With impressive ceremony the flag of each Allied nation, with attendant escort, was received separately, while the appropriate national air was sung by the vested choir. The American flag was the first received, and after William H. Zickler, a member of Grace church, who is in the navy, carried the Stars and Stripes to the front of the church, the salute to the flag was given by Earle A. Miller, commandant of the Washington Guards.

Following the singing of "The Star-Spangled Banner," the emblems of the Allied nations were received and when all the standard bearers had gathered around the national emblem the congregation joined in singing the "Battle Hymn of the Republic".

While the congregation knelt in silent prayer for individual soldiers, their families and loved ones, "Come, Ye Disconsolate" was sung by the choir.

With the Washington Guards as an escort of honor, the delegations marched into the Church, and at the close of the service the procession of flags was led by the choir and clergy.

GIFTS AND MEMORIALS

The will of Miss Callie M. Mayo has just been probated in Brooklyn, New York. She leaves to St. John's church, Ft. Hamiltou, New York, five hundred dollars. To St. James' church, Boardman, Ohio, five hundred dollars. Miss Mayo was organist of St. John's, Ft. Hamilton, for over fifteen years and of the Sunday school of Christ church, Bay Ridge, for several years. She was buried from the latter church. The Rev. Bishop Falkner, rector emeritus, and the present rector, the Rev. Mr. Fitzgerald officiating. She was buried in Greenwood December 14. She was a devoted Churchwoman and a lovable character.

Death of the Rev. Franklin Babbitt

NYACK, NEW YORK.—The Rev. Franklin Babbitt, rector of Grace church here for fifty-six years, who had held only this one pastorate since his ordination to the ministry, and who built the present Grace church edifice, died on January 24.

HUNDREDS HONOR MEMORY OF PHILLIPS BROOKS

Boston Observes 25th Anniversary of Great Preacher's Death

Boston, Massachusetts.—Clergymen of the Episcopal Church, clergymen from other Protestant Churches, and men distinguished in the political and educational life of New England were present in Trinity church, last Wednesday afternoon, January 23, at the special service commemorative of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the death of Phillips Brooks, late Bishop of Massachusetts, and rector of Trinity church from 1869 to 1891.

The 1,600 seats in the nave and the galleries were occupied, and approximately 400 men and women who arrived immediately before or shortly after the service began were standing. The service, which was arranged and directed by the present rector, the Rev. Alexander Mann, D.D., was impressive, and the commemorative sermon, preached by the Rev. Leighton Parks, D.D., rector of St. Bartholomew's church, New York, was listened to with deep interest.

Governor McCall, President Emeritus Charles W. Eliot of Harvard College, Mayor-elect Andrew J. Peters, who is a member of Trinity church, and other prominent citizens occupied pews at the front of the nave. Among the especially invited clergymen who were seated in the chancel were three who were present at the funeral of Bishop Brooks—the Rev. George A. Gordon, D.D., of the Old South (Congregational) church, the Rev. James DeNormandie, D.D., of the First church in Roxbury (Unitarian), and the Rev. James Reed, D.D., of the Church of the New Jerusalem (Swedenborgian).

The Rev. Dr. Reed and one other minister who was present yesterday, the Rev. James K. Hosmer, D.D., were classmates of Bishop Brooks at Harvard in 1855.

In the procession of clergymen, theological students and choir members at the beginning of the service were Bishop Lawrence, Bishop Babcock, Bishop Page of Spokane, Washington, who attended Trinity church in his youth; Dean Rousmaniere of St. Paul's Cathedral, Dr. Endicott Peabody, Principal of Groton School, the faculty and eighteen of the students of the Episcopal Theological School, the standing committee of the Diocese and the cathedral chapter.

The clergy of the Diocese sat in the chancel. The Rev. Dr. Mann was assisted by Dean Rousmaniere and by the assistant ministers of the parish, the Rev. Reuben Kidner, who was on the clergy staff in the days of Dr. Brooks, and the Rev. Gabriel Farrell. The hymns, sung by the full choir of men and boys, were those sung at the funeral of Bishop Brooks.

Dr. Parks, who was rector of Emmanuel church, this city, when Dr. Brooks was alive, made reference, as he approached the conclusion of his sermon, to the events of the present day.

"It was preaching," said he, "that became the medium through which his (Bishop Brooks') rich life revealed itself to his fellowmen. We have known none like him. None like him shall be seen, because like every genius he was primarily the interpreter of his time. The time has gone and he has gone, but God lives and a new messenger will come to prepare the way of Christ.

"Yet we cannot leave him without wishing we might know how he would feel about the storm now raging all over the world and of the prospect that awaits those who live to land on the shore of the new world which will appear when the waters of the flood abate. Of the first we can have no doubt.

"He would not have been of doubtful mind as if the Master, who placed the kingdom of God first and blessed those who hunger and thirst for justice, could have meant His disciples to turn the other cheek to the ravisher of Belgium and the pirate of the seas. Nor would his righteous indignation have degenerated into hate. He would have gloried in the thought that the liberty for which we fight shall be enjoyed also by the victims of autocracy.

ANGLICANS AND EASTERNS HOLD BRILLIANT SERVICES

Association Has Important Meetings in New York and Brooklyn

The tenth annual meeting of the Anglican and Eastern Association was held in New York and Brooklyn Sunday and Monday, January 20 and 21.

Sunday morning was devoted to visitation of the Orthodox Churches by members of the Episcopal Church. The Rt. Rev. Edw. N. Parker, D.D., bishop of New Hampshire, attended by the Rev. T. J. Lacey, Ph.D., visited, presented greetings and made a brief address at the Armenian church in New York City, where the Archbishop of Galatia was officiating; to the Greek church of St. Constantine, Brooklyn, where the Archbishop of Antioch was officiating, and to the Syrian cathedral, Brooklyn, where they were received by Bishop Aftimus of the Syrian Church. At the same time the secretary, the Rev. W. C. Emhardt, attended the Greek church of the Evangelismos, New York City.

During the afternoon and evening the Anglican members acted as hosts. Evensong was sung at Trinity church, New York. The sermon was preached by Bishop Parker. Closing prayers of intercession for the President and people of the United States were sung by the Most Rev. Germanos, metropolitan of Selephkias and Baalbek and acting archbishop of the Syrian Antiochan Church in North America. Many of the Anglican members were in the procession.

In the evening a special service was held in the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, in commemoration of the deliverance of Jerusalem. The Archbishop Germanos again sang the closing prayers in the quaint Syrian tongue. The sermon was preached by the Bishop of New Hampshire, and an address was made in Armenian by the Most Rev. Archbishop Papken of Angara, Galatia, and interpreted by Mr. V. Kirkjian of New York.

The evening service was held in the Greek church of the Evangelismos, New York City. Vespers for the dead was sung by the Rev. Nicholas Lazaris, assisted by the Greek choir. A brief service of

WASHINGTON'S CHURCHES ARE ORDERED CLOSED

Two-Thirds Stop Services on Fuel Administrator's Demand

Washington, District of Columbia.—There was great surprise in Washington when the evening papers of January 24 announced the closing of two-thirds of the churches of the city for three weeks, beginning January 27, by order of the local fuel adminstrator. The Bishop at once called a meeting of the clergy, January 25, at the Church of the Epiphany, which was largely attended. The general opinion prevailed that the order was a mistake, that our people need prayer, instruction, Communion, all that brings them to God and God to them, in critical times. But patriotism demands obedience. Accordingly a motion was passed unanimously to open for those three weeks but sixteen of the forty-eight churches and chapels of our Communion in the District of Columbia, and requesting the Bishop to appoint a committee of three to determine those to be opened. The three appointed were Dean Bratenahl, Canon DeVries, and W. M. Lewin, Esq. Later they selected the sixteen to be opened and notified the Chapter and the press.

In certain cases where the support is entirely provided by free will offerings, this closing order will work great hardships. Other Christian bodies made provision for obeying the order, and the amazing condition is to be found in the Capital of the Nation, overcrowded with war workers and visitors, that two-thirds of the religious worship and activities are suspended by State order in the full tide of the season's work under powers given by vote of the clergy.

A committee including Dr. McKim (Chairman), Dr. Roland Cotton Smith, Dr. C. Ernest Smith, Dean Bratenahl, and the Rev. C. E. Buck, drew up and published in the papers the following resolutions, adopted in substance at the meeting, as the mind of the clergy of our Communion in Washington:

"Resolved: That as patriotic citizens we will abide by the order of the Fuel Administration closing two-thirds of our churches the next three Sundays. In doing so, however, we put on record our profound conviction that the Church of God is the most important agency for creating the spirit which is essential for the winning of the War and that in the condition in which we are now placed public worship of God is of supreme value to our country. We also desire, with great respect, to register our protest against the closing of the churches of God Sunday, while permitting places of amusement to be open that day. To our thinking it is not in the interest of patriotism or morals, nor will it conduce to the spirit requisite to success in this great struggle in which our country is engaged, that theatres, movies, poolrooms, bowling alleys, concerts, and dance halls, and vaudeville shows should be permitted to remain open six days in the week, while two-thirds of our churches are ordered to close their doors on the Lord's day."

STUDENTS ADOPT VIGOROUS POLICY AT NORTHFIELD

Conference Enlists 200,000 in Study of Christian Principles

The program adopted by the students at the recent conference in Northfield indicates the reaction of the War upon the young men and women of the United States now studying in colleges and universities. The program is summarized as follows:

1. 200,000 students enlisted in study and discussion of Christian principles, as seen in the life and teaching of Jesus Christ, and of the need of these principles in the nation and world today.

2. A call for decision to live these principles at whatever cost, on the campus, in the Nation, in the world.

3. An adequate number of qualified men and women for the foreign missionary program of the Church.

4. Half a million dollars for the foreign missionary program of the Church and such funds as may be necessary to meet the need arising from the war situation in 1918-1919.

This program, it is hoped, will conserve and make practical the results of the Student Friendship War Fund, to which last Fall the students of North America subscribed a million and a half dollars.

Northfield, which has seen so many student conferences, entertained this, its most important one, January 3-6, 1918, which took the place of the Quadrennial Student Volunteer Convention, postponed on account of war conditions. Over 800 college delegates were present. The purpose was to consider the altered world situation which now confronts the Christian Church and to face the responsibilities and accept the obligations which this situation puts upon the colleges in their relation to the Nation and the Kingdom of Christ throughout the world.

The addresses were the most statesmanlike and constructive ever delivered to a similar group of students.

CHURCH REPRESENTED AT COLLEGE CONFERENCES

Meetings in Chicago Plan to Follow Up Northfield Program

Rev. Paul Micou, secretary of the Collegiate Department of the G. B. R. E., represented the Church at the following conferences at Chicago: "The annual meeting of the Council of Church Boards of Education, January 8-9; a joint conference of Y. M. & Y. W. C. A. college secretaries, state University pastors and secretaries of boards of Education, January 9-10; and the annual conference of the State University pastors, January 10-11.

The meeting of the Council of Church Boards of Education showed many forward steps undertaken in the direction of co-ordination of religious education in the colleges and universities. There is no question but that this Council has before it an increasingly important task. The joint conferences of the leaders of religious work in the colleges and universities spent its time chiefly in the consideration of how to make effective the program adopted by the students at the Northfield conference. The conference of state University pastors dealt with many points of vital interest in such work. At this conference Mr. Micou read a paper on the missionary significance of the War, bringing out especially those points which a worker among students needs to emphasize at this time.

There was held also in Chicago, January 10-11, the annual meeting of the Association of American Colleges. Representatives of over a hundred colleges faced serious problems occasioned by the War. The most interesting suggestion brought out at this conference was that there should be an educational administrator of the Federal Government, similar to the Food and Fuel Administrators. Dr. Lyman P. Powell of Hobart College read an important paper on "What our Allies expect of American Colleges".

SERBIAN ARCHIMANDRITE HOLDS CATHEDRAL SERVICE

New York City.—Sunday, January 27, was a notable day in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. There was a special service for Serbians conducted by Archimandrite Dabovitch, in St. Saviour's chapel, at 9 a. m., when the Liturgy of St. John Chrysostom was used, and a special offering for Serbian sufferers was taken. This service was especially timely on account of the visit to New York of the Serbian Commission and because the day was St. Sava's Day, the patron saint of Serbia.

At 11 o'clock the preacher was the Very Rev. Dean Robbins, and at 4 p. m. Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts told of the work which the War Commission of the Church is planning to do to supply chaplains and Church services for the men at the training camps and at the front. Offerings were taken throughout the country on January 27 to raise one-half million dollars to carry out this work.

Robert Edeson in Health Drama

New York City.—The fight against tuberculosis has graduated from the moving-picture house and is about to appear in this country on the legitimate stage, with Robert Edeson of Little Minister and Strongheart fame, in the leading role. The play, entitled Love Forbidden, is by Jacques Renaud and will be presented here under Lawrence Webber's management. It has had a seven months' run in Paris.

"It strikes out upon original lines", says Mr. Edeson, in commenting on his new role. "While it entertains it also edifies. It tells a charming love story and at the same time depicts a tremendous battle for health that has its outcome in a delightful victory. It portrays that our happiness depends upon ourselves and that we are the responsible architects of our own destinies. And I believe that this play is particularly pertinent now. It sounds a trumpet call to the forces of civilization to awake and vanquish an invisible enemy that is sapping our national strength."

Geneva Alumni Group Formed

Syracuse, New York.—The organization meeting of the Syracuse alumni of the Geneva Conference was held here on January 17 at Trinity church. The Rev. H. H. Hadley presided. Miss Lillian Moser was elected secretary. It was moved that an effort be made to send one person on a scholarship from Syracuse. Seventeen alumni and eighteen guests were present.

For Country

"You have done your bit; you must now do your utmost!"

THERE is a Presbyterian parson somewhere in New York State who can't trust himself to go to France as a chaplain because he knows that if he sees a German he can't help pitching into the fight, so he has decided to serve his country in this way. He has taken a position in a munition factory. He works there six days a week, and holds one service on Sunday. His congregation pays his salary as usual. He turns over to them his wages in the munition plant (which considerably exceed his salary) for a special war relief fund.

The War Commission has made an appropriation of $6,000 for the work of the Church at the military camps in South Carolina.

The G. F. S. in St. Louis is in active cooperation with the Y. W. C. A. at Jefferson Barracks, and everywhere Patriotic Leagues are being organized.

St. Margaret's Sunday school, Washington, District of Columbia, contributed $39.27 at its Christmas Festival for the Armenian and Syrian Relief. This Sunday school also showed its patriotism by voting that the money usually expended in candy should be used this year in purchasing war saving stamps.

The Rev. Julian D. Hamlin, rector of Trinity church, Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, has resigned his charge and has been appointed by the Bishop of Pennsylvania to army work at Camp Meade, Maryland.

The Rev. Byrle Jacob Osborn has been much embarrassed by a notice of his ordination which appeared in the War and the Church number of The Churchman, saying that he had entered the aviation service and had been ordained on January 20. Mr. Osborn writes: "I was not ordained to the priesthood on January 20 nor will I be before I go. If I come back whole in body I shall go on in my ministry and be ordained—providing my bishop will permit it."

The Rev. W. A. R. Goodwin, D.D., rector of St. Paul's church, Rochester, New York, is spending the weeks before Lent as special preacher for the Y. M. C. A. in the training camps in the South. Writing from Fort Monroe he says: "This is Tuesday. Since Sunday I have spoken eight times. The opportunity is very vital. . . . There are over 100,000 soldiers and sailors in this vicinity."

At Washington Irving High School, New York City, Americanism is the standard for everything. One of the pupils was recently interviewed by the head of one department relative to some slackness in her work. "What nationality are you?" the girl was asked. "American." Then her failure to live up to this standard was discussed in friendly fashion. She left the office with her head held high and the words "All right, I'll be it".

"Of the signs of the times in this land we may not be so sure how he would feel. We ask, 'What would this great individualist, whose work was done in an individualistic age, do now?' We pause. 'Perhaps it was best that he died when he did. Perhaps he could no more have met the demands of this new life than Moses could have settled the people in the Land of Promise.'

"Yet this seems an impotent conclusion in the remembrance of a life so vital. I cannot think it. I believe he would have delivered his message in different form perhaps, but still bearing witness to that without which no rearrangement of society will avail. 'Men change,' says Goethe, 'but man remains the same.' The new prophet to the new age must begin with the word of an ancient prophet: 'All souls are mine, saith the Lord'—otherwise the socialism which is to replace the old liberalism will be as impotent as the Bolsheviki.

"Individual initiative, individual responsibility, individual value is the pearl of great price and the new age will need a prophet of the soul even more than did the age of Brooks. May such a prophet have his faith—his love—his abounding hope—ever renewed and reinvigorated by communion with Jesus Christ—the one power in humanity which, amid all the changes and chances of this mortal life, is 'the same yesterday, today and forever.' That was the faith of Phillips Brooks. That, too, is our faith, and from it grows our confidence as we gaze into the portentous future that 'as God was with our fathers so will He be with us'."

intercession for unity and peace, in English, was sung by the Rev. W. C. Emhardt, assisted by a choir composed of boys from the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn, and students from the General Theological Seminary. The service was beautifully closed by the Greeks singing their National Hymn in response to the American National Anthem; and the choirs singing in turn the Greek and then an American Epiphany hymn.

Luncheon was served by the ladies of the Church of the Redeemer. After luncheon the annual business meeting was held. A program of constructive work for the coming year was adopted; and the following officers elected: Presidents, the Rt. Rev. Edward M. Parker, D.D., and the Very Rev. Leonid Turkevitch; vice-presidents, the Rt. Rev. James H. Darlington, D.D., and the Rev. Nicholas Lazaris; treasurer, Mr. Chas. G. Saunders; secretary, the Rev. W. C. Emhardt, Newtown, Bucks County, Pennsylvania; additional members of the Executive Committee: the Rev. T. J. Lacey, Ph.D., the Rt. Hon. Solon I. S. Vlasto, exarch of the Greek Church, and Mr. Samuel F. Houston.

NEW YORK

Day of Intercession—The annual day of intercession at the Church Missions House takes place Friday of this week. Prayers for "the mission of the Church, in this time of bewildering opportunity, for the propagation of the Gospel, for the welfare of the workers and the safe return of the President of the Board" are offered throughout the day by the workers on the staff. The business of the office proceeds as usual, but one after another of the secretaries, clerks, stenographers and other members of the staff go to the chapel each for his appointed watch. I remember going into the chapel one year to find the minute office boy so absorbed in his intercessions that he did not yield the watch to me until my time was almost over and the next worker due. In some years the staff have given their share of the One Day's Income at the Communion service on the Day of Intercession. In fact it was in the Emergency Fund year that the custom originated. The Communion service is at nine, and the intercessions continue until five. At noonday prayers the address this year in Bishop Lloyd's absence is by the Rev. Dr. Gray.

Some Meetings—This is the season of many meetings and special services. Last week Dr. Teusler told some of Deaconess Knapp's friends of her work in Tokyo at an informal meeting at Mrs. E. Walpole Warren's house. On Wednesday night of this week the Church Club held their regular monthly meeting with an address by Major Francis Russell Stoddard, Jr., of the Ninth Coast Artillery on "How Germany Makes War", to which they invited ladies and non-members. The Lords of the Manor had their annual service on Sunday last at Trinity with Bishop Perry as preacher, and the Colonial Dames their service at Grace church on the same day. The Church Mission of Help is to hold its annual service on Sunday next, February 3, at 3.30 p. m., at Trinity church, with the Rev. John Mockridge, D.D., as the preacher.

Trinity Chapel—The organization meeting of a Men's Club was held at Trinity chapel on Sunday night, January 20. About thirty-five men had supper in the parish house and banded themselves together with Vicar Sutton as chairman and Mr. Henry L. Hobart as vice-chairman. Inasmuch as the regular Wednesday night Lenten services for the united parish will not be held in Trinity parish this year, mission services for Wednesday nights in Lent have been arranged by the clergy of Trinity chapel to be held in the schoolhouse. The vicar will conduct a quiet day on February 22. He also expects to give a course of lectures on Church history for the students of Hunter College.

The Seaman's Church Institute—The seventy-third annual meeting of the Board of Trustees was held at the institute last week. The following interesting statistics for 1917 were presented:

Amount of seamen's wages received for safekeeping and transmission, $533,459.24; number of lodgings registered, 192,778; number of meals served, 446,852; pieces of mail received for seamen, 41,705; pieces of dunnage cared for, 38,844; number furnished with employment, 5,168; sales at soda fountain, 276,124; total attendance at all religious services, 16,421.

Bishop Rhinelander Praises Army Spirit—The splendid spirit of brotherhood inculcated into all classes of young Americans by army life was emphasized by Bishop Rhinelander in an address at the Diocesan Educational Day exercises in the Church house. He said a revolutionizing process is going on among young men, and the Army is proving to be a splendid melting pot from which a higher type of Americanism will emanate. "Those soldiers, sitting side by side, rich and poor, educated and uneducated, are creating a fellowship such as they never before realized. This sudden disappearing of artificial differences is giving our boys a new experience and a new brotherhood."

The Bishop to Lecture on "Religion in Wartime"—Bishop Rhinelander will deliver four lectures on "Religion in War Time", Thursdays, January 24, 31, February 7, 14. The titles are as follows: "The Lord of Hosts vs. the War God", "Devil's Work", "War in Heaven", "Democracy Made Safe in Christ's Commonwealth". These lectures will be given at St. James' church, twenty-second and Walnut Streets, at 8 p. m. Supper will be served in the Guild House before the lectures on each evening, that those from a distance may stay in town.

SPRINGFIELD

Blizzard Stops Services—The blizzards of the past two weeks snow-bound the entire diocese and interfered greatly with church attendance and all Church work. In many places no services could be held on two Sundays, January 6 and 13. The Bishop was unable to make his appointments on the 13th on account of no train service and was fortunate in being at home instead of snowed in on some railroad train.

Largest Christmas Offering—The largest Christmas offerings for the Orphanage of the Holy Child ever made in the diocese are reported from many parishes and missions, and the canon requiring the Christmas offering to be made for this purpose seems to have been more generally obeyed than ever before. There lately seems to have been a great awakening of interest in this, the only charitable institution of the Church in the diocese. The Orphanage has done a splendid work in the past and is still filling an important place and doing a blessed work for girls, of whom there are now fifteen under the excellent care of Sister Geraldine. The institution has all the modern improvements, and there is a small endowment which, with the contributions for the parishes and missions, entirely supports it. It is regularly inspected by the State officials, who have given it a high place on the roll of such institutions. There is room for about twenty girls, who are taken at the age of five years and supported until they are of age. All the children attend the public school. The rector of St. Paul's church is the chaplain and the children attend the services at St. Paul's.

Death of Prominent Layman—Trinity church, Lincoln, and the diocese have suffered a severe loss by the death of Dr. Reuben Neal Lawrance, who was for nearly twenty-five years senior warden of Trinity parish and lay reader for almost half a century. The doctor died on January 8 of pneumonia after a short illness and was buried from the church on January 10, the rector, the Rev. John C. White, officiating. He was twice wounded during the Civil War and was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. He was grand prelate of the Knights Templar of the State. The funeral was one of the largest ever held in Lincoln.

Service Flag Unfurled—The rector of Trinity church, Lincoln, recently blessed and unfurled a service flag of twenty stars, the number of Trinity boys gone to the front.

Evangelistic Work—The evangelistic work at St. Elizabeth's Hospital is carried on mainly by Chinese. Our Biblewoman, Mrs. Sung, does personal work in both wards and dispensary. She also visits the Municipal Jail each week and calls on ex-patients in their homes.

Miss Guei, a graduate of St. Mary's, who is now teaching at the McTyeire School, conducts Sunday school for the hospital children who are able to walk or be carried to the chapel. After Sunday school she repeats the lesson to the patients in the tubercular ward.

Miss Sih, also a graduate of St. Mary's, gives religious instruction in the wards on Sunday mornings. Miss Wei, another of St. Mary's girls, comes two afternoons a week to the hospital to instruct the children.

Evangelistic work in a hospital is necessarily very superficial, as very few of the patients are with us more than a few weeks. We can only hope to give them a glimpse into Christianity as lived by the doctors, nurses and other Christian helpers.

Nanking—We had a fine national anniversary, Morning Prayer and sermon with a national hymn and flag raising afterwards. There was a splendid congregation and in the afternoon a congregation "social" with a football game and sports. Last Sunday we gave the congregation an opportunity to help the Tientsin flood sufferers and they subscribed over $20, ranging from two cash from one of the orphan girls up to $5.00. I think this was really a splendid offering considering the size and means of our people.

Zang Zok—A former student in Epiphany Girls' school in Soochow has opened a day school in the country to the west, in her home. Her home is on a farm, in a thickly settled silk culture region. Christian farmers of the neighborhood have contributed $12 to help her buy an organ for the school. The pupils are paying tuition, making a small income for the teacher. The Educational Association of this county has established a lecture bureau, with a young man from the Normal school of Soochow in charge. At the first of the lectures, held under the auspices of this bureau, the foreign missionary here was invited to make an address. The lecture hall is in the new city library, a new building of western style, costing about $12,000. The audience was mainly of young and middle aged men, teachers and those interested in schools. Looking at these men one realized that progress and reform have some intelligent backing amonst the people.

For the second time within the year we have gathered the former students of St. John's in this city for a social hour, and we found the young men responsive and appreciative. In older parishes the St. John's men have done so much to establish the Church; in the future it may be they will take a like part in the Church here.

Zi-Z—In the country, to the east, at the town of Zi-Z, our catechist, resident there, has gathered a Sunday school of sixty pupils from the primary schools of the town. He takes them in two successive classes on Sunday afternoon, in the mission hall.

Day Schools for Girls—The Day Schools for Girls of the Shanghai District are nineteen in number, located in sixteen cities and towns. Four have been opened in the last two years. The total enrolment for 1917 is 560. A curriculum of study was drawn up, making uniform examinations possible semi-annually. This course of study covers seven years. All the schools have the four lower primary grades and five have the upper primary as well. The tuition ranges from a dollar (Mex.) a term to five, depending upon the location and upon the ability of the pupils' families to contribute toward the expenses of the school. The pupils vary in number from twenty to eighty in a school.

In all the schools sewing is taught. Where possible, cooking, marketing, housekeeping, the care of children and home hygiene have been given, to fit those who are to have homes of their own.

SYRACUSE

Red Cross Work—Mrs. Charles Fiske, wife of the Bishop Coadjutor of Central New York, has become executive secretary of the Committee on Civilian Relief of the Syracuse Red Cross and with two assistants is caring for the large philanthropic work of the district for the families of enlisted men. Mrs. Fiske has been chairman of the Extension Committee of the Red Cross for Syracuse and the County of Onondaga and now that the work of organization is completed has taken up the new work for which her previous study of philanthropy and her experience in associated charities work specially fits her. The Syracuse membership in the Red Cross has now reached over 42,000.

Mayor's Inauguration—Syracuse had for the first time, this year, a formal inauguration of its mayor and Bishop Fiske presided at the ceremony which had been arranged by the allied clubs of the city. The Bishop made the principal address and representatives of various business clubs also spoke. Afterward there was a procession to the city hall, where the mayor took the oath of office. The president of the city council declared that the Bishop's address had shown such keen insight of municipal affairs and so high a conception of civic duty that he asked him to accept the position of honorary chaplain of the council, which body formally elected him to the position.

WALTER E. JONES.

UTAH

Bishop Jones in California—Bishop Jones has stored his furniture and with his family will spend the next few weeks in Southern California awaiting the action of the special session of the House of Bishops.

Convocation Meeting—The Eleventh Convocation met at St. Mark's cathedral, January 30-31. Bishop Touret of Western Colorado was the preacher and also ordained the Rev. S. C. Clark, Jr., to the priesthood.

Church Plant Nears Completion—The first unit of the new plant for St. Paul's church, Salt Lake City, is nearing completion. This consists of a ten-room rectory and a large parish house. The church will not be erected until after the War, although funds are in hand for it. The completed plan shows the three buildings occupying three sides of a square. The half-timbered style with stucco finish, red tiles and field stone are arranged in pleasing harmony. The cost to date is $50,000.

Personals—Deaconess Frances B. Affleck, of St. Peter's mission in Salt Lake City, has been granted a six months' leave of absence and will spend the time studying at an Eastern school for deaconesses. Deaconess Phelps will spend half a year in Utah, studying our local conditions.

The Rev. A. George has returned to his old district and will take charge of the work of the "Coal Camps", Castle Gate, Helper, Kenilworth and Standardville, with his residence at Helper.

Mr. J. L. Cattron, for six years manager of St. Mark's Hospital, has resigned to accept a commission in the Army and is succeeded by Mrs. N. F. W. Crossland.

HOYT E. HENRIQUES.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

School Crowded—The Virginia Episcopal School, located near Lynchburg, opened up for work after the Christmas vacation with seventy-nine scholars present. Twenty-five applicants had to be declined for lack of room. Every nook and corner of the school is full and the health and general condition of the scholars are excellent, all starting in with vigor and enthusiasm. The new chapel is well under way and will fill a great need for this school. It is of colonial architecture matching the present large building and fitting in with the general scheme of the plan. The chapel will seat about 200. The temporary gymnasium has been completed and fills a great need at the school, especially during this prolonged bad weather. The new bridge spanning the ravine has been completed, and the new athletic field is under construction.

Religious Education—The Convocational Board of Religious Education met in Lynchburg on the 11th. The Rev. T. D. Lewis of Sweetbriar is chairman and the Rev. T. F. Opie of Pulaski, secretary. While the various branches of work were considered the Board devoted most of the time to discussing arrangements for the next Summer school to be held in Lynchburg in the month of June. The Lynchburg local committee are making preparations for this school and together with this Board are making timely provision as to the faculty and place of meeting with the determination to make this the best of Summer schools of Southwest Virginia.

Personals—Bishop Tucker has designated two of the diocesan clergymen to serve as voluntary chaplains, one at Camp Lee and the other at Hampton and Newport News.

The Rev. T. Carter Page of Bedford volunteered for work in the army Y. M. C. A. but it is not certain that proper arrangements can be made for this move.

HARRISBURG

Archdeaconry Meeting—The mid-winter session of the Archdeaconry of Williamsport was held in Christ church, Williamsport, Wednesday, January 16. With few exceptions all the clergy of the archdeaconry were present including the Bishop. The regular session was preceded by a laymen's meeting which was held in Trinity house. For years past this occasion has been attended by from three to five hundred men. Owing to storm conditions and uncertainty of trains the number this year was reduced to about a hundred. Splendid addresses were made by Mr. George E. Wendle on "The Nation's Relations to Its Industries" and by Mr. Harry S. Knight on "The Individual's Opportunity in the Economic Readjustment". America 1917, a hymn recommended by the Committee of Public Safety of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, was sung with a will, as was the Battle Hymn of the Republic. The Bishop made the closing address on "How to Win the Cross of Honor". St. Agnes' Guild of Trinity parish served refreshments.

The session of the Archdeaconry was chiefly characterized by an address made by the chancellor of the diocese, C. LaRue Munson, Esq., on "The Need of Men", and an address by the Rev. F. M. C. Bedell of Shamokin on "Securing Men for the Ministry".

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Archdeaconry met in Christ church synchronously with the Archdeaconry. At the special election Mrs. Stephen T. Hayt, Jr., was elected vice-president of the archidiaconal branch. Deaconess Newbold, missionary in Japan from this diocese, made an address.

BROOKLYN

Service in Interest of Negroes—On the first Sunday night in February at eight o'clock, in St. Ann's church, Brooklyn, of which the Rev. G. Ashton Oldham is rector, there will be a mass meeting held, in the interests of the Negro and the war. The Rev. Robert Patton will speak, as well as Mr. George Foster Peabody. A special effort will be made to interest the men of the different Long Island parishes in this. Extra music is promised, and the collection will be for the American Church Institute for Negroes.

The Juniors—The Junior Auxiliary held its annual meeting at the parish house of St. Bartholomew's church on Saturday, January 12. About 250 were present. Many parishes gave detailed reports and showed excellent work. One Sunday school, that of Grace church, has adopted the new Junior plan, and that of Christ church, Bay Ridge, and St. Paul's, Flatbush, have boy members as well as girls; these boys are doing their part by making toys for the Junior boxes, especially those sent out at Christmas.

The money report returns of Junior boxes covered sixteen months and showed a decided increase over other years, the result amounting to about $1,500.

They have sent $42.60 to general missions, $79.25 to specials, and $192.94 to miscellaneous objects.

Two missionary plays were well given: "The Sunset Hour", by the St. Matthew's branch, and "The Light of America", by the Church of the Ascension branch.

The Rev. W. M. M. Thomas, headmaster of the Southern Cross school, Porto Alegre, gave a delightful lecture, with lantern slides, on Brazil.

Fifteen Years Rector—At Church of the Redeemer, the Rev. Dr. Thomas J. Lacey preached a sermon January 13, reviewing his fifteen years of service in the rectorship of the parish. In the evening there was a special musical service and the rector spoke on the "Eastern Church; Its Possibilities and Outlook". This sermon was delivered by request in view of the annual conference of the Eastern Church Association, which convened here January 20 and 21.

MONTANA

Important Meeting—On Thursday, January 10, an important meeting of the Diocesan Board of Missions was held at the Bishop's residence in Helena. Five clergymen and three laymen were in attendance besides the Bishop. The missionary work of the diocese was carefully considered from the standpoint of the fields already being worked with their problems, difficulties and opportunities; and also from the standpoint of new fields where the opportunities seem great, but where from scarcity of proper workers and means for their support the Board felt they must wait. However, a resolution was passed and a committee appointed to inaugurate a campaign for a more aggressive missionary policy in the diocese, through the operation of which it is earnestly hoped that new work may be undertaken in some of the more promising fields. A resolution was passed adopting as a basis for the apportionment for general missions for the ensuing year 65 cents per reported communicant, and 6 per cent. on the amount paid out for current expenses.

Personals—The Rev. Ralph F. Blanning, formerly in charge of the Whitefish mission field, has been appointed to the Musselshell field with residence at White Sulphur Springs. He took charge of the work the middle of January.

The Rev. C. W. DuBoise, formerly of Centralia, Washington, has taken charge of St. Paul's mission in Butte.

The Rev. J. C. Evans, formerly a Methodist minister, but now studying for orders in the Episcopal Church, has been appointed to look after the missions in the Thompson Falls field and the Bitter Root Valley, under the supervision of the Rev. H. S. Gatley of Missoula, with residence at Hamilton.

S. D. Hooker.

BOSTON

Church Club Birthday—The thirtieth anniversary of the Episcopalian Club of the diocese was celebrated at its dinner on January 28 at the Copley-Plaza. Nearly all the charter members still living sat at the head table. President Coveney presided. The annual election of officers resulted as follows: President, Charles E. Mason, St. John the Evangelist, Hingham; vice-presidents, John Quincy Adams, All Saints', Brookline, and Stoughton Bell, Christ church, Cambridge; secretary, Irving P. Fox, Church of Our Redeemer, Lexington; treasurer, T. Nathanael Perkins, Trinity, Boston; chairman of the executive committee, Alexander B. Clough, St. John's, Jamaica Plain; members of the executive committee, Homer Lockwood, St. Peter's, Weston; A. Windsor Weld, Church of the Redeemer, Chestnut Hill; Joseph G. Minot, Advent, Boston; J. Franklin McElwain, Cathedral; Howard Whitmore, St. Paul's, Newton Highlands; Edmund Q. Sylvester, St. Andrew's, Hanover; William N. Kenney, St. James', Somerville.

The after-dinner speakers were the Rev. Ernest M. Stires, rector of St. Thomas' church, New York City, who spoke on "The Work of a Metropolitan Parish in War Time", and the Very Rev. Edmund S. Rousmaniere, D.D., on "The Work of the Massachusetts Cathedral in War Time".

More Service Lists—The following list of average-sized parishes in the diocese, with the present number of their parishioners in active war-service, may give a pretty clear idea of the proportion of our young men who have already entered the country's service and are thus taken bodily from the organized life of the parishes:

St. Luke's, Chelsea, 29; Our Saviour, Roslindale, 34; St. John's, Arlington, 4; St. Peter's, Jamaica Plain, 12; St. Peter's, Weston, 4; St. James', Somerville, 32; Christ, Quincy, 35; Grace, Medford, 29; Redeemer, South Boston, 25; St. Matthew's, South Boston, 20; Grace, South Boston, 30; Emmanuel, West Roxbury, 31; St. John's, Winthrop, 80. So far as we have had reports, this last parish—St. John's, Winthrop—has the largest number in service in proportion to its communicant list of any parish in the diocese.

A Devoted Layman—Mr. John Foyer, long-time warden of St. Ann's church, Dorchester, died on last St. Stephen's Day. He was known throughout his parish and beyond as one of the rare spirits of the Church—an indefatigable worker, a capable business man and a devout, catholic-minded Christian, whose whole heart was in the Church and whose unstinted loyalty went out to parish and diocese. Massachusetts will miss him.

St. Luke's Home—St. Luke's Home for Convalescents in Roxbury is an official institution of the Church in this diocese that is too little known. The purpose of the Home is to provide medical attendance, trained care and the surroundings of a cheerful Christian home for women and girls convalescing after serious illness. There is a nominal charge of from $3 to $5 a week, but no patient is ever refused who cannot afford to pay. Bishop Lawrence is president of St. Luke's, Mr. William H. Aspinwall of the Church of the Redeemer, Chestnut Hill, is treasurer, and the Rev. Frederic W. Fitts, rector of St. John's Church, Roxbury, and secretary of the Standing Committee is chaplain. There is an exceptionally beautiful chapel adjoining the main building of the Home where daily services are held, where there is always a Sunday and Holy Day Eucharist, with Evensong every Sunday afternoon. The matron at St. Luke's arranges with parish priests for the admission of women or girls from their parishes.

War Commission Offering—The whole diocese responded last Sunday to the appeal of the War Commission for generous offerings to make up Massachusetts' $90,000 quota of the Church's $500,000. In numbers of parishes there was a systematic campaign similar to an "every-member canvass", so that no one could remain in ignorance of the happy opportunity for doing his bit in the war work of the Church. Next week it should be possible to report the results of the diocese's efforts.

KENNETH RIPLEY FORBES.

PROVIDENCE

Miss Nancy Green Dies—The recent death of Miss Nancy A. Greene of Providence, in her eighty-sixth year, removes a Churchwoman of striking personality, who had been devoted to good works in the Diocese of Rhode Island for many years. She was one of the oldest communicants of Grace church, and her recollections of the parish ran back through many years. She had been treasurer of the St. Elizabeth Home for almost the entire thirty-six years of its existence. It is doubtful if there is another case in the American Church of a woman of her advanced years who administered such extensive corporation funds.

Clerica Meets—The Clerica, an organization composed of the wives of the clergy of the Diocese of Rhode Island, which has existed for several years, met on January 14 at the Bishop McVickar House with a good attendance. Mrs. Frank P. Harrington spoke on "Food Economics". Mrs. J. F. Scott was re-elected president and Mrs. A. M. Hilliker secretary-treasurer.

Bequest—By the will of the late Martha W. Fish, the Church of the Epiphany receives $1,000, the income to be used to perpetuate her annual subscription to parish maintenance. Miss Fish was in the first confirmation class presented by the rector, the Rev. Henry Bassett.

Noonday Brevities—Recent preachers at the noonday services at Grace church, for a week at a time, have been the Rev. Burnham N. Dell of Emmanuel church, Boston; the Rev. Charles A. Meader of the Church of the Ascension, Auburn, Rhode Island, and the Rev. L. A. Parsons of St. Paul's church, Newton Highlands, Massachusetts. For the purpose of coal conservation the services have been discontinued and the Church is not kept open through the day as heretofore.

SOUTHERN FLORIDA

Convocation Meets—The twenty-sixth annual Convocation of Southern Florida was held in St. Luke's Cathedral, Orlando, on January 8-10, with large attendance. For the opening service Evening Prayer was said by the Rev. Jas. H. Davet and the Rev. F. E. Alleyne. In place of a sermon Bishop Mann gave his annual address. The Holy Communion was celebrated by Dean Glass at 7.30 a.m. on the 9th.

An afternoon session was held at 2.30, and a forceful address given the Rev. L. G. Wood, field secretary of the Board of Missions, urging a diocesan forward movement for a general use of the duplex envelope system. The hearty approval of Convocation for such plan was given by a unanimous vote in favor thereof, the dates and other detail to be arranged by Bishop Mann in connection with the Rev. Messrs. Wood and Patton. The following are delegates to the provincial synod, which is to be held in Louisville next November: Clerical, the Very Rev. Jas. G. Glass, the Rev. C. E. Pattillo, D.D., of Tampa, the Rev. G. A. Ottman of Ocala and the Rev. S. F. Reade of Fort Pierce. Lay delegates: Messrs. L. H. Lothridge of Tampa, Captain George McConnell of DeLand, C. S. Crook of St. Petersburg, and A. D. West of Mulberry. The Bishop was authorized to appoint alternates should any of these delegates be unable to attend.

From 8 to 10 o'clock a delightful opportunity for pleasant social intercourse was given through the reception at Bishopstead, where Bishop and Mrs. Mann greeted all most cordially. The Holy Communion was celebrated at 7.30 a. m. on the 10th. Convocation gave hearty endorsement to plans for raising the $26,000 needful to complete the endowment fund which shall enable this district to become a diocese, the desire of the clergy being to accomplish this fund within this year in order to make the request for becoming a diocese at the next triennial General Convention, held in October of 1919.

On motion Convocation adjourned.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Annual Convention—The Annual Convention of the Diocese was held in Grace church, Manchester, January 15 and 16. Before the session of the Convention a conference was held under the auspices of the Social Service Commission, the Rev. Samuel S. Drury, D.D., chairman, devoted to discussion of the Church and Prohibition and the Church and Socialism. The two hours were crowded with interesting consideration of these subjects.

The business session opened in the afternoon, Bishop Parker presiding. The Convention met in the evening to consider the Church's Responsibilities Created by the War. The speakers were the Rev. Arthur W. Stone, chaplain, stationed at the Charlestown Navy Yard, and the Rev. Howard K. Bartow, Voluntary Chaplain at Camp Devens, Ayer, Massachusetts. The story of a day's work was a most absorbing narrative of personal touch with the enlisted men, convincing all who heard it of the great need and value of the work.

The Bishop was celebrant at the Corporate Communion Wednesday morning. Elections included the Standing Committee, the Rev. Dr. Waterman, the Rev. Dr. Drury and the Rev. W. Stanley Emery and Hon. R. J. Peaslee, Hon. Edward C. Niles and Edward K. Woodworth; the deputies to the Provincial Synod: Rev. Dr. Littell, the Messrs. Hazard, Brine and Niles and Messrs. R. J. Peaslee, E. K. Woodworth, George Cook, M.D., and W. A. Whitney; and the Board of Managers of Diocesan Missions, elected, under a new canon, for three, two and one years with certain restrictions as to re-election: the Rev. W. P. Niles, the Rev. A. M. Dunstan and the Rev. J. C. Flanders and Hon. R. J. Peaslee, J. Arthur Williams and H. H. Dudley.

The Military Committee made a report dealing with keeping in touch with Churchmen in the service, showing New Hampshire to have been a pioneer in the work such as the Church War Commission is now doing on a large scale.

A constitutional amendment distinctly affirming the principle of man suffrage in the Convention, tentatively adopted a year ago, was defeated this time and replaced by an amendment giving parishes the right to elect two women delegates and missions one. This was adopted and carried over to next year for final action.

So much difficulty was experienced by delegates in getting to the Convention on account of weather conditions that it was voted to hold the next Convention in May, 1919. The following resolution was adopted: That the Convention endorses the prohibitory law enacted by the last session of the Legislature and expresses belief that in view of our present state of war all individual opinions should be subordinated to the policy of prohibition, whereby we may strengthen the physical, moral and spiritual power of the State and Nation and conserve their resources, and that the Convention memorialize the President of the United States to use his discretionary powers to this end.

SPOKANE

Interest in Sunday Schools—An increased interest is being shown all over the district in the work of the Sunday schools and in some cases the Christian Nurture Series adopted. Two successful meetings of the Spokane clergy and their Sunday school teachers have been held this year at All Saints' Chapter House, the first being addressed by Bishop Page and the second by the Rev. Gilbert W. Laidlaw, rector at Pullman. In each case much interesting discussion resulted.

Five Deaneries—The district is now divided into five deaneries, the latest of which is the Spokane Deanery, which has taken the place of the former Clericus, and of which the Very Rev. W. C. Hicks, D.D., is dean.

Parish Improvements — Holy Trinity church, Spokane, of which the Rev. J. A. Palmer is rector, has undergone some extensive improvements and it is now one of the most churchly edifices in the district of Spokane. Considering the limited space it would be very hard to conceive a better arrangement than has been made, and much credit is due to all who had a share in the work of reconstruction.

New Vicar—St. Thomas' church for the colored people of Spokane has as its new vicar the Rev. M. J. Stevens of Epiphany Hillyard. The congregations are steadily increasing and the outlook is brighter now than for many years past.

Service Flag—St. Matthew's church, Spokane, has a service flag with nineteen stars and at every service the lads are remembered by name in the closing prayers, and the Ladies' Guild is doing what it can to make the parents of the boys interested in the work of the Church.

EASTON

Convocation Meets—The Southern Convocation of the Diocese held a two-day session January 8 and 9 at St. Peter's church, Salisbury, the Rev. Herbert D. Cone, rector. The sessions opened Tuesday evening with Evening Prayer and sermon by the Rev. Louis L. Williams, rector of Pocomoke. Wednesday's sessions began with an essay by the Rev. George M. Galarneau of Snow Hill, followed by a Celebration of the Holy Communion by Dean Sidney A. Potter, and sermon by the Rev. J. Vernon Ashworth of Crisfield. The afternoon was given over to a discussion of ways and means to increase the attendance at the evening services. The Rev. J. A. Brown of Spring Hill parish preached the sermon at Evening Prayer.

War Funds—The Rev. Henry Davies, rector of Christ church, Easton, and registrar of the diocese, is chairman of the War Commission Committee of the diocese. He is petitioning the parishes to accept a proportionate amount of the apportionment of $850 for the War Commission. A great interest is being shown in the diocese and the response is encouraging. He is also asking for a complete list of names of all enlisted men in the diocese to file as registrar.

ATLANTA

Debt Paid—The congregation of St. Luke's, Atlanta, are rejoicing in the fact that the last of the $18,000 debt against the church has been wiped out, and the building has been consecrated. The Church Guild raised over $10,000 of this amount. The church, which is very beautiful, was erected seven years ago.

The consecration services were conducted by Bishop Mikell.

A Striking War Sermon—The Rev. John Gass, formerly of the mission field in the Diocese of Mississippi, is now doing work under the auspices of the Army Y. M. C. A., and is at present stationed at the artillery range near Marietta. Mr. Gass preached a sermon on the importance of the Army Y. M. C. A. and the Red Cross work in St. James', Marietta. It made such an impression that the following Sunday the other churches closed, that all might hear the same sermon in the Methodist church. This was held at 11 o'clock.

English Church News

Christmas Sermons—The fourth War Christmas will be but a memory when these lines appear, but, as some of the things said by our leading London preachers are of more than transient interest, they may be here recorded. At Westminster Abbey the Dean (Bishop Ryle) dwelt on the fact that there had been no Christmas like that of 1917, when Christian soldiers had been keeping watch by night on the Bethlehem road. We had lived to see one of the most wondrous things of history: never more might Turkish rule blight like a miasma that fair place. Meantime we must face suffering as the Babe of Bethlehem did. At St. Paul's Dean Inge took occasion to condemn the "Cromwellian Christianity" which would like to deal with Berlin as Titus did with Jerusalem. The Dean then turned to the question of Christ's legacy of peace, and held that our Lord knew very well what kind of world He was leaving: he was not predicting the cessation of strife. However bad the times, a happy and holy Christian life is still possible: even if we have lost dear ones, nothing can separate them and us from Christ.

The Rev. R. J. Campbell, however, was the preacher who gave us the most original Christmas message. Our present aim is to get the wild-beast nature out of humanity. It was a sombre hour for idealists, "yet far from the fourth War Christmas having less of the Christ spirit about it, it has far more. That spirit reveals itself in deeds of heroism and moral beauty. The Christ Child is at war with the brute and devil in man, and we may be sure that He will prevail".

Still Discussing the Hereford Appointment—One might have thought that by this time there would have been an end to the discussion on Dean Henson's appointment, especially as there are so many weighty public questions to occupy us. But the Times correspondents are still hard at it. I fear it would only weary my readers if I summarized the letters. All the familiar signatures are turning up: the only exception, of course, being that of Dr. Henson himself. He for once is debarred from writing to the Times on a question of burning ecclesiastical interest. Everything that can possibly favor the appointment has been said with the utmost emphasis, and Dr. Henson cannot complain that full justice has not been done to him. The Church Times still publishes nearly a page of letters. The most important of these is from Canon Douglas Macleane (well known as a scholar and a writer on theological subjects), who quotes liberally from Dr. Henson's books to show his unsoundness. But his liberalism "is less pronounced, I imagine, than that of the Hereford chapter itself". Canon Macleane speculates on what will happen if the Chapter refuses to elect. In that case the appointment can be effected by letters patent from the Crown. It would then be for the Archbishop to decide whether he will proceed with the Consecration. He believes that "a mandamus does not lie to a spiritual person to perform a spiritual act". Perhaps not, but, though prophecy is a rash thing, I venture to predict that the Archbishop will not make any refusal. If he had so intended, he would have intervened before the appointment was announced. And what one sees quite clearly is that the attack of Dr. Henson's orthodoxy is not likely to have any success. What Hereford itself thinks is expressed in language of dignity by the Hereford Times. Dr. Henson is not "the Bishop whom the diocese most needs". Its objection is quite logically based on the difficulty which the new Bishop will find in getting the clergy to obey him, as he has been in the past defiant of lawful authority. "It is an unhappy prospect and, unless Dr. Henson modifies his attitude with the acceptance of his new responsibility, it may be disastrous".

Bishop of London's New Year Message—"We have no right to be unhappy: we are only unhappy when we have done badly or disgraced ourselves". The Bishop of London is often called an optimist, but he at least gives reasons for his optimism. Great Britain, he adds, has risen like a tower from the deep, and stands higher in the opinion of the world than it has since Trafalgar and Waterloo. He repeats the familiar thought that everything depends on us, until such time as the first million from the United States has reached Europe. If the present "League of Nations"—eighteen of them—cannot enforce justice, are they ever likely to be able to do so? The nation at home must do its part, and he proceeds to specify the special duties of the Church. First, to provide more chaplains, even if parochial work should be largely reduced. Next, to get the Church reformed forthwith, the first need being that of a representative body strong enough to carry out reforms. Then, to support the Education Bill, and the Criminal Law Amendment Bill, and to oppose the Divorce Bill. The Ruridecanal Conferences must cease to be debating societies, and become councils for grappling firmly with local evils. He has been urging this duty in his Visitation of the Deaneries, which he has just concluded.

The Young People's Mission—The last part of the Bishop's message deals with a remarkable movement, of which I had already some partial information. Both in England and America there has been great worry over what is called the "adolescent problem". Now London has struck out a new line, based on the suggestion, "Why not consult the adolescents themselves?" A special committee, under the guidance of Mr. Batty, rector of South Hackney, has been holding meetings of lads and girls separately at which they were asked how the Church could more fully meet their needs. I hear that the response has been wonderful: there has been some quite plain speaking on the part of the young people. They want to be told what they can do for the Church, and what the Church can do for them. Mass meetings have been held, at which numerous papers have been signed by the young people, asking what they can do. The movement is to be followed up by two federations of lads and girls, which are to be formed in every rural-deanery of London.

Letters to the Editor

Takes Issue With Miss Scudder

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

In a letter in your issue of January 12 Vida D. Scudder says: "We know if we are honest, how much reason Germany has for despising our claim to a kinder and more just civilization". My husband escaped from Germany rather than submit to the tyranny in the German Army. If he were caught he would be put in a dark prison for two months; he might come out then blinded or with impaired eyesight, and be forced to serve for three years. This is one of Germany's kind acts. Will Vida Scudder say that the United States of America has even yet forced her sons in time of peace to prepare to kill or crucify as the Huns did our three Canadian boys? "I do not write as a pacifist, but as a believer in this war". Why does she believe in a war of which she writes: "The standard for which we shall fight to the end is ragged, riddled with injustice, stained with cruelty." She is a strange woman to have to represent a college. She should read President Wilson's Flag Day address. Vida D. Scudder is not one, in my opinion, fit to train girls to be loyal citizens. Who are the trustees of Wellesley College?

Social Service Makes for Soundness of Life

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

Immediately after reading the editorial in THE CHURCHMAN of January 5 on "The Fear of Living", the undersigned sent a letter discussing and disagreeing with the whole purport of the article. It was too long and the editor asked for the shorter form. The writer will content himself with one demurrer, and that is to the affirmation that until our entrance into the War "longevity of life had been made to appear as man's highest good". During the last quarter century there has been a growing interest in social service. The Church has constituted social service as one of its tripartite divisions for the manifestation of Christian teaching. Physicians and scientists have put forth every effort to prevent the ravages of disease, to purify milk and water supply. Municipalities have endeavored to lower the death rate. Social workers have been concerned with the interests of child life, in safety conditions surrounding labor, in eliminating all unnecessary risks of life. Have these men and women taught directly or by inference that longevity was man's highest good? Have they not rather taught that strength, vigor, soundness of life were the best equipment for responding to all the demands of life? Have their measures been in the interest of ease and luxury of life, or in the interest of fuller contribution to life? Science has been contributing its part to the realization of life, and life more abundantly. It remains for moralists and religionists to point the way to higher accomplishments and ideals with every progress in emancipation of the flesh from unnecessary ills. There is no inherent danger that blessedness and joy of life on earth will dim the vision of God and the life to come. Not by vivid contrast between conditions of earth, and the hopes of heaven, is life eternal made the more sure possession of faith, else Christ would never have bid us pray "Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven".

Books on Africa

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

My attention has just been called to the paragraph headed "Africa" on page 7 of your issue of January 5. No one will more gladly welcome the proposed series of stories by Miss Skinner than will I. Anything that can throw added light on Africa as a field of Christian enterprise is most desirable. My reasons for following the policy of my far-seeing predecessor and urging Church people to study, this year, the fundamental reasons why the Church has a mission at all and what that mission is, have been fully set forth in The Spirit of Missions. They seem to be cogent, no matter how strong the appeal to a study of any one specific field of the Church's mission. But the writer of the paragraph in question appears to ignore the fact that the Missionary Education Movement of 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, has recently published, upon Africa, what is perhaps the best material for study-classes ever issued covering any one field. This material comprises a dozen or more text-books for people of all ages, besides picture-sheets, object lessons, games, and a wealth of other aids. The only fair criticism of these books is that they do not present adequately the share taken by the Anglican Communion in the evangelization of Africa. This lack has been admirably supplied by a very recent book entitled "African Missionary Heroes and Heroines", by Dr. H. K. W. Kumm, published by the Macmillan Company, New York, at $1.25. Of great value also is a series of maps issued by the Missionary Review Publishing Company. These four maps give the location of every mission station of all communions having work in Africa, besides the geographical, physical and ethnological features of that continent.

It is a matter of regret to me that I should even seem to have "decreed" that our mission-study classes should not study Africa this year; for, while urging the pursuance of the regular course, I have done my utmost to co-operate with those who showed a desire to turn their attention to the Dark Continent. But I regret still more the fact that anyone should be under the impression that there is "a lack of suitable material" on this topic. There never, in my experience, has been such rich and suitable material on any field of missionary activity as there is on Africa today.

Off Its Foundation

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

The Church Temperance Society has evidently left the foundation upon which it was established, and which is still advertised as its foundation. It was founded upon the principle of "according fully and freely to every man the right to decide in the exercise of his Christian liberty" whether or not he would adopt the rule of total abstinence, and it lays down as "the basis upon which it rests and from which its work shall be conducted, union and co-operation on perfectly equal terms for the promotion of temperance between those who use temperately and those who abstain entirely from intoxicating drinks as beverages". I would like to ask, Mr. Editor, how a society established upon such a basis justifies itself morally in conducting a campaign for national prohibition. Moreover, I deprecate the fact that while the Church Temperance Society may not so represent itself in the popular mind the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America stands behind the constitutional prohibition amendment as a result of the attitude of the Church Temperance Society.

Too Far!

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

You are going too far! And so am I. I am one of those queer people known as commuters. One night last week as I was speeding homeward from a hard day's work at the office I became so absorbed in the current number of THE CHURCHMAN that I came back to earth only when the train had reached the station beyond mine. My dinner was cold and so was my wife—until I explained that it was the fault of THE CHURCHMAN. That name is becoming a charm these days sufficient to get a man out of any difficulty, from intellectual sloth to jail. I live in New Jersey, but if you liven the paper up any more I'll be getting off my train at San Francisco some night!

The Dearth of Clergymen

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

Your remark, "Perhaps there will be a revival of interest in the ministry" after the War, in article "The Dearth of Clergymen", page 841, December 29, reminds me of something in a dim way:

During General Convention that met in New York in 1874 either THE CHURCHMAN or the New York Herald published a list of the attending clergy with U. S. A. or U. S. C. after their names. It was the exception for the younger men not to have seen service.

It may be that this list was published in report of a Connecticut Convention, but I think not. This is not an important item, but rather interesting as showing a possible result.

A Letter of Thanks

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

In your Christmas number there was an article asking for help for the men in the hospital here. I wish to thank you for publishing this appeal for me, and to state that it brought splendid results. No one thing helped to cheer these men as did these packages which came in response to the appeal. Will you please publish in your next issue my thanks for the generous response I received? I have written and thanked each of those who made gifts, insofar as I could, but in some cases the senders failed to give me their addresses.

Three Interesting Books

CONQUERING AND TO CONQUER. A MYSTERY PLAY. By Marie E. J. Hobart. The Board of Missions. New York. Price, 40c.

SUGGESTIONS FOR PRESENTING. Price, 20c.

To dramatize the Creed would seem an impossible task and yet that is what Mrs. Hobart has accomplished in her last mystery play.

She has presented it with a beauty and a power that make it stand out article by article with the clear precision of a crystal, each facet of which refracts a separate aspect of the light of truth.

In these days of half statements and mental reservations about religious dogmas it is inspiring to find such superb, unhesitating conviction. The main characters of the play, the Church with her attendants, Faith, Hope, Love and the Articles of the Creed, move with a firm tread and unqualified statement through the various episodes, past and present, which prove and prophesy their conquest of the world.

It is in no way an imitation of a medieval mystery, it is absolutely modern, and yet it has essentially the spirit of the early plays, because like them it is primarily a religious expression. Writing it was obviously an act of worship, and no one who reverently reads it or acts in it can fail to be spiritually quickened. It is in no way a theological treatise, but is a very vivid apologetic, for the warm loving humanity of the Church is of the deep religious fibre of all the ages, the protecting mother, the wise teacher and the loving friend, holding out her arms to all the world with a love that is more than human, God's love for man expressed through her.

Each of the twelve episodes centers about one article of the Creed, treated historically, beginning in the year 49 A. D., when the Church goes to Graecia and teaches her that by building an altar to the Unknown God she is really worshiping God the Father Almighty. In the next scene Rome is converted from her sins by a knowledge of Jesus Christ, and so on down through the ages as nation after nation is Christianized. Arabia alone rejects the Church and defies her in the name of Allah.

The play is not wholly historical; the living quality of the Creed is shown by placing the last four episodes in modern times. The Holy Catholic Church is proclaimed to conservative China, the forgiveness of sins to caste-bound India, the resurrection of the dead to fear-driven Africa, and young America, vital and pleasure loving, is brought to the realization that this life is a preparation for life everlasting.

The effect is very fine as it piles up article after article, each truth a fresh revelation and a consistent and necessary part of the whole with the perfect support and balance of a Gothic cathedral, built solidly on the earth through the humanity of Our Lord and soaring many-pinnacled to the sky.

As a play it would be immensely impressive, especially if carried out according to the suggestions which Mrs. Hobart has published in a separate pamphlet which gives directions and illustrations for the costumes and stage settings. It has certainly equal value as a book for use in the mission field or as a preparation for Confirmation it would be peculiarly helpful. It cannot fail to give fresh courage and inspiration to all lovers of the Church.

U. H.

FORM AND CONTENT IN THE CHRISTIAN TRADITION. By W. Sanday and N. P. Williams. Longmans, Green & Company. Price, $2.00.

This book, which is described as a friendly discussion between the Rev. Dr. Sanday, Lady Margaret professor of divinity and canon of Christ church, Oxford, and the Rev. N. P. Williams, chaplain-fellow of Exeter College, grew out of an address delivered by Dr. Sanday at a meeting of the Churchmen's Union in the early Summer of 1915 and published in that year's June number of The Modern Churchman.

To those who are interested in the ever-recurring problem of presenting the ancient faith to the modern mind the book will be full of interest, indeed of fascination. Everybody, of course, knows Dr. Sanday and readers of present-day theology are familiar with his general position with regard to miracles and more especially with regard to the Virgin Birth and the Resurrection; not everybody knows Mr. Williams, but the reading of this book makes one feel that everybody ought to. His power of analysis is remarkably keen and he never misses the essential point at issue; he is thoroughly familiar with modernism as represented by Dr. Sanday and understands both its strength and its weakness. He is no less interested than that eminent and saintly scholar in presenting the ancient faith to the modern mind. The divergence between the two writers comes in deciding just what the ancient faith is. As to this, Mr. Williams is in no uncertainty and the grounds upon which he bases his position are eminently sane and strong. When he charges that modernism is reactionary one cannot resist a chuckle. These are his words: "I cannot deny myself the (somewhat malicious) satisfaction of observing that from this point of view Modernism, at any rate Continental Modernism, with its cry of 'Zurück zu Christus' (in the sense in which these words are commonly used, that is, as meaning 'Los von der Kirche, los von Paulus') would naturally appear to merit the name of 'reaction' in its most literal application."

This quotation will perhaps serve in some measure to indicate how suggestive the whole discussion is and to arouse interest in the book which certainly ought to be widely read.

VOYAGES ON THE YUKON AND ITS TRIBUTARIES: a Narrative of Summer Travel in the Interior of Alaska. By Hudson Stuck, D.D. Scribner's Sons. New York. 1917. Map and Illustrations. Price, $4.00.

It is now half a century since the United States acquired the territory of Alaska from Russia. Since then it has been the subject of many books. This output may be divided into three groups; first, books from the members of the Telegraph Expedition of 1865-7, and reports by agents of the United States Government, chiefly officers of the Army and Coast Survey, and of the Bureau of Education. Second, there came a succession of tourist books, coincident with the establishment of tourist service between Puget Sound and Glacier Bay in Southeastern Alaska, via the Inland Passage. These books were generally marked by a naïve assumption that they embodied what no one had described before. In consequence many of them were almost replicas of their predecessors and even illustrated by identical photographs purchased from Juneau dealers. Apart from these really negligible contributions to the literature of travel there were some useful compendiums of information like the first edition of the Alaska Coast Pilot, the guidebooks of Miss Scidmore and General Greely, and a charming little book by Mrs. Isabel Shephard. The third group comprised narrative, fiction and verse related to the abnormal conditions of the "Klondike rush," prominently typified by Joaquin Miller, Jack London and Robert Service. Much of this was sufficiently lurid and depicted a phase of Alaskan history already passed.

The primitive conditions described in the first group are now largely historical. The annual reports and bulletins of the U. S. Bureau of Education, and of the Geological Survey, the mapping by the Boundary and Coast Surveys; the data published by the members of the Harriman Expedition and sundry books by "big game" hunters, are ushering in a group of contributions to Alaskan literature of a more permanent and reliable character. The early pictures of the country as a wilderness of ice and Eskimo were followed by equally exaggerated stories of agricultural possibilities which can only be realized under the abnormal demand and high prices of isolated mining settlements. The time has now come when the real conditions can be impartially described and future prospects for the territory judicially weighed.

Among recent writers no one has contributed more to a just understanding of conditions in Alaska, especially of the part north of the Alaskan peninsula, than the Ven. Hudson Stuck, D.D., F.R.G.S., archdeacon of the Yukon. Already favorably known by his book—10,000 Miles With a Dog Sled and The Ascent of Denali (Mt. McKinley), the present volume can only add to his reputation.

The roadways of Alaska in summer are the streams and in the powerboat Pelican he has penetrated to many remote places as well as traversed the main arteries of communication.

Written in a frank and pleasing style penetrated by a sympathetic but not sentimental feeling for the natives, and restrained from exaggeration by sound common sense—we know no book to which one may more safely turn for a clear and interesting description of things as they now are in Northern Alaska. While the services of the missionary are adequately recognized there is an entire absence of clerical propaganda. The illustrations from photographs by the author are numerous and illuminating. The book has been handsomely prepared by the publishers and should be a welcome addition to any library.

OUR WEEKLY NEWS LETTERS

Fifty-two Faiths at Camp Grant—Major Charles E. T. Lull, who is acting chief of staff at Camp Grant, has just released the figures of the religious survey of the camp which has been conducted under his supervision. The Roman Catholic Church leads with 32.4. The larger Christian bodies are represented in the following proportion: Lutheran Bodies, 16.6; Methodist Church, 15.2; Presbyterian Church, 9.2; Baptist Church, 7.3; the Episcopal Church 4.6. This gives a total of 1,096 men to whom our Church must minister. There are 658 Hebrews, 112 Freethinkers, 21 Agnostics and 2 Mohammedans. The remainder are divided among the minor Christian bodies.

Grenfell of Labrador at Winnetka—The people of Winnetka have enjoyed during the past few days the rare opportunity of coming into contact with "Grenfell of Labrador", and of learning more of his work. Dr. Grenfell was the preacher at Christ Episcopal church on the second Sunday after the Epiphany. To the people of Christ church he brought a valuable message, the truth of which he had discovered through his rich personal experience of the last twenty-six years in Labrador, where under hardships, and in the face of many difficulties he has striven to alleviate the sufferings of the people of that bleak land. On Saturday evening Dr. Grenfell lectured on the Labrador work at the Winnetka Congregational church, and on Monday evening he was the guest of honor and speaker of the evening at the Congregational Club banquet and gathering at the Hotel La Salle. At this meeting he spoke of his experiences with the troops of the Allies on the Western Front.

More Winnetka Activities—The missionary treasurer of Christ church, of which the Rev. E. Ashley Gerhard is rector, has forwarded the sum of $450, representing the offerings of the parish for the relief of the suffering people of Armenia and Syria. The larger part represented the Christmas offering at Christ church, part came from Mrs. Sebastian Hinton, being part of the proceeds of a playground which she conducted, and part from the Sunday school. On Monday, January 21, there was opened at the Winnetka Community House the "Dr. Alice Brown Gift Shop". Anyone may place on sale articles of any description at his own price. The proceeds of sales are to be used for the Winnetka dispensaries of the American fund for French wounded (now affiliated with the American Red Cross Society) which Dr. Brown is conducting in six neighboring towns in France. The "Gift Shop" is being conducted along the lines of the "Gift Shop" in London, where women send their jewelry, silver, china and valuables of various sorts, to be sold for the benefit of English prisoners in Germany.

Christian Service League at St. Simon's—The Rev. Leslie F. Potter, the rector of St. Simon's church, is responsible for the organization of a new parochial society which bids fair to mobilize the children of the parish for real work. The special objects are to "work for the country, for the parish, and for the spread of Christ's Kingdom". Fifty-two girls and boys have been enroled, and in an incredibly short time have raised $15.00 for the Building Fund and $20.00 for missions.

The Rev. Mr. Potter has resigned as minister-in-charge of the Church of the Holy Apostles, to take effect on February 1, when the Rev. Edward Sidney White, S. T. B., enters upon his work as the first resident clergyman of this new parish.

ALBERT EDWARD SELCER.

BALTIMORE

Mission at Mt. Calvary—A very effective parochial mission is being held at Mt. Calvary church by Fathers Officer and Harrison of the Order of the Holy Cross. Missions have been held at Mt. Calvary in previous years by the greatest of American mission preachers, but none has surpassed this in helpfulness and spiritual earnestness.

Anniversary at St. Luke's—The sixty-seventh anniversary of the Protestant Episcopal Brotherhood was held at St. Luke's church. The sermon was preached by one of the younger clergy of the diocese, the Rev. William O. Smith of Ruxton, who is a member of the Order. A service flag containing eleven stars was carried in procession and was blessed. At a meeting in the parish a highly appropriate address was made by ex-Governor Goldsborough.

Personals—The long vacancy in the rectorship of Trinity church, Towson, occasioned by the death of the Rev. Dr. Powers, has been terminated by the election of the Rev. Henry Bedinger Lee, Jr., now rector of St. Paul's church, Weston, West Virginia, the same parish from which Dr. Powers was called to Towson thirty-five years ago. Mr. Lee is a graduate of the Virginia Theological Seminary and a son of the Rev. Rector of Christ church, Charlottesville, Virginia. He was formerly rector of St. Thomas' church, Baltimore. He will begin work at Towson on the first of April.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

THE Rev. R. J. Campbell's manuscripts have been delayed owing to the uncertainty of trans-Atlantic mails at present. For the last two weeks the editors have watched the mails until noon on Monday and then reluctantly let the paper go to press without the desired article. Last Tuesday morning three articles arrived together from the editor of "The Church Family Newspaper," so we were assured of articles from our distinguished English contributor for the next three weeks anyway. Our readers will read with interest the account of Mr. Campbell's institution at Christ church, Westminster.

The Rev. Edwin Augustine White, D.C.L., is the rector of Christ church, Bloomfield and Glen Ridge, New Jersey. He is a famous canonist, the author of "American Church Law" and "A Manual for Rectors and Vestries", and the chairman of the Committee on Canons of General Convention, of which he has been a member since 1901. The discussion of "What Shall We Do With Our Synods?" of which the first part appears this week is the substance of an address delivered at the recent synod of the Second Province.

Arthur Wallace Peach is one of our regular contributors living in Northfield, Vermont.

The Rev. George Parkin Atwater is the rector of the Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio. The first part of "Religious Conditions in the Middle West" appeared in our last issue.

The Rev. Melville K. Bailey is the vicar of the Chapel of the Holy Spirit, New York City. He has leave of absence this Winter and is traveling in the West with Mrs. Bailey.

The Rev. Edward L. Parsons, D.D., is the rector of St. Mark's, Berkeley, California, a remarkable parish that includes all the Episcopal churches in Berkeley with St. Mark's as the mother church. He is a member of the standing committee of the diocese, and a member of the G. B. R. E.; he has served on the Social Service Commission and has been deputy to General Convention since 1904. His position as warden of the Deaconess Training School of the Pacific makes him well fitted to discuss the deaconess question.

The Rev. Arthur R. Gray, D.D., is the secretary for Latin America of the Board of Missions.

Appeal

APPEAL FOR THE ENDOWMENT FUND OF "OLD POHICK", THE PARISH CHURCH OF MOUNT VERNON

Again the twenty-second day of February, Washington's Birthday, is near at hand, with the Sunday following it, which is now generally regarded, not only in our own communion, but in many others, and the country at large, as the Sunday to be set apart for contributions to the endowment fund of the historic Old Pohick church, Truro Parish, Virginia, where Washington was a vestryman for twenty-two years. He was a member of the building committee of the present church, and a worshiper within its walls.

The restoration of this old church, which had been going on for a number of years, under the generous support of many friends, has lately been completed through the devoted interest of the vice-regent of the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association of the Union, from the State of New York. There now remains in connection with Old Pohick the completion of its endowment fund, which has slowly increased through a period of several years to the amount of somewhat more than $3,000. This has been invested in good securities. Inspired by the success which has now crowned the efforts of the friends interested in the restoration of the church, this committee feels that it has but to hold steadily on its course, in faith and unswerving purpose to reach its goal of at least $50,000, as an endowment fund, the income of which is to be devoted, in part, to the increase of the rector's salary, and, in part, to the keeping of the church in repair.

We therefore repeat the strong words of our presiding bishop, Dr. Tuttle, from last year's appeal, "It is a worthy appeal, if it can only get a hearing in these days of want and woe", and we might add to-day, of high purpose, after Washington's example, to win the war against the enemies of righteousness and world liberty. There are appeals which must be answered to carry on this righteous war and minister to the soldiers in camp, and field, and hospital, appeals "clamoring on every side for help"; but are there not some churches, and some private individuals, who can give of their offerings, large or small, to this worthy object this year?

Please make checks payable to the order of Pohick Church Endowment Fund, and remit to the banking house of Burke and Herbert, Alexandria, Virginia, or to the Rev. Samuel A. Wallis, D.D., chairman of the committee.

Personals

THE ADDRESS of the Rev. A. R. B. Hegeman, D.D., Archdeacon of the diocese of Central New York, is 405 Oak Street, Syracuse, New York.

THE MANY FRIENDS of Bishop Roots of Hankow, who were not a little concerned about his health last Summer, will be glad to know that in a recent letter the Bishop says:

"I never felt better in my life, and I am sure that the visit to Shihnan has been not only a good thing from the point of view of our Mission work in general, but also of my personal health in particular. I have traveled a distance of about 300 miles over the hills and walked about two-thirds of the distance, possibly more than that, and the whole trip has been a delightful one in almost every way. I am quite sure, however, that there is no place in the diocese where conditions are more primitive nor the darkness and ignorance of heathenism more oppressive than they are in this Shihnan region, all of which, of course, makes this work all the more important."

THE REV. WM. HALL WILLIAMS has resigned as rector of All Saints', Austin, Texas. He should be addressed at the Harvard Club of Boston, Boston, Massachusetts.

SAYS WORST THING ABOUT ROCKFORD IS CHICAGO

Chaplain Wilson Backs Dry Movement in Western Metropolis

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—A special meeting of all the Roman Catholic Temperance Societies in Chicago was held on a Monday evening, recently, to aid in the "round up" of the Chicago Dry Federation. The Rev. Father I. McNamee presided. The Rev. Edwin J. Randall of St. Barnabas' church has proven an able representative of the Episcopal Church interests. The "Chicago Dry" Federation managers announce one hundred thousand signers have been secured for the petition which was filed on January 31.

"Wet Chicago" is a burning subject considering the close proximity of Camp Grant and the Great Lakes Training Station. The Rev. Frank E. Wilson, volunteer chaplain at Camp Grant, says: "The worst thing about Rockford is Chicago. Rockford is really dry. The blind pigs are hunted out and driven out. A few men go to Beloit, Wisconsin, which is a wet town, but the most of those who want to drink go to Chicago, and when they return they bring back their pockets full of whiskey. The military police are vigilant, and so far as possible take the whiskey from the men on the trains just before reaching camp." Dean Bell at the Great Lakes Training Station says: "It is a mistaken kindness to try to attract the jackies to Chicago for Church or other purposes. It is the unanimous opinion of the religious and military leaders that it is better for the men to have them stay away from Chicago as much as possible."

Dr. Anthony Leaves New York

The Rev. W. G. W. Anthony, the vicar of Augustine chapel, Trinity parish, has resigned this work among the Italians of the lower East Side and accepted the rectorship of St. Mary's church, Wayne, Pennsylvania. Before going to St. Augustine's chapel, Dr. Anthony was for a number of years on the faculty of St. Stephen's College, Annandale, New York.

HOUSE OF REST AT INWOOD CARES FOR 175 PATIENTS

Many Patients Turned Away for Lack of Room and Money

NEW YORK CITY.—On Inwood Hill is a very home-like hospital for consumptive patients. It has at present a capacity of seventy-five and receives patients of any age and any stage of the disease. One of the chief founders of the House of Rest was the late Rev. Dr. Thomas McClure Peters, rector of St. Michael's church. Over 175 patients have been cared for during the past year. About forty were discharged improved, including nine children who went home practically well. Most of the cases now under care are ambulant cases. Only a small proportion are bed-patients.

There has been no shortage in food or fuel thus far this season, and no decrease in the care and attention given. Nearly all are free patients. A few are paid for, according to the ability of their families or friends. There is one soldier here who has been two years in the trenches with the army of France.

The situation and surroundings are most attractive, and the equipment exceptionally complete. If the general public were aware of the superior character of this small sanatorium and its work, generous contributions to its support would be forthcoming. Seventy new patients have been received in the past six months, but seventy-seven applications for admission have been refused simply for lack of room. More than thirty applicants are continuously on the waiting list, thirty-four to-day for whom there is no room.

G. F. S. OPENS CAFETERIA FOR GIRLS IN WASHINGTON

Important Midwinter Meeting Held in New York

NEW YORK CITY.—The midwinter meetings of the Girls' Friendly Society have been particularly fruitful. Considerable business was accomplished and a number of interesting developments were reported. The War Emergency Committee made an appropriation for the long-desired Washington cafeteria. To this the Washington G. F. S. has added, and the cafeteria will be opened just as soon as a suitable place is found. Provision was also made to furnish a number of rooms in the San Francisco lodge so that the lodge would be fitted to take care of more of the girls flocking into San Francisco to take jobs left vacant by the enlistment of men. The Second Province reported that it had so far oversubscribed its ambulance that instead of sending one large car to the front it would send three Fords. One item of interest was the announcement that the history of the G. F. S. A. upon which Mrs. Thomas Roberts of Philadelphia, for so many years the honored president of the society, has been working, was at last in the hands of the printer. The first branch of the G. F. S. in the American mission in China was reported from Hankow. A report was also received from Kyoto that the branch connected with St. Agnes' School had been revived. The Department of Missions has issued a special call to members of the G. F. S. to rally to the support of the Board of Missions and not to let the War interfere with this vital work.

The 1918 meeting of Central Council will be in Paterson, New Jersey, in the middle of October.

Miss Sibley is now in Washington where she has been in conference with Miss Antoinette Greeley in reference to housing women workers. Miss Greeley is working under Secretary Lane on this war problem.

CHURCHWOMEN'S CLUB OF N. Y. HAS FIRST MEETING

Organized to Succeed Protestant Episcopal Suffrage Association

NEW YORK CITY.—The first meeting of the Churchwomen's Club was held last Wednesday and consisted of a luncheon attended by about sixty-five members and guests, with reports from the newly formed committees and short addresses from invited speakers. The club should not be confused with the Women's Church Club formed several years ago. This organization proposes to have a clubhouse which shall be a rallying place for the women of the diocese, but it has deferred its plans until after the War. The Churchwomen's Club is a houseless organization and consists of a federation of working committees. It expects to meet at luncheon or dinner (strictly War meals; the luncheon last Wednesday was a fifty-cent per plate Hoover affair!) three or four times in the Winter, and to hold three services during the Winter. The Churchwomen's Club is the outgrowth or reorganization of the Protestant Episcopal Suffrage Association, an organization which excited much interest in the diocese at the time of its formation a year ago. The members of the Association, after gaining the vote in the State, felt under obligations to continue as a group of Churchwomen interested in civic and community matters, a group which could bridge the gap which often exists between the good things outside of the Church and the good things inside of the Church. Many of the members are doing their work in organizations outside of the Church. They wished to organize in order to emphasize the fact that they are doing that work as Churchwomen. The committees at present are: Christian Fellowship, Mrs. Vladimir Simkhovitch, chairman; Women in the Church, Mrs. Arthur P. Hunt, chairman; Political Enfranchisement, Mrs. Richard Aldrich, chairman; Education, Miss M. J. Hobart, chairman; Protection of Women, Mrs. Norman Walker, chairman.

Mrs. Walker reported on the work of the woman protective officer (policewoman) which the club is supporting on Staten Island, and Mrs. Manes, the policewoman, described her work. Mrs. Aldrich described an interesting conference of women interested in emphasizing the spiritual responsibility of the suffrage held in Washington during the Suffrage Convention. Miss Hobart told of the classes in civics which have been started in the Mothers' Meetings in Grace chapel and the Church of the Advocate, Bronx. Deaconess Thompson described how the Grace chapel women were learning the mechanism of the ballot. It is the purpose of this committee to supply speakers for similar classes in the New York parishes. Miss Leland told the club of the work among college students in the diocese. Miss Edith Hadley invited all members of the club to the joint service of the Church Mission of Help and the G. F. S. on March 6 when the Archbishop of York will speak.

Lent

SINCE last Good Friday we have been keeping a national Lent. We have been given to good works. Our theatres are half empty. Our bridge parties have been replaced by surgical dressings classes. Even men's clubs are making splints. The price of the children's Christmas candy paid for milk for the Armenian babies. Instead of new coats, we have bought comforts for soldiers, ambulances, warm clothing for Belgian refugees. Many of us have learned more about the value of abstinence from Mr. Hoover than we were ever willing to learn from the Church. We have kept a long Lent of self-sacrifice since last Easter dawned on a dedicated nation.

Ash Wednesday is here again, and the very fact that the coming forty days will not deflect the current of our normal social life as perceptibly as in past years brings with it the danger that we will miss the deep lesson of Lent 1918. "To labor is to pray" is a palliative which we are too ready to use. Red Cross working hours and noonday services are bound to conflict. But there is still the early morning Communion. Devotional reading need not reduce the number of sweaters made between now and the end of March. Missionary mite boxes need not deflect any of the money which has been flowing into war relief. We have not yet given to the utmost.

We needed this Lent to steady our souls. We are in grave danger of forgetting what is the ultimate purpose of the struggle. If we come suddenly face to face with the day on which the longed-for treaty of peace is signed, having forgotten the meaning of the Kingdom of God, the signing, the treaty and all our struggle will be a mockery.

We need a quiet time for self-examination and repentence. We must examine our consciences whether our sacrifice is to Mars or to Christ. We must learn at the feet of our Saviour how to purge the gift of ourselves, which we are so ready to make, of the pride and arrogance of the hate and self-will which have made the bitter sacrifices of our enemies sacrifices to Thor.

In Lent we put first things first. We dig down to fundamentals. In the tumult of this year's emotions and the hurry of this year's work we must not forget the basic things. We must not, for example, deny the children our leadership and encouragement in the matter of the Lenten mite boxes. For the children's Lenten offering to dwindle would be a great tragedy. Last year's offering was $190,000. Bishop Tuttle in his annual letter to the children calls for $200,000. If this mark is reached it means that the children know we are fighting in France for the coming of Christ's Kingdom. If the children's offering fails of its goal, it means that we have allowed the Americans of the next generation to lose their perspective; it means they do not understand that the foundation of true democracy is the Kingdom of God.

A Definition of an American Bishop

THERE are golden sentences in the sermon preached by the Right Reverend Irving P. Johnson on the occasion of the consecration of the missionary bishop of Salina. We have quoted some of these passages in this issue of THE CHURCHMAN because we know of no pronouncement by those with authority to speak that seems to us more prophetic of the new time that is upon the American Church and upon Christianity everywhere. Bishop Johnson's sermon gives wings to the imagination. He has drawn with power the portrait of a bishop, which recalls neither the Anglican nor the Italian tradition, but one which we are sure would command the reverence and esteem of the new and better democracy that is to come out of the War, for which the whole Church is solemnly praying today. Is there anything novel in such a definition of the episcopal office? It has a winning likeness to the New Testament and the Prayer Book.

Laymen and presbyters are thinking thoughts today that were not in their minds three years ago. These thoughts, if we mistake not the signs of the time, will become more articulate when the War is over. Strange and turbulent ideas are moving westward from feverish, starving Russia. Stern questionings and half-formed desires are springing up in every nation in Europe; America will not be permitted to sit tight. We, too, will have bitter problems in the decades that will follow peace.

It may be that the Bolsheviki spirit, which is likely to sweep over the world, will be none too friendly to the churches. On every hand we hear the warning that the Church be ready to enter the new day with a leadership worthy of the stupendous opportunity to leaven with the spirit of Christ some of the mad forces which are struggling to dominate the world. We have no wish to enter into prophecy concerning the future of the Church; but one need possess no extraordinary gifts of discernment to perceive that unworldliness is the only sufficient armor of defense. It is more than a defense; it alone can put into our hands those sure weapons for conquering the world—singleness of heart and a Christian conscience.

No complacent assertion of our apostolicity, no scholarly declaration of the validity of our Orders will serve as credentials of leadership. Before we can wrestle with the fierce elements of the new social order, the Church herself must have overcome the world in her own heart. Not the potentate but the missionary will speak the healing word.

It is a thousand pities that we have forced our bishops to be first of all administrators. The same wasteful system is everywhere at work undermining the pastoral office of our clergy. No one more than our conscientious bishops deplores the diversion of their pastoral gifts to the mechanical duties of the episcopal office. If the country parson and the missionary in the out-of-the-way corners of our dioceses complain, sometimes bitterly, of the brief visitations, growing briefer year by year, of their bishops; if they tell of their hunger for sympathy and personal guidance, the bishop himself, unless he is basking in the mellow atmosphere of feudal England, feels as deeply as does his diocese the wastefulness of a system that transforms chief shepherds into stewards. More and more the pastoral office, so rich in opportunity of spiritual leadership, is being robbed of its highest privilege. The system is faulty from top to bottom. Christianity is so simple; churches are so complex.

The way out will be revealed, we feel sure, by the zeal that is daily growing among us, to show Christ to the new world which is upon us. That zeal will offer as its first fruits an unworldly ministry and an unworldly church. We are grateful to Bishop Johnson for the most significant utterance which we have read in many a day. The ideal he sets forth of the episcopal office is so commanding, so apostolic, that, were it our pattern, an election to the episcopate would be a holy call to sacrifice which no one would dare to refuse.

Missionary Sermons

WE recall a conversation that took place several years ago in the robing-room of a church in New England just before the clergy were to pass into the church. It was the Sunday in Epiphany when a missionary bishop from the West was to present the cause of missions to the parish. The rector of the church, with great courtesy, turned to the bishop and said: "My dear bishop, may I remind you that this parish has believed in missions and heartily supported them for nearly two hundred years? Don't use any of your precious minutes in arguing about missions; just tell us what you are doing and what the needs are." We suspect that the warning was heeded, for the bishop on that occasion omitted his text and began in the middle.

The advice of this rector was pedagogically sound. If a man does not believe in missions, no argument of abstract principles is likely to convert him. The man who does not believe in missions is, of course, a badly instructed Christian, and the missionary who comes into the parish once a year to plead for missions ought not to be expected to instruct the parish in the fundamentals of the Christian religion. That is the rector's job. But the missionary has it within his power to help immeasurably the rector in this task of instruction by flooding the people's minds with missionary facts. Nobody, no matter how hard-headed a Philistine he may be, can resist the appeal of missions for ten minutes, if he knows the facts. Missionary facts are the most eloquent messages of the Gospel that exist—just the plain, unadorned facts. And the most successful missionary speakers are the men who have genius for letting the facts speak for themselves. We have noticed that such men begin with the facts and end with them. Their message is not obstructed with any philosophical deduction or conclusion. A missionary fact is capable of introducing itself to the congregation and it can be relied upon to draw its own conclusions. We wish that our missionaries would put a larger trust in facts.

One of the most telling arguments for domestic missions that we recall having heard was one of those simple facts. A woman told her rector that she was willing to give her money and time in behalf of any sort of Christian activity in the parish, but she was not willing to have any of her money go to missions, domestic or foreign. She thought that she thought she didn't believe in missions. The rector, having learned wisdom from experience, bided his time. One day this woman came to him with a troubled face. "My daughter", she said, "has moved to a little town in South Dakota. Do you know that there isn't an Episcopal church within fifty miles of her home? She has three dear little boys, who must grow up without knowing anything of our church services. Can't anything be done to put a church in that town"? "Yes", said the rector very kindly, with a smile in his soul, "but that, you know, is domestic missions". This winning argument for missions was an unobtrusive missionary fact, but it was a fact with a human-interest appeal. No man or woman can long resist that kind of appeal.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

Lincoln's Birthday

THE gifts of leadership in Lincoln's character, which have been strengthening his hold on the affections of his countrymen as the years have gone by, have been all of them lovable traits. Can a statesman do his finest work if he lacks these qualities? It is a happy circumstance that in the churches, where mention will be made of Lincoln's birthday this coming week, the glowing words of the Quinquagesima Epistle will be sounding in the hearts of the congregation. What wonderful sermons there are in Lincoln's forgiveness! He never remembered a rebuff or permitted the iron of hatred to enter into his soul. He was a hard man to injure or insult, because he believed that the only real injuries which a man can suffer are those he inflicts upon himself. How much he endured at the hands of Stanton! Stanton did more than oppose Lincoln's policies. He insulted and tried to humiliate the President, but Lincoln refused to be insulted or to take opposition personally. He thought that the nation needed Stanton, so he used him for the service of the people. He was too big, too generous, too forgiving to intrude his own feelings. Again and again he forgave and when he forgave he also forgot. Was he callous, insensible, lacking in sensitive honor? For an answer to that question read again St. Paul's ode to love in the epistle for Quinquagesima. When St. Paul tells us how love comports itself, he describes a very effective quality of leadership—the only one certainly that can insure to a statesman the enduring affection of his countrymen. We can admire genius and be dazzled by brilliant gifts, but we surrender our hearts only to those whose greatness is the kind St. Paul describes in the thirteenth chapter of the first epistle to the Corinthians.

The Neutrality of Troy

THE leading article in the February Atlantic, by the Rev. Joseph H. Odell, confirms our belief that the grace of humility is more strongly developed among ministers than in any other profession—that is, if self-depreciation is a sign of humility.

The clergy expected to be held responsible for the War. It couldn't have happened if—well, we ought to have prevented it. When, in the early months of the War, John Galsworthy solemnly asserted that Christianity had failed, the ministers, after giving due consideration to the pronouncement, finally plucked up courage to say that "it hadn't been tried". Poor old Church, poor old parsons, what else have they been busy at all these centuries but trying?

But there are lengths to which humility ought not be permitted to go. When Mr. Odell blames the churches for having been neutral during the early months of the War, he must not be allowed to "put that over". If what one heard from the pulpits in those bitter months was neutrality, well, then the congregations would certainly have needed protection if the clergy had really got into the War. As we recall it now we heard a good many people saying: "We wish the ministers would stop preaching about the War."

Perhaps Troy really was neutral.

Christian Unity

THE War has given a new stimulus to Church Unity. As Christians look around them and behold neighboring peoples engaged in international massacre the cry goes up with new seriousness: "We must get together." So we have more irenicons. We must confess that to us they are very depressing reading. They throw so much responsibility upon God. One wonders if, after all, the reuniting of Christendom, like the League of Nations, will not be brought about by a cataclysm rather than by sweet reasonableness. God waits and waits for us to settle our affairs, while we go on talking and writing, each clinging stubbornly to his own. Then behold one day the world crumbles into pieces about our feet and quite unexpectedly a new order emerges. Perhaps Church Unity can come in no better way.

There are four big obstacles to Christian Unity, which we meet every time we set forth on a friendly tour of uniting the Churches. They are the Roman Church, the Greek Church, the Episcopal Church and all the other Churches.

The New Diplomacy

IT falls to the Bolsheviki to make the first romantic venture in the new Christian diplomacy. We read in the closing days of January of Trotzky's action in regard to Persia. He writes a letter to the Persian Ambassador at Petrograd, "Citizen Ambassador", informing him that the Government of the Russian Republic makes this declaration:

"The Anglo-Russian agreement of 1907 was directed against the liberty and independence of the Persian people, and is null and void for all time. Moreover, the Government denounces all agreements preceding and following the said agreement which may restrict the rights of the Persian people to a free and independent existence."

Whatever may come out of this new type of diplomacy, isn't it the way Christian nations ought to act one towards another? Perhaps, as the Germans maintain, Christianity has no place in diplomacy. At any rate these harebrained Bolsheviki are going to have the fun of trying it.

It may work better than the Machiavellian sort. Who knows?

Army Morals

THIS is the first war in history in which the people at home are a part of the army. Whole peoples are engaged in the war. The war will be won by the morale and sacrifice of whole peoples. In past wars, army morals were taken for granted. The moral wastage was counted in with the wreckage and lost sight of.

But with this war there has come a wholly new attitude towards soldiers' morals. Nations have felt that they must justify war before the Christian conscience. To do so they must carefully compute not only the righteousness of the cause for which men fight, but also the net moral gains and losses incurred in fighting. The only "losses" reported in war bulletins and statistics heretofore have been the dead and disabled. There has been no attempt to compute moral wastage. A hopeful sign that militarism is not likely to get much out of this war is that, for the first time in history, people at home are taking seriously the moral wastage. They want to know whether their sons are coming back to them morally disabled for life. The unprecedented enthusiasm for the Y. M. C. A. army work shows how alert people at home are over this problem.

It seems to us to be one of the most hopeful signs of a lasting peace that people are willing to face the cold facts regarding army morals. If we are ever going to abolish war, it must be stripped bare of every false glamour. If the boy who shows such superb courage in going over the top is to come home morally so maimed that he can never be counted upon again in civil life to go bravely over the top in the little and big battles of everyday life requiring discipline, then we must take such facts, unpleasant though they are, into our reckoning when we compute the cost of war.

One of the most eloquent arguments in behalf of a league to enforce peace will be statistics garnered in this war and after it, concerning moral wastage. While our poets, yes, and our preachers, are singing the romanticism of war—and it is a glorious song to sing—some experts will dare to tell us some of the unromantic facts that must also be taken into account.

In the beginning of the war, nothing was said about the moral wastage. We talked only of the glory of sacrifice. Now that the war has been going on for more than three long years, people seem to be talking more about the moral wastage than the moral grandeur. We all want to face the facts; but we must not let either aspect of war wholly occupy the field of vision. So, while the papers are being filled with stories of the drink and the lust among our armies in France, are we not likely to forget that the majority of the men who make up our American army are men who withstood temptation before they went to war? They are not, by any means, weaklings. We are glad to have reassurance from General Pershing in his report to the Secretary of War. He writes:

"There has never been a similar body of men who have led as clean lives as our American soldiers in France. They have entered this war with the highest devotion to duty and with no other idea than to perform their duties in the most efficient manner possible. . . . Forbidden the use of strong drink and protected by stringent regulations against sexual evils, and supported by their own moral courage, their good behavior is the subject of most favorable comment, especially by our allies."

Praying for Our Allies

IN every prayer we say for our own soldiers and sailors, surely we ought to remember our Allies. The armies, opposing the German peril, are one great army now. We should make no distinction in our thought of them. It is natural that in some of our petitions we should mention separately those very near and dear to us, our country, our own soldiers and sailors. But certainly in no service of public worship should we forget to pray for our Allies; for it is to them we now owe our safety.

A correspondent writes:

"In visiting many of our churches 'in statu populari' I have greatly missed any prayers for our Allies. All prayers that I have heard are for 'our men', 'our country'. No recognition at all of the awful burden and sacrifice of others. No recognition of our debt to or partnership with these multitudes of heroic men whose hearts have been our shield."

An American Episcopate

WE have only two traditions of the episcopate to guide us and I believe they are both bad—the English and the Italian—and with this further limitation on our part: that, while we have the same spiritual office as the Lord Bishop of England or the Cardinal Bishop of Rome, we have behind us neither the secular power of the one nor the ecclesiastical authority of the other. Manifestly habits which might be tolerated in my Lord Bishop of the Court of St. James or St. Peter (that is, habits that belong to that world in which the Gentiles seek preëminence) have no place in our modest entourage as bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church. When a man who really rules some one puts on the livery of his authority, he may inspire some sentiments of awe; when a man who rules no one puts them on he arouses sentiments of ridicule.

It is required in stewards that a man be found faithful. You are to be an example of apostolic simplicity in your life, in your teaching, your contracts, your appointments. There is just one thing to do and that is, to do as you say, even to your hindrance. To prate about the rights of your office when you are evading its responsibilities is to commit the error of those who wear the purple. There are no rights with which Christ ever invested men that did not carry with them the responsibilities—and the only charter of your rights is your sense of your responsibility. Now this responsibility is to be found in Christ's life; simplicity rather than pomposity; truthfulness rather than evasion; courage rather than timidity; kindness rather than officiousness; sympathy rather than conventional authority; to avoid ostentation in manner; not to be known as belonging to a class, whether it be capital or labor—for the rich will fail you because of their meanness and the laborer because of his envy. We are to proclaim the Gospel of the common blood, of common prayer, of common interest—and we cannot be common if we belong to a class.

A bishop is a missionary rather than a potentate; his responsibility is to go to men with the word and the touch of Christ—the word of His mouth, the touch of His hand—rather than to impress them with the dignity of his office. It is a stupid interpretation of the Life of Christ, whether it be English or Italian, which would persuade a man that he reaches the highest expression of his episcopate by being impressive in manner or dress. A bishop like any other man reaches the pinnacle of his glory when he suffers little children to come unto him, and when he does his full duty to the least of these his brethren.

There is no higher task than to know your sheep, to feed them, to bind up their wounds, to keep them in the green pastures beside the waters of life, where the wolf will not devour and the hireling will not fleece. It is a monstrous task, for sheep are silly and those who take care of them become very eccentric, and you like the rest of us are a sinful man, entrusted with a divine task. In trying to be a bishop, never forget that you are just a man, prone to be a fool and entirely dependent upon the grace of God.—From a sermon by the Rt. Rev. Irving P. Johnson, D.D.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMON

To Love Greatly is to Live Cheaply

By THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

"—but have not love, I am nothing."—I Corinthians xiii-2. (R. V.)

IN his wonderful exposition of this chapter, Henry Drummond tells of a man whom he knew who determined to read its verses conscientiously, once a week for three months, and it changed his whole life.

I can readily believe that; for we become like those with whom we companion, and to do that steadily for three months would be like intimately associating with the Master, because Jesus Christ was the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians. Read it again, as I shall shortly give it in this article, as translated in The Twentieth Century New Testament, and see if that is not true.

And it is equally true of the men and women whom you know who are most like Him. In just so far as they are Christians, seeking to make his life their life, this chapter is their biography. When I was rector in Los Angeles, Francis Murphy, one of the most saintly men I have ever met, was conducting a series of temperance meetings. One night he was ill and they asked me to take his place. And when I arose before the congregation with his Bible in my hand to read the Scripture, it opened of itself; and it opened to this chapter. The pages were all thumbworn with use, and in every verse some words were underscored with red ink. And then I knew what had made Francis Murphy Francis Murphy. So I read the chapter and told the people why I read it.

We are now approaching the most solemn period of the year. And because tomorrow will be Quinquagesima, meaning the fiftieth day before Easter, the next Sunday before Lent, in all our churches this chapter will be read. Why? Because to all who so desire a special audience is to be given by the King. And this chapter is the gate to the palace. No man can meet the King, unless he is willing to pass through this chapter. It is put in the forefront. Read it carefully now, that you may listen to it with greater interest tomorrow. It will not take long. I have timed it. It can be read aloud, slowly and distinctly, in three minutes. We are accustomed at this season to make some few resolves as to how we will use these days. Suppose this be one of them. Will you join with me in reading this chapter every night during the Lenten season just before retiring? Then the working day will be over, and we can ask ourselves whether or not during that day this thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians truthfully represents the way we have dealt with the men and the women, yes, and God's little ones, with whom we have left an impress for good or for evil, for happiness or unhappiness; for "the greatest thing a man can do for his Heavenly Father is to be kind to some of His children".

And when the Lenten season shall be gone, as it will be almost before we are aware of it, let us see how much of a lasting influence it shall have made upon our lives to have read this Life of Christ together during those forty days. If we do, and do it sincerely, asking Him to help us, we shall remember it in eternity. There is no doubt about it. I am presenting tonight this modern translation simply as a helpful commentary upon the accepted version to which most of us will listen tomorrow, though we can, of course, each choose which we shall read. For myself, I shall select the older version because, while some of the phrases have changed their meaning with the passing of the years, I shall want to read it just as it was first read to me long ago by lips which have become still. Yet this modern translation, because it is modern, will be both arresting and interesting.

"Though I speak in the 'tongues' of men, or even of angels, yet have not Love, I have become mere echoing brass, or a clanging cymbal! Even though I have the gift of preaching, and fathom all hidden truths and all the depths of knowledge; even though I have such faith as might move mountains, yet have not Love, I am nothing! Even though I dole my substance to the poor, even though I sacrifice my body, that I may boast, yet have not Love, it avails me nothing!

"Love is long-suffering, and kind; Love is never envious, never boastful, never conceited, never behaves unbecomingly; Love is never self-seeking, never provoked, never reckons up her wrongs; Love never rejoices at evil, but rejoices in the triumph of the truth; Love bears with all things, ever trustful, ever hopeful, ever patient.

"Love never fails. But whether it be the gift of preaching, it will be done with; whether it be the gift of 'tongues' it will cease; whether it be knowledge, it too will be done with. For our knowledge is incomplete, and our preaching is incomplete, but, when the Perfect has come, that which is incomplete will be done with.

"When I was a child I talked as a child, I felt as a child, I reasoned as a child; now that I am a man I have done with childish ways.

"As yet we see in a mirror, dimly, but then—face to face! As yet, my knowledge is incomplete, but then I shall know in full as I have been fully known.

"Meanwhile Faith, Hope, and Love endure—these three, but the greatest of these is Love."

I have said that we can read these verses deliberately in three minutes; and we can. But let us not read them in that way. In using the Bible we should learn to chew the cud, or, to employ a term which is derived directly from such a process, we should ruminate after reading; as the cattle regurgitate their food and ruminate it; they chew it again and again. Thus the Psalmist says, "My meditation of Him shall be sweet"; and again, "While I was musing the fire burned". There is always a temptation in perusing serious books to read too rapidly for our own good. We put out the fire with too much fuel. The novel of the day we read to be amused, but the Bible we read to "muse".

So let me suggest that after reading this chapter, each day we select one phrase, and while in the midst of our employment, if possible, ruminate upon that phrase; chew the juice out of it. During the day let us look for illustrations of its truth in the actual life surrounding us. Let us repeat it to ourselves and try to discover the glint of a new facet, as we would turn a diamond in our hands. Therein lies its beauty.

I have room for only one brief illustration of what I mean. Suppose we were to select that passage which reminds us that "Love never fails". How much there is to think about in those three words, especially when taken in their context. It will outlast everything. "Whether there be prophecies, they shall fail." The Scripture is full of prophecies which have now failed by being fulfilled. They are past products. But love is not a past product; never will be. "Tongues shall cease." Suppose a man had known ten languages in the days of St. Paul, if he were here on earth again, how few of them he could use. The very Greek and the Latin, the world-wide tongues of those early days, are now referred to as languages which are dead. But love is not dead.

And how much knowledge has "vanished away". Go back to St. Paul's contemporaries. Select one of the wisest scholars of that time. Suppose Pliny the Elder were to be placed by the side of a man like Thomas Edison, and they were to attempt to converse. Why, he would be like a little child. He would have to go to school again before he could begin to talk with him. But have we ever gotten beyond St. Paul? Have we ever caught up with Jesus Christ? Would the writer of this chapter have to go to school in order to talk with the greatest Christian in all the world if he could find him today. "Love never fails."

Now abideth Faith, Hope, Love—these three; but the greatest of these is Love; "because for even these,

> "Faith shall vanish into sight;
> Hope be emptied of delight";

but forever and forever, and forever,

> "Love in heaven shall shine more bright.
> Therefore give us love!"

The League of Nations

By THE REV. R. J. CAMPBELL

PRESIDENT WILSON is the first statesman of commanding authority to crystallize into an abiding phrase an ideal which has long been working in the minds of men and has suddenly sprung into a prominence undreamed of before the war; in fact, the war has made it a matter of the most urgent practical importance, whereas previously it was merely a vision of what might be, an aspiration to be realized in the far future. We are all talking of the League of Nations now; it is no longer regarded as a mere vague theory impossible to translate into practice; the most responsible and experienced administrators in two continents have committed themselves to it and are prepared to establish it forthwith as soon as international conditions allow—that is, from the moment the war ends. In a partial but very real sense it may already be said to have begun to exist. Bishop Brent of the Philippines told the present writer that immediately on the receipt of the news in England that his own great country had entered the war on the side of the Allies he cabled to America: "The League of Nations is now in being."

It is the war itself which has forced the pace. Civilized humanity cannot endure to contemplate a renewal of the present bloody strife which is convulsing the world or of the conditions which for many years past have been making towards it. Such a prospect would be intolerable, and all men of good will are drawing together in the effort to render it unthinkable for all time to come. At a bound we have placed this objective in the forefront of our moral and political counsels. Dire necessity has driven us thereto. In justice to the sincerity and loftiness of purpose with which Great Britain accepted the gage of battle thrown down by Germany three years and a half ago it should be recognized that it was Mr. Asquith, then Prime Minister, who gave the lead on the subject as far back as September, 1914, when he said in his speech at Dublin that the idea of public right when translated into concrete terms meant a real European partnership, based on the recognition of equal rights and established and enforced by a common will. "A year ago", continued the speaker, "that would have sounded like a Utopian idea. . . . If and when this war is decided in favor of the Allies, it will at once come within the range, and before long within the grasp, of European statesmanship". It has already done more; thanks to the bold and chivalrous action of the United States a pact of all nations to keep and compel peace has now come within the range and grasp of statesmanship as a whole.

How much does it imply? No more and no less than can be justified from history. Man's normal condition was at one time a state of war. The individual home was fortified; every clan or tribe was the natural enemy of every other. Ulysses and his companions, weather-bound on their perilous voyage home from Troy, land on an island containing a single city; they promptly sack it and kill the inhabitants. Such was the rude code of a primitive time. Nationality is of comparatively modern growth and not a very staple bond of union, as those persons ought to remember who insist upon it as the basis of a final settlement when the map of Europe is re-drawn. City formerly fought with city, even in England; in Italy their feuds were merciless and endless. Private war was cherished as one of the privileges of every individual magnate or civic unit possessing the power to threaten their neighbors, and the growth of centralized national government was for generations unable to check it and indeed hardly regarded it as calling for interference; the State kept the ring, as it were, and let the combatants fight it out; kings and parliaments alike considered it no part of their business to prohibit bloodshed between local communities any more than between one man and another.

This could not last, and at length it dawned upon the common consciousness in one country after another, which grew up within and without that unwieldy congeries of peoples and tongues that constituted the mediæval Roman empire, that it did not pay to allow continuous warfare within their borders; it was inconvenient all round and hampered development; order and security were requisite for progress in the arts of life. So gradually—England being among the first—nationalities developed with a centralized power strong enough to compel those living within its particular territories to keep the peace. Nottingham was no longer to be allowed to fortify itself against Derby; Baronial strongholds were to be destroyed and armed retainers abolished; the Crown alone, or whatever executive authority existed in its place, was alone invested with the power of making use of physical force either against law-breakers at home or enemies abroad.

Now what is the proposed League of Nations but an extension of this principle to human affairs at large? We are discovering on a grand scale precisely what our ancestors discovered on a comparatively small one. We cannot afford to let anarchy prevail any longer in our international relations; we cannot let Germany or any other power attack her neighbors any more than we should be disposed to let Devon attack Cornwall. The rest of the world suffers so acutely when any two nations go to war that we have all a vital stake in preventing them from doing it. Besides, force is irrelevant to the issue, as Mr. Norman Angell would say; and it is a vitiated patriotism which thinks otherwise. We must get together to prevent the piling up of armaments and to coerce people or group of peoples whose conduct is incompatible with the security of all the rest coming within the pale of International Law.

There is something higher than patriotism as commonly understood, and that (Continued on page 195)

Love

THOUGH I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not love, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not love, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not love, it profiteth me nothing. Love suffereth long, and is kind; love envieth not; love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Love never faileth: but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away. For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away. When I was child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things. For now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known. And now abideth faith, hope and love, these three; but the greatest of these is love.

Bishop Brooks' Visit to a Rural Parish

By THE REV. H. USHER MONRO

BISHOP BROOKS made his first and only visitation to St. Mary's church, Newton Lower Falls, on the evening of Thursday, March 10, 1892.

He had planned to visit the rectory for tea before the service and so came by an early afternoon train. I met the Bishop at a little station below the town and rode the rest of the way with him. He gave me a very cordial greeting, and at once made a place for me in the seat beside him.

In a few minutes he asked when it would be possible for him to get back to Boston. I told him of two trains, the last, which seemed the more available, going out at 10.05 p. m. The Bishop gave a sigh of regret and I then noticed that which I had feared through all his bishopric, a tired condition. He was very much worn. As we were nearing the station he said, "I am so tired, and it is this way every night: I am so late getting home". I then suggested to the Bishop a way by which he might get the earlier train to Boston at 9.00 p. m.—that he might shorten the service, omit his sermon, and have only a brief address. To this he replied that he thought it would be better not to curtail any of the service, that he would preach as he had expected, and would return on the later train.

It was a cold, wet night, and as we rode to the rectory the Bishop asked me about the confirmation class, the number of candidates and other matters. He was very much interested as I spoke of different things incidental to the preparation of candidates. When I happened to remark that the work of preparing persons for Confirmation was to me the tenderest side of the ministry it seemed to open the Bishop's great heart at once. There was a cordial agreement with what I said, and much more of a spiritual nature added in the spirit of real sympathy and helpfulness. From that moment his relations to me as my Bishop seemed nearer than ever. From the beginning to the end of this memorable visit there was not the least suggestion by word or manner of the "official" or of the dignified ecclesiastic.

At the rectory during the tea hour the Bishop's tired feeling seemed to disappear, so cordial and happy was his manner. There was a warmth and light about his wonderful presence that charmed the whole household. The little boy of the family, a lad of seven years, seemed to attract him at once. He called the child to him and putting his arm around him, said, "Well, my little boy, what have you been doing today?" The child said. "Oh, everything!" This made the Bishop throw his head back in his characteristic way and laugh very heartily, remarking instantly, "Everything! That is a capital answer!"

At tea the conversation turned mainly to spiritual things out of the abundance of the Bishop's soul. All, however, was lighted up with his witty sayings and little pleasantries which cannot be reproduced by memory. One or two, however, are recalled. In speaking of the Puritans the Bishop said that they were a queer lot; they certainly had done some good in the world, but for his part he had always thought of them very much as he thought of the big stones he had seen placed beneath his house—their best use was being underground. In speaking of the office and work of the bishopric, in a joking way referring to himself, he said he thought some of the bishops in early times must have had very queer notions of what constituted the work and character of a bishop. "There was Bishop Bass, the first bishop of Massachusetts; when he was elected he sent word to Bishop White in Philadelphia that if the Church would pay his traveling expenses to and from Philadelphia for the consecration service, he would consent to take the office; otherwise he would not."

After a few minutes spent in the study, when the Bishop gave simple but positive directions about the evening's service, we started for the church. A little incident at this time showed how utterly groundless were the charges so often made about the Bishop's lack of Churchmanship or regard for rubrical order. "He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much." We were talking about the confirmation service, and the Bishop had carefully arranged for the service to go on in its regular order. He had appointed me to read the preface to the office at the proper time. Then he added, "And you will notice that you are to present the candidates by the prescribed form which you will read". I then remarked that, as a boy in my home church, I had been much impressed by the words and manner of my rector when he used to present his candidates. The Bishop said, "Well, in those days it was not rubrical for the minister to say anything, but now it is prescribed what he shall say".

As the time came for going to church and the Bishop was getting ready, the rector's little boy, with whom the Bishop had been playing, expressed the wish that he might go to the service too. When he was reminded that it was his bed-hour, the Bishop turned quickly and said, "Won't they let you go to church? Now I think that is too bad; I have no doubt that in a few years, when you get a little older, they will not be so anxious for you to stay at home". The child then went to the Bishop to bid him good-night, who, in his gracious and quick manner, said, "Won't you kiss me good-night?" Of course, there was no resisting the loving appeal, and with his great arms around the little fellow they kissed each other in a way very touching to see. Bishop Brooks never revealed the love and sympathy of his soul more sweetly and clearly than in his tenderness and fondness for little children. It is not wonderful that they all loved him. It was a glimpse of his greatness.

I may have mentioned the fact that the Bishop was suffering from a severe cold on this occasion. It was sadly evident that he was much worn down by his labors. It added much to the distress of his friends that he would allow nothing to be done for his relief. He seemed very unconcerned about himself. He preferred to be with others rather than to be alone, to talk than to be quiet or to rest his voice.

When we reached the church he said, "It is always a pleasure for me to preach at old St. Mary's, and it is a comfort to be in a chancel where there is plenty of room!" I could appreciate his remark as I looked at his towering frame and thought of the largeness of his views of life and of things in general. He must at least have felt a little cramped sometimes, as he tried to get around in some of the small but elaborate chancels of his diocese.

The church was crowded that night, as it has seldom been in its history. There were many from the neighboring parishes and of all denominations. The Bishop preached from the text in John xv: 15 and 16. There was the same fervor and strength on this as on other occasions, and yet to the close observer it was plainly evident that there was a great expenditure of force through it all, and a very tired voice. One who had any interest at all in the matter could not help saying to himself, as he listened to that voice and watched that marvelous presence pouring out its wealth of love and thought to others, "Why does he not spare himself a little for the sake of the diocese and for the Church?"

Then after the sermon came the beautiful service for confirmation. Never in my experience was it so tenderly impressive as on this night, nor need we expect to witness anything like it in spirit again in our time.

Following that came the Bishop's address to the candidates, remarkable because in a wonderful way he could make known or apply spiritual experiences to the conscience of his hearers as realities in his own life and faith. I think that the spiritual influence of such an address as Bishop Brooks could give on such an occasion was not simply the loving exhortation of a chief pastor, but his words made his candidates feel that from that time he was their special friend—they knew him and he knew them. This was the gracious and telling power of our late Bishop throughout his diocese.

But to me the most impressive part of this memorable confirmation service was not witnessed by the people that night. As the Bishop and the minister were kneeling together at the altar in prayer for those around the chancel rail, I saw in the appearance of the Bishop something which held my attention, so beautiful was the sight! He was leaning against the altar with arms outstretched upon it, in the attitude of supplication, his robes and white hair shining with a soft lustre in the warm glow of the chancel light. The strong, sweet face was turned to heaven, glowing with the fervor of his earnest appeal; the great lustrous eyes were looking upward as seeing only "Him who is invisible". It was a solemn moment in the service! Souls were being dedicated to God's keeping! To this holy consecration the soul of the Bishop seemed to be giving all its energy, sympathy and pathos. The scene reminded me of that of King Solomon and his prayer at the dedication of the Temple. It was the vision of an instant only, but filled with heavenly suggestions—a picture to be always cherished in memory!

After the service the Bishop, by hurriedly taking a carriage, might have reached the 9.00 p. m. train to Boston. I suggested this to him, but he preferred to wait. After removing his robes he said that he would like to go into the church and meet the newly confirmed. I think that it is safe to say, judging from his manner, that he counted this opportunity of meeting his candidates and others as one of the most pleasant features of his episcopric. There was, as I observed, a heartiness in his greeting of each one and an interest in the many little things said to him, which evinced the fatherly concern of a true bishop. It was plainly a happy privilege to mingle thus among the people. The "common people heard him gladly," why should he not give himself gladly to them? This was surely his spirit, if not his thought.

It was a stormy night and many of the congregation lingered for some time in the church talking with the Bishop. He sat down in one of the pews with a little group around him. At the same time he asked some questions about the old church and spoke especially of the pulpit, the peculiar design and construction of which he greatly admired. He said he had found it a very comfortable and easy place in which to preach. Then looking up and around, in his characteristic way, the Bishop turned to the rector and said: "I think you ought to be a very happy man in such a parish as this." I said, "Why, Bishop?" And he replied: "Oh, I think there is always a charm in working and preaching in such a venerable church as this! It is associated with such an interesting past!"

The carriage was now ready for us and, as there was nearly an hour before the train left, we rode to the rectory to pass the time. This was to me the pleasantest and most profitable hour of all the time spent with the Bishop. Our conversation was upon things spiritual and practical, relating to pastoral work. The spirit of a noble-hearted Bishop was as clearly revealed on this night and in the country parsonage as it surely had been on greater occasions. His manner conveyed no suggestions that he was annoyed by the train's late departure, or that he was bored by having to stop with you, or that he was counting the minutes of an enforced stay. Though urged to give himself entire rest, yet he refused to do so, saying that he preferred to pass the time in the study. And what a delightful hour it was!

In his gracious and kind way the Bishop asked about the state of the parish and of the work and duties relating to it. There was godly concern about the spiritual life of the people and an affectionate interest in the welfare of the rector and in the progress he was making, such as might delight and encourage the heart of any pastor. This country parish was as much on his heart for faithful oversight as any other part of his diocese. This the Bishop made very clear in all that he said that night.

There was very much more said relating to the work of the ministry and upon spiritual matters in general which cannot be stated in detail. That the conversation was thoroughly helpful may be inferred from the following incident that occurred during our conversation.

The Bishop had questioned me about the attendance at church—how many usually were there in the morning; if there were an afternoon or evening service, and if many came out to that. In reply to this question I said that although usually there were but few at the second service, I felt it to be my duty to do my best to minister to these few as faithfully as to a greater number, and for my own encouragement I often thought of Christ's conversation with the "Woman of Samaria"—that He was as devoted to her and as earnest as if He were speaking to a multitude! This casual remark touched the Bishop, for instantly he lifted his face and said, with that glowing expression of intense feeling so familiar to his friends, "Oh! yes, Christ gave to her from the depths of His soul the very best that He had to give". From that we went on commenting upon the gracious interview as related in the fourth chapter of St. John, the Bishop quoting one verse and I another until we had spent at least half an hour in this way. What a delightful half hour that proved to be!

The Bishop's visit was on a Thursday night in Lent. On Friday afternoons he had service and an address at Trinity church, Boston. On the Saturday following our conversation in the rectory I saw in the morning's paper a report of the Bishop's service of the previous afternoon, and that he had preached upon the subject of Christ's interview with the "Woman of Samaria".

The manner of the Bishop was not that of a man who was in the least self-conscious either of his office or of his greatness. His spirit was that of an earnest soul talking of the deep things of God to a brother in the same work of life. Yet in the sweet simplicity of his ways with men there was ever the shining presence and the irresistible power of a great bishop—the greatest of the Church in modern times.

Cardinal Mercier

By THE REV. PASCAL HARROWER

"MY Brethren, do but look up, I beseech you, and keep your eyes fixed upon this polar star of your eternity."

He stands, and all the world, a thousand years,
Shall sight this age, and see his lifted hand
Of benediction o'er the Belgian Land.
Such blessing, who can doubt? What craven fears
Can weaken this stern will that holds its way
From task to task, lighted by faith and prayer?
Through all these troubled horrors, who would dare
To doubt that right shall in the end have sway
Upon the earth? In this one Cardinal,
His mighty Church hath found alone her voice
For liberty, sounding his shepherd call
So clear and far, that baffled souls rejoice,
And through the haggard misery of war
Men see the light, and follow Mercier's Star.

"THE same heart of the father, which in its hunger of love is so exacting, will, out of the same hunger, never despair, and never forsake; it will never cease from the pursuit of that responsive trust which it desires; it will make allowances, it will permit delays, it will weave excuses, it will endure rebuffs, it will condescend to persuasion, it will forget all provocations, it will wait, it will plead, it will repeat its pleas, it will take no refusal, it will overleap all obstacles, it will run risks, it will endlessly and untiringly forgive, if only, at the last, the stubborn child heart yield, and the tender response of faith be won."—Henry Scott Holland.

A More Abundant Life

By GEORGE FOSTER PEABODY

OUR American democracy lost during the last Summer one of her great souls, a man whose life was a splendid illustration of "the more abundant life", which phrase was one of his favorite citations of the words and life of Jesus Christ. Hollis Burke Frissell lived for sixty-six years a life that was to the very last young in its charm and courage of faith, and its manifest growth in strength and patience and sweetness. His life was one that demonstrated the real purpose of education, and the advantage of culture of manners, whereby his heart and soul were able to express his character through many points of real and helpful contact with people of every kind. It is well that such a life should be known far and wide.

Hollis Frissell began his child life with the many limitations to be found in the home of a country clergyman. He had, however, the advantages that such a home surrounding gives to know nature and realize the supreme fact that the earth is the source of production of all life's necessities. He early learned the importance of the farmer, and his insistent emphasis on this issue and his successful development of an important school of agriculture, and its many offshoots, proved his ability to see in advance the vital necessity of the farmer's occupation which the world now realizes to be the first need of life. Dr. Frissell's parents did not have money to afford him full educational opportunity and he was spared the temptation to depend on others, which so often hinders the growth of a proper sense of independence. This made it necessary for him to work even for the means to secure the school and college training which his ambition to do his part in life and his inheritance of a cultivated environment made him purpose to have. His life was notable because he invariably grew to the measure of the stature that his work called for. He did not show, in student days, the brilliant promise that so often fails to prove out in life's contests, perhaps because such individuals gain too early in life a measure of satisfaction without due relation to life's great function of co-operation, the working patiently side by side with one's fellowmen; but at that time the quality of service was developed in his very successful leadership of the Yale Glee Club, which gave him the added advantage of travel and thus meeting with many people whose co-operation was important to secure. Dr. Frissell, after doing some teaching, entered the ministry and as assistant to the Rev. Dr. Charles S. Robinson, pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian church in New York, his education was enlarged by the contact with the manifold revelations of human life that the pressure of city life develops. In this position of prominence young Frissell was observed by the genial founder of the Hampton Normal and Agricultural School of Virginia, General S. C. Armstrong, who asked him to become chaplain of the school, in which service he showed the qualities and devotion which led him to be made assistant principal, and, after the death of Armstrong, principal of this school.

Hampton teaches the practical and thorough education of the hand, the head and the heart, and so effectively that its fame has spread literally to every corner of the globe. In a real sense it can now be said on the eve of its fiftieth anniversary that this school has worked a revolution in educational thought which promises untold blessing to the democratic world of the future. It is a true portion of a sketch of Dr. Frissell's abundant life to emphasize the growth of this school, for it is now proper to say and it is beyond question that the throbbing and manifold and really thrilling life of the Hampton Institute is the splendid outworking of the spirit of Frissell as well as of Armstrong. Of no school can it be said so assuredly that the students in it, after fifty years, feel the personal spirit of the founder. "The Hampton spirit" and "the Armstrong spirit" have meant the same thing to those who know and to say "the Frissell spirit" will now be recognized as equally true, and yet Frissell was no imitator of his great predecessor. He was, in marvelous humility, always saying, "this was what the general would have done", but that meant he knew in his soul how the spirit of service, thought for others and constant seeking for the best method was the essence of Armstrong's consecration to the service of humanity through the working out of the problem of democracy with Negro boys and girls and men and women.

Frissell made as definite and distinct a contribution to the growth and development of education as almost any man of his generation. It was through painstaking thought, discussion and investigation of every detail that he reached conclusions; patiently, quietly but with a force irresistible, although often not realized, that he pressed them to the experiment. But with all this he showed through the whole effort, and in its carrying out, this spirit of relation to the more abundant living of the human life in its varied aspects of labor, social relations, religious expression and community co-operation. It was in this unlimited variety of expression that Frissell always worked out this emphasis of what humanity was capable of, and those of us who were privileged to know him intimately have the consciousness of the true greatness of our friend, from our association with the gentleness, simplicity, intellectual apprehension, breadth of tolerance, and sympathy of this man of notable physique, quiet manners, large knowledge of men and affairs, and the charity, which make up the abundant life.

This man of God was always a man among men. I recall no one who was more sure of being the centre of a group at the Century, the City, the Yale, the Cosmos and other clubs, where he was always at home. Not less was his social power manifested among the six thousand Negro farming population of St. Helena Island off the coast of South Carolina, where his coming to the Penn School was always a joy as well as a benediction. In every gathering on a university campus he was just as simply at home, and his constant reading made him always up to date. But he was ever at his fullest stature in the unique gatherings on the beautiful campus of the Hampton School, where the coming together of the Indian students with the choice spirits of the world's highest civilizations ever stirred his historic sense to recall the first coming of European civilization to the spot where the waters of the Atlantic Ocean mingle with those of Chesapeake Bay and the James River. Here at Hampton will be found his living monument in the company of students, teachers, neighbors, and friends, who know that he rejoices that his fame is mingled with that of Armstrong and the myriad company of those who, fifty years ago and more, realized that the race problem of the reunited states of America was a fundamental problem of democracy.

He was broadly liberal in his sympathies in both religion and politics, standing for the advanced movements, for women's opportunities and responsibilities, and for the broader and simpler education of the coming citizenship of the democracies of the world. He had traveled widely, in fact around the world, bringing back from Africa confirmation of the wisdom of the Hampton idea.

This man's life was, as is readily seen, abundant in its personal reach and emphasis, and through it all Dr. Frissell in simple and natural fashion always recognized and emphasized its true relation to the Christ revelation of what human life may be, and also the fact that one aspect of Christ's mission to humanity is that just such lives may be and should be abundant in number in "this present world", recalling Paul's words in writing to Titus, "Christ bids us to live soberly, righteously and Godly in this present world".

In this day of democracy's test, should not the Church of the living Christ consecrate her efforts to the making of more such abundant lives? The call is to everyone. The life of Hollis B. Frissell may teach us how each one can live and help others to live the more abundant life.

The Woman Movement and the Deaconess—II

By THE REV. EDWARD L. PARSONS, D.D.

IN the previous paper I noted the unsatisfactory situation in which the Church finds itself in relation to the ministry of women. There is much work neglected and much poorly done without women. On the other hand, women are doing much work, but with a status which varies from diocese to diocese and even from parish to parish.

There are in the parochial life of the Church great numbers of functions which men can perform only inadequately and some of which men cannot perform at all. Today in most of our work these things are done in a haphazard way by volunteer helpers or in a clumsy way by the clergy. Some parishes have paid "parish visitors" or "parish secretaries". Their work is good, but they have no Church standing outside their own parish. A few parishes have deaconesses. A few dioceses employ deaconesses for their more general work or in special mission fields. The whole situation is unsatisfactory.

What the Church needs to do is to gather up all these loose ends and bind them together in the deaconess order. It needs to give that order a status and a dignity and a bigness of opportunity which shall enlist into it the finest young women from our colleges and universities. Today these fine young women, true earnest Christians, devoted to the Church, are turning eagerly into social work of various kinds. They go through the schools of philanthropy. They go into the Y. W. C. A. If they are determined to work in the Church, they go as missionaries, or, by good fortune, they find some responsible position in the Auxiliary or in organizations like the Girls' Friendly Society opened to them. Some of them go through the training schools and then slip off into these other kinds of work. But the total number of them all who stand by the Church officially is infinitesimal compared with the number that go into other work; and of that small number only a part become deaconesses. The rest may or may not continue their service in the Church. It is largely a matter of chance.

There are many more women in the Church than men. There are many more women eager to serve the Church than there are men. If our schools and colleges and universities can send four hundred young men to our theological seminaries a year, why is it that more than four hundred young women do not crowd our training schools? A paltry forty-five is the entire number in our three schools at present.

Why is there no sense of vocation? Why is this vast spiritual power lost to us in any effective way? There are great fields of work which the clergy cannot touch. There are women to enter upon them. Why do they not? The answer is, I believe, that the Church has never led them to feel that there is an opening and ministry commensurate with what they give when they give themselves. A few women have seen it and entered upon the field and the Church is enriched by their service; but at what sacrifice and with what heartsearching as to whether they have done right.

Let me give an illustration of the way it works. A boy and a girl grow up in a parish together. He graduates at the high school. She goes to the university. He is good but stupid and a little weak. She is strong, brilliant and a leader. Both love Christ and the Church. After four years of indifferent clerking in a business house he is led by his rector to enter the ministry. The rector asks her as she graduates to become a deaconess. Now note the contrast which she has to face. The young man with his ordinary gifts and no college training has three years of professional study. However little he may be able to take advantage of it the great opportunity is there. The Church has legislated carefully to guard its high standards of training. Examining chaplains and candidates may fail to keep up to the standard, but the Church tries to insist that they shall. For the woman, admirable as are our schools, no opportunities at all comparable to those for the men are offered. Two years' training is required; but it is not defined. Individual bishops may interpret the requirement as they like, even to considering two years of ordinary parochial work as sufficient. The Church takes no real interest in the matter.

When the young man is ordained he and all the Church know what transpires. His status is recognized. The service is in the Prayer Book. Orders are conferred by the laying on of hands. The heritage and responsibilities of nineteen hundred Christian years are laid upon the newly-made deacon and priest. But this young woman, giving her brilliant life, is set apart as any bishop may choose. The Prayer Book is silent from end to end about her work. It knows no ministry of women. In one diocese she may be only a uniformed parish visitor, set apart like a lay reader, or admitted to her work like a Daughter of the King. In another diocese she may be treated as possessing a real ministry; but in any case her position is dependent upon the way in which the clergy regard her.

The average young man has a decent salary, a bishop who feels responsible for him, an assured position, a pension when he retires. The outstanding young woman is certain of nothing; not even that other women will think of her as anything but a uniformed assistant to the clergy. Is it any wonder that the woman whose rector has asked her to go into Church work draws back? She sees all about her immense opportunities for service. She sees the work of countless parishes inadequately done (although most of them do not know it) for lack of the contributions which she can make. But the only professional standing which the Church can offer her is so ill defined, so insecure, so doubtfully regarded that she hesitates. To the young man whose attainments, character and qualities of leadership are utterly mediocre, the Church has much to give. To her, with university education and proved gifts of leadership, the Church has little or nothing to give. Is it any wonder that she seeks a field in the Young Women's Christian Association or in education or in social work of some kind? The Church expects from her everything and gives her nothing. She will keep on with her purpose of working for Christ; but the Church cannot command her services.

There are no doubt many other reasons which help to this strange fact, that in an age of marvelous advance in woman's work, with women taking advantage of every kind of opening for vocational work, the Church in which women otherwise count so greatly cannot command the real vocational service of women in the only opening which it offers them; but this concrete illustration of a young woman's problem does, I believe, go pretty close to the heart of the matter.

The question before the Church is whether we desire to draw into a woman's ministry some considerable proportion of the stream of fine young Churchwomen coming out of our colleges and universities. If we do we must give them a chance. We must make their ministry in its way as worth while, as full of dignity, as carefully exalted and safeguarded as the ministry of their brothers.

That means for one thing that when they come to the momentous service in which they give themselves to the Church the office which is used must be found in the Prayer Book. It must be wrought out with thought and prayer from the riches of the past and the vision of the future. The woman who brings forth a child finds her Thanksgiving counted worthy of a place in the Prayer Book. She has rendered a true service to God and man and it is well. But is her service greater or her thanksgiving more sacred than the service and the vows of the woman who gives herself to the Church's work? Is the consecration of a building to God's service of more consequence than that of a life? Is the Institution of a minister into a pastoral relation which he may sever in six months a more sacred occasion than the admission of a woman to a life service? The answers are obvious.

For another way of exalting this work there must be canonical legislation which shall put the education and status of the deaconess beyond the decision of the individual bishop or priest. It would be needless to attempt to define the details of her education and examinations as closely as has been done for the men; but some definition as to education and some fuller safeguards in her professional life are needed.

And yet once more the Church must put behind this work of the women the enthusiasm and interest which show themselves in seeking to stir the sense of vocation, in building up the schools, in increase of salaries and in revealing everywhere the greatness of the opportunity. Twenty-five years have seen a vast change in the position of women in the world. They have seen very little apparent change in the position of deaconesses in the Church. They have seen a most inadequate utilization of women's readiness to serve. Some people have therefore concluded that there is little or no place for the deaconess; others have traced the condition to various special difficulties and hoped they would in time be overcome. But the women are not waiting, I believe, for the solution of any special problems, nor are they unready to serve. They are waiting for some tangible evidence that the Church wants them, believes in them and is eager to give much to those who are offering to give themselves.

An Enheartening Report

"THE Message of the Church to a World at War" was the chief topic at the annual meeting of the General Board of Religious Education, held in New York Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, January 29, 30 and 31.

The attendance was unusually large owing to the fact that the meeting celebrated the end of the first five years of the Board's life and to the fact that important subjects concerning the war were under discussion.

Bishops Burleson and Beecher came to present the needs of the preparatory schools of the West. They reminded the Board of the enviable reputation for secondary schools which the Church had secured. They reported that many schools felt the need of some Church-wide plan for secondary education. At present there was no plan, and Church schools were constantly succumbing to the pressure of the difficulty of financial maintenance. The names of fifteen schools were listed which had given up work during the past year. There were many loyal Churchmen and women who were willing to devote their lives to Church preparatory schools, but they wanted to be sure that there was some plan by which the schools would be developed and supported.

The bishops claimed that it was necessary that there should be a secretary of the Board who would devote his entire time to Church preparatory schools. He would make inquiries into schools and spread information among Church people.

After consideration of this subject, the Board voted to provide a secretary as soon as the income of the Board would permit. Another vote was passed, making provision for the traveling expenses of voluntary agents who in the meantime would make preliminary inquiries and assist in forming some plan for strengthening the work of the preparatory schools of the Church.

The discussion of the disorganized condition of our Church schools brought up the whole subject of the financial needs in the various departments of the Church's educational work. Dean Bartlett made a plea that the whole subject be dealt with comprehensively and that if financial aid was to be given, it should be given in relation to the total needs of the Church. As a result, a committee consisting of the Rev. Dr. Wm. E. Gardner, Bishop Lines, Bishop Reese, Dean Bartlett and Mr. Theopold was appointed to report at the next meeting of the Board a plan by which the financial needs of the Church's educational work may be dealt with comprehensively as a responsibility of the whole Church.

The attention of the Parochial Department was centered especially upon the best way of equipping teachers for their work in our Church schools. The present Standard Course in Teacher Training, having been in use practically ten years, needed revision. This revision has now been undertaken by the Department, so that by next Summer the first of a new set of training courses will be available for work in the field. Most of these new courses will be constructed especially for our own Church use. They will, however, be so articulated and arranged as to make co-operation possible in the spreading movement for community teacher training. Reports from many sources show that the attention of teachers has been drawn away from training courses probably by the War interests. It is desirable that every effort should be made to maintain the highest standard of equipment.

Report of progress was also rendered on a plan for a universal schedule of daily devotional Bible readings, which the Board wishes to make available for the whole Church.

The figures showing the progress in the use of the Christian Nurture Series, prepared under the direction of the Board, for Church school work, are most encouraging. Roughly speaking, there are about 100,000 children in the Church working every Sunday on this material.

Both the Primary Council and the Senior Council, which have in charge the production of further courses under the Series, were continued, and it is hoped that by next September all the courses, from the kindergarten through the high school years, will be in print.

The Primary Council has also under preparation a manual on primary worship, which promises to be of great assistance in all the lower grades of the Church school.

The demonstration school which the Board maintains at Gary, Indiana, for experiments in weekday religious instruction, is proving most effective. The Church School established there, under the guidance of Miss Vera L. Noyes, has doubled its numbers, and is giving every child of the parish, with the exception of the Kindergarten and High School grades, two periods each week of religious instruction in addition to the Church school session on Sunday.

The Rev. Paul Micou, the secretary of the Department of Collegiate Education, made his first report to the Board. His clear grasp of the situation in our colleges and universities won the confidence of the Board. The Board approved a plan by which the department would make an effort to place the right man, properly equipped, in one college town each year; that a system of scholarships be established by the Collegiate Department by which students in a given university who are definitely training for service in the Church might be awarded scholarships for their junior and senior years; that the department raise a fund to make inquiries into the best methods of promoting religion in colleges and state universities; this inquiry should cover the kind of courses needed in religion, either within the curriculum or without, and the best methods for student worship and organization, and the peculiar kind of pastoral care which the unique college situation demands.

Dr. Gardner, the general secretary, presented a report covering five years of achievement.

In October, 1912, few dioceses had organized diocesan boards of Religious Education, and the provincial boards existed only in name. Today, nearly every diocese has passed a canon providing for a Board of Religious Education, and the eight provincial boards are recognizing opportunities for service, discovering leaders and organizing for the work in the future provincial life that is bound to develop as the Church grows and meets enlarged needs.

In 1912 there were only three persons employed by the Church in Religious Education, outside of educational institutions. Today, twenty-two persons give full time under the direction of general, provincial or diocesan boards.

In 1912 there was a variety of Sunday school text books and an indecision regarding what should be taught in the schools. Today, there is a growing unity of devotion to the Christian Nurture idea with its demand for training in memory, devotional life, Christian service and instruction in doctrine, scripture and history, and a co-operative effort to win by tested material the right text books and properly equipped teachers.

In 1912 there were only two summer schools offering training for Sunday school teachers. Last summer there were twenty, with a total enrolment of over twenty-five hundred teachers.

In 1912 there was no co-operation between the public schools and the agencies for religious education. Today, in New York, Indiana, Colorado, North Dakota and many other places there is a recognition by the public school of the educational work done by the Church.

In 1912 there was little co-operation between the various communions in educational inquiry and promotion. Today, there are the Council of Church Boards, the Commission on Christian Education of the Federal Council, the Sunday School Council and the Association of American Colleges.

In 1912 no Church-wide effort had been made to win and hold the college student. Today, by conference and correspondence, over one hundred Church workers in as many institutions are organized in their quest for an answer to the question—How can the Church keep and nourish college students living four years under the peculiar conditions in our institutions for higher education?

In 1912 bishops, examining chaplains, seminary faculties and candidates for holy orders were groping in a maze, in which interference, waste of effort and distrust of guidance yearly meant the loss of good men for the ministry and the diminished confidence of the laity. Today, the Council on the Education of Postulants and Candidates for the Ministry, and various provincial and diocesan committees on theological education have at least pursued some of the problems to their sources. As the result of earnest thought and conference, they will request legislation at the next General Convention.

In October, 1912, there was no assured income for the work of education in the general Church. Today, two-thirds of the diocesan conventions are voting over $15,000 annually, and each year sees progress toward the payment of the total apportionment of $32,000 for the budget of the General Board.

In response to many requests from rectors for topics and study outlines on the religious questions raised by the war, the Board voted to issue a pamphlet entitled Studies in Religion for War Times. This will be mailed to the clergy immediately; it will contain topics and guiding questions for meditation and class study. It will also suggest Bible reading and books to aid discussion.

The Rev. Dr. Nichols reported for the Department of Theological Education that during the year three meetings had been held by the Council, devising plans for a better equipped ministry. Over thirty members were at work and at the last meeting nine theological seminaries were represented. The Council will report in time for the General Convention at Detroit in 1919.

Dean Bartlett presented a report on the recruiting and support of candidates for holy orders. He showed that the supply of future clergymen was endangered. While the Church gained communicants at the rate of 2 per cent. per annum, the clergy increased by less than 1 per cent. During the quarter century ending 1913 the communicants had increased 103 per cent., while the clergy had increased but 23 per cent.; in other words, communicants increased four times as rapidly as the clergy who were to minister to them. The report showed also the disturbing fact that a large proportion of our clergy came from the Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians and Roman Catholics. One diocese reported "that fully half of the men entering our ministry today are importations". The Church is not self-maintaining and self-reproducing in the ministry.

While the war has partly created and partly revealed our needs, it has also given us the greatest chance in a half century for securing candidates. When the Civil War ended a remarkable number of remarkable men entered the ministry. The sober and quickening influence of war should be supplemented by a clear and ringing call for enlistment in the greatest of all armies. The necessary agents to spread the call are at hand: chaplains, lay workers of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, secretaries of the Y. M. C. A. and Red Cross—all might become recruiting sergeants for the Church.

At the conclusion of the report the Board voted to request the aid of the chaplains and Church workers among the soldiers, in presenting the need of recruits for the ministry. It also voted to press the example of England, who is raising £500,000 for the education of soldiers who offer for the ministry, and to confer with the War Commission concerning the raising of a fund for similar support in this country.

The most enjoyable session was the dinner at the General Seminary, Wednesday evening. The members of the Commission on the Revision of the Prayer Book which was in session, were the guests of the General Board at the dinner. After dinner a circle formed around the big fireplace at the end of the refectory. Addresses were made by Mr. Robert H. Gardiner, the Rev. Hugh L. Birckhead, Bishop Reese and Mr. John W. Wood. The topic was "Religious Education in War Times". Bishop Reese said in part:

"A question put to me in one of our military camps was this: What has religion to do with the war? Don't you know that science and military strategy are the forces which will win the war? Such a man sees the grim necessity for the use of physical force in this present crisis, but he also realizes that this is but preparatory for the constructive conquering forces to follow. When you knock a man down who has mistreated a woman, he is not thereby conquered. You have conquered his body, not the man. Not until the quality of good-will enters the heart of a man, creating right relationship with you and the person he has injured, is he conquered. Good-will is the product of religious influences.

"Our young men are not laying down their lives upon the altar of science or physical force, but that through their sacrifice the great moral and spiritual forces may become permanent.

"In this sense religious education is a war measure, the essential training of those who in the next generation must be leaders in the reconstruction of our civilization upon a sure foundation, the guarantee that the democracy for which we fight may be a democracy interpreted and kept true to Christian standards.

"Back of the training camp is our American youth in our colleges, Church schools and homes. It is a short-sighted patriotism which sees only the training camp and neglects the training of the reserve force at the home base. The man in the camp summons the Church to help him do his duty as he prepares for his service 'over there'. Then, as he goes forth to take his place on the firing line, he asks the Church to see to it that those who follow after him be so trained in Christian truth that they will 'carry on' that for which he is fighting and giving his life. We cannot be a true patriot and neglect Christian education."

A League of Nations

is the claims of humanity. The Christian religion is in spirit and essence international; it makes no virtue of patriotism but much of citizenship in the heavenly kingdom. The undivided Church of old never lost sight of this and proclaimed as its ideal the city of God on earth as it is in heaven. Popes and Puritans alike tried to realize it in practice, and they only failed because their aims were too narrow. Hildebrand's attempt in particular has been called "the most magnificent failure in history", and it well deserves the name; ours of today are petty in comparison. Let the Church recover this note; the world is ready and waiting; our present sufferings have made us long to hear it once again uttered as by the voice of the Lord of Hosts.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

FIRST OF CLERGY WOUNDED UNDER GENERAL PERSHING

The Rev. Lieut. Vanamee Hit by German Bomb

ESSEX, CONNECTICUT.—The Rev. Lieut. Parker Vanamee, rector of St. John's church, Essex, who is serving under General Pershing in France, was wounded in the knee by a bomb from a German airplane. He is, so far as is known, the first priest of the American Church to suffer casualty in the war. He was sufficiently recovered from his wound that he is now back again with his battalion. Mr. Vanamee entered one of the training camps immediately after the United States declared war, and received the commission of first lieutenant. He is on leave of absence from his parish.

BEWARE OF IMPOSTORS ASKING FOR WAR FUNDS

Social Service Commission of Federal Council Issues Warning

The following paragraphs contained in a letter from Mr. George T. Scott, assistant secretary to the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church, calls attention to a kind of fraud which is prevalent, and sure to increase during the war:

"You may remember Mr. Atto Eshiya of Persia who presented to you about a year ago a letter of introduction from Bishop Ostenfels of Denmark. You may remember that Eshiya's story was to the effect that Presbyterian missionaries were mismanaging the expenditure of relief funds in West Persia and that the logical person to handle such funds was himself! You will be interested in knowing that Eshiya has been arrested by local authorities in Trenton as a fraudulent beggar and is now out on bail.

"I mention this faker who came to you so well recommended merely because he is typical of many hundreds of similar Oriental frauds getting rich on the charity of Americans, largely church people. The New York World in its magazine section of October 28, 1917, gave a two-page expose of this amazing swindle'."

The Commission on Social Service, which is responsible for war relief of the General War-Time Commission of the Churches, advises that pastors should inform themselves, when unauthorized solicitors appear, and givers should report suspicious persons. The American Committee on Armenian and Syrian Relief says: "Beware of solicitors. This committee pays no commissions and authorizes no collectors other than well-known treasurers."

FIRST NATIVE BISHOP IS ELECTED IN CHINA

The Diocese of Chekiang is the first of the eleven dioceses of the Church in China to elect a Chinese to the Episcopate. Bishop Graves writes that on December 11 the Rev. T. S. Sing, Archdeacon of Chekiang, was elected Assistant Bishop. This, Bishop Graves points out, is another step in advance and means much for the future of the Chinese Church.

The confirmation of the election will be one of the most important duties in the next General Synod when it meets in Shanghai in April of this year.

IT ISN'T SERMON THAT PUTS HEARERS TO SLEEP

Though Some Require Partial Anæsthesia for Safe Delivery

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—If you fall asleep in church it may not, after all, be the fault of the sermon. The janitor might be to blame. So says Health Officer J. H. Landis of this city in an editorial on "Ventilation" in the weekly bulletin of the Health Department.

Referring to a news item about "a prominent public official who 'took the count' in a contest with an overworked church atmosphere", Dr. Landis says: "Some sermons require partial anæsthesia of on audience for safe delivery. Fortunately the number of this variety is limited. Most people attend church services with the definite purpose of experiencing a spiritual uplift. An atmosphere that hits like a club puts this definite purpose to sleep in short order and may lead in some instances to the erroneous impression that the clergyman is losing his hold on his audience.

"Many congregations have changed ministers when they should have discharged the old janitor and employed a new one. One of the answers to a decreasing church membership is the appointment of a health committee with instructions to devote particular attention to church ventilation. It must be discouraging for the man in the pulpit to see a goodly proportion of his audience sleeping placidly through a sermon which, in the quiet of his study, appealed to him as an unusually able effort.

"Any shepherd who has noticed growing indifference towards his efforts on the part of his flock is recommended to try the fresh air treatment. If it fails to bring results the psychological moment for resigning is at hand."

CAMBRIDGE STUDENT WINS SOCIAL SERVICE PRIZE

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—Last April a prize of one hundred dollars, given by an unknown donor, was offered through the Social Service Commission of the diocese of Pennsylvania for the best essay on "The Field of Service Open to Members of Religious Orders in the Preaching of Social Righteousness". Bishop Brewster of Maine, Professor Miller of the General Theological Seminary and Miss Vida D. Scudder of Wellesley consented to act as judges. Their decision has been unanimous in favor of the essay of Mr. Alfred Scott Priddis of the Episcopal Theological School, of Cambridge, Massachusetts, to whom the prize has accordingly been awarded by the Commission.

GOOD SHEPHERD CHURCH BURNS IN LEXINGTON

Building Just Completed and Freed of Debt Destroyed

LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY.—Shortly before the hour for night service on Sunday, January 20, the Church of the Good Shepherd in Lexington was destroyed by fire. A new location in a substantial and growing part of the city had been purchased and the church removed thereto.

Under the inspiring and energetic ministry of the Rev. Dr. Richard Wilkinson the indebtedness involved in this removal had been wiped out, and the Church had later been enlarged and beautified at a cost of some $9,500, and all but about $1,500 of this sum had been pledged, and most of the pledges had been paid.

Pastor and people left their burning church when any salvage was clearly hopeless and, at a meeting near by, heroically resolved to build again, notwithstanding the exhausting effect of their previous gifts and labors.

"It was my privilege to meet with them", said Bishop Burton, "and I promised to secure as much aid as possible from outside this city. Dean Massie and his Cathedral congregation, with quick sympathy, sprang enthusiastically to the financial assistance of the afflicted congregation, and Dr. Wilkinson has many friends in the community at large who will contribute generously toward the new church. We must rebuild at once, and as attractively and commodiously as possible, if our beloved Church would hold its own in the popular eastward part of the city of Lexington."

ORDER CLOSING CHURCHES IN WASHINGTON REVISED

Opens All Churches for Services During Morning Hours

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The local fuel administrator who closed two-thirds of the Washington churches beginning January 27, for three weeks, revised his decision a few days later, opened all for the morning services on Sundays, February 3 and 10, and permits the opening of all chapels and parish halls where war work is in progress. After February 10, unless something unexpected occurs, the usual arrangements will be resumed and our churches will be able to begin their Lenten schedules on Ash Wednesday.

Morristown Rector at Camp Merritt

MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY.—The Rev. Barrett P. Tyler, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, has been given three months leave of absence by his vestry and goes to Camp Merritt as a volunteer chaplain for that period of time, beginning last week. He is quartered with the Y. M. C. A. and will work in intimate relations with them.

This means a great deal to the diocese of Newark, as it is naturally anxious to do its part in ministering to the soldiers as they pass through this great embarkation camp.

SAYS EPISCOPAL CHURCH LEADS TOWARD UNITY

Louisville Pastor Gives High Praise to Dean McCready

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.—In conversation recently with the Rev. Dr. E. L. Powell, pastor of the First Christian church of Louisville, the speaker pointed out some interesting facts and made some very complimentary statements about the Episcopal Church to the correspondent of THE CHURCHMAN. In doing this he made one realize the great responsibility, as well as the great opportunity which our Church has along the lines of Christian union. Dr. Powell was asked for a statement and said:

"Growing out of the World War there must necessarily come new adjustments, domestic, social, industrial and certainly religious. Divided Protestantism has had revealed as never before its weakness and inadequacy in dealing with the world task. Some sort of organic unity is fast approaching. It may not be based on church polity or historic creeds, but whatever is valuable, and certainly whatever is essential to the life of Christianity in both creed and organization will be preserved.

"The Episcopal Church in the establishment of its Christian unity foundation has put herself in a position of splendid leadership in this great and inevitable cause of Christian union. I say 'inevitable', for nothing can be more certain in the outworking of both spiritual and economic laws than the realization of this mighty consummation.

"In our own city of Louisville the newly-chosen Dean of Christ Church Cathedral, the Very Rev. R. L. McCready, has in both speech and by example won a place in the hearts of all denominations in this supreme and vital matter. When he was inaugurated dean of the Cathedral it was most gratifying that one of the week night services of his inauguration was arranged with particular reference to promoting this Christian fellowship, one and indivisible. The simple fact is that the laity of our churches are growing restless under the economic waste associated with denominationalism. We cry out for the leaders who, for both economic and spiritual reasons, yea, who for the supreme reason of bringing the world to a belief and vital acceptance of Jesus Christ, shall sound in clarion notes the prayer of Jesus that 'they all may be one'.

"Now is the day of the Church's opportunity. Now is the day of the Church's salvation from provincial inefficiency and impoverishment. Now is the day for the prophet to speak from the mountain top, for both the hour and the message have to do with world relations, and every pulpit must have nothing smaller for a sounding board than the infinite heavens."

TRAINING SCHOOL FOR LEADERS HELD IN OMAHA

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.—The training school recently held in Omaha for the teachers in mission study and those co-operating in the New Junior Plan was well attended and helpful. Miss Wittens had a number of clergymen and Sunday school superintendents in her classes, besides the Junior leaders, and her explanations and instructions gave the "Plan" a real boost in Nebraska.

Miss Matthew's class on Bible study was wonderful. The earnestness and consecration of the teacher herself inspired in her entire class a desire to have a fuller and clearer idea of the Book and its purpose, and a willingness to try harder than ever before, not only to bring friends to join the study class, but to do everything possible to further the cause of missions. The classes were held on January 15, 16, 17 and 18 at the Gardner Memorial parish house in Omaha.

FEDERAL COUNCIL DENIES CHARGES OF DISLOYALTY

Professor Deissmann Said American Churches Did Not Support War

In refutation of the statement of Professor Deissmann of Berlin that the American Churches are not supporting the war—a charge based on the assertion that the Federal Council had not issued any statement until a month after war was declared—the Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, general secretary of the Council, has issued a statement calling attention to the fact that the officers of the Council sent a message to President Wilson within twenty-four hours, assuring him of the whole-hearted support of the American Churches.

The statement to which Professor Deissmann referred was issued by a full meeting of the entire Council which included four hundred representatives of thirty denominations from all parts of the country, held at Washington about a month after war was declared, the preceding weeks having been given to preparation for the meeting. The utterance said: "We are here to pledge allegiance in unstinted measure, without haste or passion, to steady and inspire the Nation and to keep ever before the eyes of ourselves and of our Allies the ends for which we fight".

At the present time the Federal Council is preparing, with other church bodies, for a nation-wide campaign to educate the people in the moral aims of the War. Dr. Macfarland, who is an advisory member of the Speakers' Bureau of the Committee on Public Information, recently presented to Mr. Creel and the president the results of a nation-wide questionnaire, among clergymen, giving clear evidence of their practically unanimous support of the policies of the president. "Indeed", said he, "in the main the preachers who have been the most urgent pacifists are now in large measure the most earnest supporters of the War, in the feeling that the victory of the Allies is not only the surest, but the only way of securing an enduring peace."

Rectory at Kenedy, Texas

KENEDY, TEXAS.—The new memorial rectory of the associate mission which includes Beeville, Karnes City and Runge, with Kenedy as the centre, was dedicated here on the feast of the Epiphany. Bishop Capers visited the other churches of the mission on Friday and Sunday afternoon, but Sunday morning was devoted to a united service for the mission held in St. Matthew's church here. The building is known as the Hutcheson Memorial, since it was erected with money bequeathed by the Rev. Dr. Hutcheson, who spent forty-six of the sixty-three years of his ministry in Texas.

AMERICAN WOMEN GO TO AID FRENCH PROTESTANTS

Will Help Refugees Going to France Through Switzerland

NEW YORK.—The first women to go to France under distinctly religious auspices, Miss Grace Marling and Miss Catherine Wetmore, sailed from New York on January 25, under the auspices of the American Huguenot Committee, which represents in America the Franco-Belgian Evangelization Committee.

It is at present impossible for the committee to send these women direct to the towns now occupied by the Germans, in which the French pastors and deaconesses are working, so, temporarily, they are being "loaned" to a secular organization, La Societe Secours d'Urgence, of which Madam Joffre is president and Madam Viviani vice-president.

Miss Wetmore and Miss Marling, who have spent a number of months in "intensive training" in preparation for this work, will go at once to Evian-les-Bains, to aid in the work of caring for "les repatries"—refugees who are being sent by the Germans from occupied territory, through Switzerland, back into France. These are mostly women and children and are pouring into the little town at the rate of about six hundred a day.

HOW A PASTORAL CALL REMADE A BROKEN LIFE

Social Service Visit Restores Automobile Manager to Happiness

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—St. Andrew's church on the West Side ministers to a large community composed of the diverse elements which have made the West Side of Chicago so well known in the sphere of social service. Naturally the clergy of these parishes seemingly have little to encourage them, as they work against intolerable social conditions. However, now and again encouragement comes.

The rector of St. Andrew's, the Rev. Benjamin E. Chapman, on New Year's took a few flowers from the altar of the Church and made a sick call. As he was leaving the house one of the members of the household made an appointment to meet him the next morning at the Church. Then came the all too frequent story of a life ruined by intemperance. The man had been manager of one of the largest automobile agencies in Chicago. Then the crash and ten years of wandering. Work was secured, the man instructed and confirmed. Finally before the end of his "Year of Grace 1917" he was called into the service of the country, and writes that he has become the secretary to the general commanding one of the largest military camps in the country. He states that his ability to stand for the right, and to command confidence, comes from his participation in the Church's life and Sacraments. 1917 was an epoch-making year for him. It was the year in which he returned to his Father's house.

Church Periodical Club's New Offices

NEW YORK CITY.—Very soon the Church Periodical Club will move its offices from the Church Missions House to 2 West Forty-seventh Street. The reason for the move is that the Board of Missions needs more room for its own departments.

BERKELEY ALUMNI HAVE REUNION IN NEW YORK

Enthusiastic Gathering Hears Talk of Reconstruction After War

The New York Alumni of the Berkeley Divinity School met at the Harvard Club on January 24, about thirty members being present. It was a great pleasure to all that the President of the association, Dr. W. H. Vibbert, was able to attend. The Rev. H. S. Whitehead acted as secretary and Dr. Bernard Schulte as toastmaster. In his speech on behalf of the trustees Bishop Brewster gave his conception of the Berkeley ideal—that of a wise synthesis of acceptance of the best of the past with a genuine welcome to all that is good in the new, and an educational program fitted to the Church's task in the present day.

The Rev. Theodore Sedgwick, an alumni trustee, gave a statement of the financial needs of the school. Bishop Lines and Dr. Seymour also spoke briefly on behalf of the trustees. Professor Ladd made a report of the past school year while he was in charge. He referred with enthusiasm to the work of the new lecturers, especially of Dr. Duncan B. Macdonald in the department of Old Testament, Dr. Dickinson S. Miller in Apologetics, and Dr. Chauncey Linsley in Pastoral Theology. He spoke of the unwisdom of taking a short-sighted view and reducing our educational efficiency on account of the exigencies of the war.

In America the word "reconstruction" recalls one of the least honorable episodes in our history. If, during the Civil War, the leaders in Church and State had had imagination and faith to plan ahead for the period after the war, conditions both in North and South might be vastly better today. A school which believes in itself and its opportunities should have no difficulty in attracting students and in raising the few thousand dollars necessary to meet the present annual deficit. Professor Ladd spoke of the large number of undergraduates now on leave of absence and in the national service, all of whom intended to re-enter the school at the close of the war. Mr. Louis Pitt, '18, spoke for the student body. Dr. Miller, Dr. Karl Reiland, the Rev. J. W. Walker, and others of the alumni also spoke. The meeting was one of the most enthusiastic ever held.

HOSTESS HOUSE PRAISED BY GENERAL NICHOLSON

Says Nothing Does More to Develop Morale of Men

Admiral, Maryland.—Camp Meade, the great cantonment here, is fortunate in having in its midst a cozy and attractive rendezvous, a haven where thousands of feminine visitors, wives, mothers, sisters, and sweethearts of the men in camp can meet with them on holidays and find opportunities for social intercourse. General Nicholson, the commandant, bears the following testimony to the value of this admirable institution, which is conducted by the Young Women's Christian Association: "Nobody knows how much this hostess house means to Meade, except those who know the soldier boys and what it means to them to have a chance to meet and greet the home folks under cheerful surroundings.

"There is only one improvement I think could be made to the house—that is to build it so that it could take care of three times the number of visitors here. The management is perfect and there is everywhere felt the refining, cheering influence of women. The decorations, the home comforts that are to be found there make the place so attractive that the men hate to leave it. I am sure if a ballot were taken in camp, the men would give a rousing big vote for the extension of the activities of the Young Women's Christian Association. I do not know of anything in camp that is doing more to develop the morale of the men, to make them strive after higher ideals, to make them want to be good soldiers and clean men than the work done at this hostess house.

GRAND RAPIDS RECTOR CUTS WOOD ON FARMLAND

Uses Practical Method of Saving Coal for Industry

Grand Rapids, Michigan.—"There is enough wood around Grand Rapids to keep the city warm all Winter", said the Rev. David C. Huntington, rector of St. Paul's church, in telling how he is fighting the coal shortage. "We are keeping our church warm by the wood we cut from woods around Grand Rapids. Two vestrymen and myself recently went out to the farm of J. O. Weed, cut several cords of green wood and hauled it to the church. The coal that is released when we burn wood can be sent to the factories and keep the men working."

Mr. Huntington said that there was a great quantity of wood on his farm at Ramona, as well as on surrounding farms. "Farmers will be glad to have their land cleared", he said. "Here is a good chance to do it. There are many men out of employment and these could be sent to these farms and thus serve a three-fold purpose —giving the men employment, clearing the farm land and making it more valuable to him, and furnishing fuel to the city residents that the coal can go to the manufacturers."

ANGLICAN, RUSSIAN AND GREEKS HELP EACH OTHER

In his sermon at Trinity church on the occasion of the recent meeting of the Anglican and Eastern Association, Bishop Parker told how an Anglican coached by a Russian conducted the Epiphany services for a group of Greeks. The Bishop was at a committee meeting in Springfield, Massachusetts. He was called to the telephone by a long distance call from the youngest but one of the clergy in his diocese, who sought the Bishop's permission to conduct a service for the Greeks in his community on their feast of the Epiphany. The Bishop gave his permission. Could the service be conducted in the Episcopal Church? Certainly. Might the Anglican clergyman use the liturgy of St. Chrysostom? Did the Anglican know how to use it? Yes, he had been coached by the Russian priest with whom he was friends. Very well, the Bishop gave his hearty permission for the service. So the Anglican coached by the Russian helped the Greeks.

CHAPLAIN FOR STRANGERS FRIEND OF ALL PEOPLE

Touches Lives of Many in New York Who Need Help

New York City—It is not always through Church organizations that clergymen are enabled to serve humanity. Sometimes even greater opportunities come to those released from all pastoral obligations, who are free to minister to a whole city without regard to denominational lines. There are several noteworthy examples of this sort of religious ministry in New York.

The Rev. James B. Wasson, D.D., director and chaplain of the Strangers' Welfare Fellowship, will be remembered as having been appointed by the late Bishop Potter, when senior assistant at St. Thomas' church, as chaplain to strangers under the direction of the Chapter of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in 1907. Dr. Wasson soon realized that a broader work could be maintained on non-sectarian lines and three years later reorganized under its present name with an advisory board which includes the names of F. D. Roosevelt, Robert C. Morris, Charles F. Hoffman, Lewis B. Preston, Zelah Van Loan, treasurer, and Hugh Gordon Miller, counsel.

The aim of the Strangers' Welfare Fellowship is "to make brotherhood real to strangers". The word stranger, as used here, does not necessarily mean a newcomer, but any one who for one reason or another remains an unassimilated unit in the city's life. In the seven years in which Dr. Wasson has given his time to this broad field there have come to him many individuals to whom he has been able to give counsel and help. In talking of the fellowship recently he outlined the work of one week, which included providing a home for a respectable young woman secretary who is facing the serious crisis in her life; obtaining employment for a choir singer whose rector had been unable to grant an interview, but for whom Dr. Wasson found employment as bookkeeper; arranging for a former convict, recently released from prison, where he had served nineteen years for forgery, a chance to make good in a position; helping to place the aged mother of a city employee in a home, and advising three other women where to obtain positions suited to their abilities.

Helping to find employment is but one part of Dr. Wasson's work. An important feature is the free service of ministry to guests in hotels in his capacity as Honorary Chaplain of the New York State and City Hotel Association. To those in trouble, sorrow, need, sickness or other adversity his services are always willingly rendered. This work is wholly supported by voluntary contributions. There are no fees and no paid solicitors of funds are employed.

Death of Venerable Churchwoman

Seattle, Washington.—Adeline deBeeler Roberts, widow of the late William Milnor Roberts, died at her home here recently. Mrs. Roberts was one of the oldest subscribers to The Churchman. She was born in Pittsburgh in 1832. Her grandfather was Baron deBeeler Bertholf, minister to the United States from Brussels. Her husband was the grandnephew of the Rev. James Milnor, sixth rector of St. George's church, New York City.

SYNOD OF SOUTHWEST IN FIFTH ANNUAL MEETING

Hears Inspiring Addresses From Clergymen and Laymen

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLAHOMA.—The fifth annual meeting of the seventh province was held at St. Paul's Cathedral, Oklahoma City, for a three days' session beginning January 22. Into these days was crowded much that was inspiring, interesting and illuminating. Ten bishops and one bishop-elect were present.

The revered and beloved presiding bishop was general chairman of the meetings. The time and place of the Synod most happily coincided with the twenty-fifth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Brooke. Not only the host, he was also the chief figure at a special thanksgiving service the first evening, and a luncheon on the second day. Fitting tributes were paid to the great work of this pioneer Bishop, so arduous and even dramatic in the earlier years.

The chief speakers at these two occasions were Bishops Tuttle and Thurston, and the Rev. E. H. Eckel, Mayor Oberholzer, who brought the city's greetings; Judge Ames, representing the Commercial Club; the Rev. Mr. Baird, Presbyterian, who spoke for the ministers of the city, and Mr. Trudgeon, junior warden of the Cathedral parish.

There are several hundred thousand soldiers in the great camps of the Southwest; naturally, therefore, the responsibility of the Church for the army work was most earnestly presented.

Archdeacon A. W. S. Garden of San Antonio received the nomination of the Synod to succeed the Rev. E. H. Eckel as provincial secretary.

An interesting resolution offered by Archdeacon Garden was adopted and sent to the Commission on Revision of the Prayer-book. It provides for a form of reception into any congregation of the Church, before Confirmation, of persons who have been baptized in some "congregation of Christ's flock" not of the Episcopal Church.

The conference on religious education was most ably led by the Rev. B. T. Kemerer and the Rev. J. S. Bunting; on social service by the Rev. J. H. Lever and the Rev. R. D. S. Putney; Bishop Partridge and the Rev. R. N. Spencer, and the work for the soldiers at San Antonio and El Paso was forcefully described by the Rev. Dr. W. B. Stevens and the Rev. Fuller Swift. War-time work in the domestic field was enthusiastically advocated by Suffragan Bishop Saphoré of Arkansas, and the relation of the Red Cross to the cross of Christ graphically pictured by the Rev. E. H. Eckel. An address on "The Impelling Cause of Missions" was given at the closing service by the Rev. W. P. Witsell of Waco, whose parish will receive the Synod next October.

The sessions throughout were enlightened and enlivened by the stirring addresses of the bishops. There were present the Rt. Rev. Drs. Tuttle, Brooke, Kinsolving, Partridge, Thurston, Capers, Howden, Wise, Moore and Saphoré. A message of sympathy was sent to Bishop Temple of North Texas, now recovering from illness.

The newly elected Suffragan Bishop for work among the colored people in Arkansas and the province, Archdeacon Demby of Tennessee, was presented to the Synod on the first day, and made an address at the final service. He gave the impression of a man who will do a vigorous and tactful work for the people of his race.

The Woman's Auxiliary held meetings and study classes during the week, and many of its members were in attendance at the Synod itself. The Synod had the privilege of hearing inspiring addresses by Miss Lindley, Mrs. Biller and Miss Withers. Another woman speaker at the Cathedral was Miss Schuler of New York, who told of the political conditions against which the Suffragists in that State had to contend to win their recent victory.

In a resolution of gratitude presented by the Rev. H. J. Lloyd, the Synod expressed appreciation for the lavish hospitality furnished by Bishop Brooke, Dean Bate and the Cathedral Auxiliary. Many words of praise were said also for the beautiful music at the chief services, led by the vested choir of men and women.

The next Synod will be held at Waco, Texas, October 22 to 24 of this year.

JAPANESE YOUNG WOMEN WILL BE STENOGRAPHERS

Modern Business Methods Require Machine Writing in Japan

Japanese young women are beginning to make the acquaintance of the typewriter. Not a machine that writes the weird Chinese characters that constitute Japan's written language, but a real American machine that writes perfectly good English. This is one of the recent developments of St. Agnes' school, Kyoto.

Miss Etta McGrath, who went from St. Luke's church, Montclair, New Jersey, last summer to be Bishop Tucker's secretary, writes that on April 1 she is to become instructor of typewriting at St. Agnes'. The trouble is she has not a single machine other than the one she uses for Bishop Tucker's work. She needs three machines of standard make. Rebuilt machines, costing approximately $50 each, will serve the need.

"Would any young woman who is familiar with writing machines like to form a Typewriter Guild to supply at least one machine?" asks Mr. Wood of the Missions House. "Would any business man, who knows the necessity and mechanical assistance of a typewriter in modern business, like to give another?"

Mr. John W. Wood, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City, will be glad to supply further particulars.

A Successful Canvass

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—A recent every-member canvass at Grace church (the Rev. O. E. Newton, rector) was attended with gratifying results. There were forty-seven more pledges for the parish and seventy-two more for missions than ever before. Two years ago there were only three persons contributing towards missions: today every envelope which goes on the plate has money in both ends. The Sunday school has increased over 200 per cent. during the past two years.

Chaplain at Camp Dix

The Rev. H. H. D. Sterrett is now chaplain, with rank of first lieutenant, of the Twenty-sixth Regiment Engineers at Camp Dix. The vestry has granted him leave of absence.

MEN URGED TO STUDY MISSIONS AND THE WAR

Committee on Missions of Washington Sends Letter to Men

WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—The Standing Committee on Missions in the Province of Washington has sent a letter to the men of the Province in regard to studying world conditions and their bearing upon Christian missions during the coming Lent. This was pursuant to action taken by the recent synod of the Province. The letter is as follows:

"We are paying the bills for a small army of workers—2,800 and more. What are they doing in the various so-called mission fields? How do present world conditions affect them? Has their work any influence on the great movements of today, especially in the Far East? You as an intelligent Christian and Churchman ought to be able to answer these questions. Can you?

"The recent synod of our Province felt that you should be able to answer these questions, and instructed us to place the matter before you.

"We therefore suggest that during Lent, 1918, one hour each week be spent by our men in groups large or small in every parish and mission in the Province to acquaint themselves with the facts.

DISCUSSIONS AT LUNCHEON

"Some of our busiest laymen, finding how interesting the subject of modern missions is, are extending their luncheon hour once a week to discuss this subject; others meet downtown after office hours; others at the home of one of the group on a week-day evening; others again at the rectory, church, or parish house, as is locally most convenient, on a week-day evening, or before or after service on Sunday.

"The point is to gain the approval of the rector to form one or more groups, and to meet where and when is most convenient each week during the Lenten season. Your best method might be to turn your Men's Bible Class into a group during Lent.

"The leader of such a group needs no special training. His duty is rather to start and direct the general discussion of the subject. Some simple book as a guide should be used, and each member should have a copy.

"We recommend the 'Why and How of Missions' or 'Then and Now'. A copy of these can be obtained free of cost from Wm. C. Sturgis, Ph.D., Educational Secretary of the Board of Missions, Church Missions House, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York, also other interesting material giving facts and figures will be sent on request.

"The 'Spirit of Missions', or any other missionary magazine will help as additional reading.

"Consult your rector. Start now!

"Faithfully yours,

"WM. CABELL BROWN,
"GEORGE G. BARTLETT,
"DAVID W. HOWARD,
"J. GIBSON GANTT,
"WM. R. BUTLER,
"JOHN W. REYNOLDS,
"STEPHEN E. KRAMER,
"Standing Committee on Missions."

WHAT FOOD CONSERVATION MEANS IN A PARISH

And What It Would Mean if Every Parish Did the Same

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA.—The Social Service Commission of the Diocese of Bethlehem asked the parishes of the diocese to do everything they could in the way of food conservation. "I want to let you see", said the Rev. Robert P. Kreitler, of the Commission, "what hearty co-operation on the part of every parish would mean were the clergy and lay-folk to follow some such plan as one of our brethren did here in a congregation of a few families. You will appreciate the startling totals. I have just had this report sent me by the Rev. Ezra Neikirk, who is rector of this little parish."

The parish referred to is St. James' church, Pittston. It co-operated in the food saving campaign seven weeks of November and December. The average number of families reporting weekly was twenty-five. Weekly reports were made to the Food Conservation Department at Washington.

Families	Wheatless Meals	Meatless Meals	Wasteless Meals
Total for 7 weeks	814	1,692	3,675
100 persons	3,256	6,768	14,700 clean plates
	651 loaves or 2 barrels flour	1,000 pounds 1 nice steer	$150 estimating waste at 1 cent a plate
For the nation, 100 x 1,000,000	2 million bbl.	1 billion lbs.	$150,000,000
For 1 year 7 3/7 x 7	15,000,000 bbl.	7,500,000,000	$1,114,000,000

"This is the modern miracle of feeding the multitude, including the parable of gathering up the fragments", said the rector.

"Moral: Help Hoover, stand by Garfield, hats off for Wilson. Let no man complain about his own sacrifices and loss of wages or property or ease and comfort until he has laid upon the altar of national sacrifice as much as the least of the men who this wintry day stand in the trenches of Flanders or face the gales and horrors of the sea."

NEWARK AUXILIARY HOLD STIMULATING CONFERENCE

Services, Classes and Conferences Occupy Women for Two Days

PATERSON, NEW JERSEY.—A conference for Churchwomen of the neighboring towns was held here on January 29 and 30. It began with a celebration of the Holy Communion, followed by a quiet hour conducted by Bishop Stearly. "12:30—Luncheon (Bring your lunch and knitting)" was the next item on the program. In the afternoon there were classes on such subjects as "The Bible, Its Message for Today", "The Meaning of Prayer", "Africa" and "Sunday School Teaching" with Mrs. McCulloch, Mrs. Newell, Mrs. Hutchison and Mrs. Brewster for the leaders. Then conferences on the "Church in War Times"; "The War Commission", led by the Rev. Augustine Elmendorf; "Experiences at Camp Dix", led by the Rev. A. W. M. Thompson, who has just returned from work at St. George's Club, Wrightstown; "Girls in War-Times", led by the diocesan president of the Girls' Friendly Society, Mrs. Van Winkle. The second day the classes met again in the morning and the afternoon, and after the third session the conferences were continued: "Do Mission Stations Need Supplies This Year?" Mrs. Gantt; "The Draft Law and Missions", Mrs. Danforth; and "The World Family", Bishop Burleson.

These meetings were under the direction of the Newark branch of the Woman's Auxiliary. The excellent program planned so wisely, the vital and stimulating messages of the leaders, and the fellowship in worship and study proved the great worth of such gatherings.

MAIN RECITATION HALL IS DESTROYED BY FIRE

Blue Ridge Mountain School Suffers Serious Loss

DYKE, VIRGINIA.—Church people generally will be shocked to learn of the burning on January 31 of the recitation hall at the Blue Ridge Industrial School, Dyke, Greene County, Virginia. Coming as it does in the midst of the school session it will seriously hamper recitations, which may have to be suspended for a while. The loss is estimated to be $6,000 with insurance of $4,000.

This school was established about seven years ago to give industrial training to boys and girls of the mountains. Beginning in a log cabin it has steadily grown until to-day it represents an investment of $45,000. One hundred and eight pupils are enroled, of which number eighty are in the boarding department. The pupils live in cottages, from twenty to twenty-five in a cottage. All classes in academic work were held in the building which has been destroyed.

It is imperative to rebuild at once. Funds for this purpose should be sent to the Rev. Geo. P. Mayo, Dyke, Virginia.

RECTOR OF DANISH CHURCH WORKS WITH ANGLICANS

Has Always Been Friendly With the Episcopal Church

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.—"My hope is a full connection between the Church of Denmark, the Church of England and the American Episcopalian Church", recently said the Rev. R. Anderson, "Kirkens Praest" of the beautiful little Danish church in this city. This work has always been friendly to the Episcopal Church, and Mr. Anderson frequently uses Episcopal churches for his services. He is connected with the Seaman's Mission in Copenhagen, and for twenty years has been considered a member of the staff of the Seaman's Church Institute in New York, where he frequently has services. Many of the young people are confirmed in the Danish church in Brooklyn, and many others are confirmed in the Episcopal churches.

SIX LANGUAGES USED IN UNITY CORRESPONDENCE

One Year's Total Is 10,000 Letters to Secretary Gardiner

GARDINER, MAINE.—One of the most encouraging things about the World Conference on Faith and Order is the mail received by the secretary of the Commission. Before the War he was receiving about 10,000 letters and postal cards a year. But they came largely from the United States. Since the War broke out the number of letters received has decreased, for many people in the United States think the movement has been suspended by the War.

Here is what came to the secretary on January 3, 1918. Letters from Y. M. C. A. secretaries in Massachusetts, Virginia and Ohio, from a minister of the Reformed Church in Ohio, a Congregational minister in Minnesota, a minister in New Zealand, the head of a religious order of the Episcopal Church in the United States, an American Baptist Mission in Burma, an archbishop of the Church of England in Australia, a bishop of the Church of England in Canada, another in an island in the South Atlantic, a prominent Free Church minister in England, a Church of England clergyman, a Church of England clergyman from South Africa now a chaplain in France, a Canadian Church of England clergyman also a chaplain in France, an English doctor of divinity, a bishop of the Episcopal Church in Japan, a minister of the Christian Church in Kentucky writing for himself and the three other ministers in his town, a clergyman in Iowa writing also for himself and the pastors of the other churches in his town. All of these promise to observe the Week of Prayer for Unity.

Besides there were letters from a Greek bishop in Crete, a Roman Catholic archbishop in India, an eminent Roman Catholic divine in Italy, a metropolitan of the Greek Church in Macedonia, a Roman Catholic archbishop, a bishop and an Apostolic vicar in Asia, and a layman of high official connection with the Church of Greece. All these express interest in the movement. The Greek layman sends also a magazine containing a long article by him about the World Conference, and the divine in Italy a review with an article by him explaining the Mass ad tollendum schisma. Then there are inquiries for the literature of the movement from a Church of England clergyman in Ceylon and a lady in England. The languages used in the letters are English, Latin, French, Greek, and in the reviews, Italian and Greek.

Bethlehem Convention Date

BETHLEHEM, PENNSYLVANIA.—The 1918 Convention of the diocese of Bethlehem will be held in Trinity chruch, Pottsville, and the Bishop of the diocese, with the concurrence of the Standing Committee, has fixed the date for the fourth Tuesday in May, the 28th.

GIFTS AND MEMORIALS

Grace church, Jefferson City, Missouri (the Rev. George L. Barnes, rector), is the recipient of a new two-manual pipe organ, the gift of Judge A. M. Hough, the senior warden of the parish. The instrument was made by the Möller Company of Hagerstown, Maryland.

Personals

Archdeacon Garden of West Texas has returned to his diocese after spending a number of weeks preaching and speaking in the Northeast. Among other things he set forth his interesting plan for mission preachers working under the Board of Missions at the December meeting of the Board; secured the building of the military chapel at San Antonio through the gift of New York Churchwomen (the $3,000 is not all in; Miss Emily Warren is anxious to receive sufficient to complete the fund); and secured the gift of their senior curate, the Rev. Dwight Cameron, for military work from the Church of the Transfiguration.

The Rev. Lin Tse-yang (formerly known as Yang Tse-ch'ien) of the Hankow Mission died recently. Mr. Lin's father, Yang, a London Mission Christian, was the first teacher of our first Wuchang School (later to become Boone School) and presently was ordained the first deacon of our Church in Hupeh. The son studied at Boone and St. John's, was ordained deacon in 1882 and as such served in many of the "up-river" stations. He was not ordered priest till 1914, but of late years, especially, he has used most faithfully and to the great advantage of the Church his unusual gifts as a preacher to non-Christians.

The Rev. Paul F. Swett, canon precentor of the Cathedral of the Incarnation, Garden City, and head of the Church Charity Foundation, Brooklyn, is in St. John's Hospital, Brooklyn, suffering from the effects of a fall, during the slippery weather, in which he broke a ligament in his shoulder and burst a blood vessel in his inner ear.

The Rev. Arthur J. Watson of St. Paul's church, Albany, New York, has accepted charge of St. Luke church, Pawtucket, Rhode Island, and has entered upon his work.

The Rev. Horatio N. Tragitt, rector of Crystal City, and Miss Henrietta Muller, of Jackson, Missouri, were married by the Rev. H. Nelson Tragitt, father of the groom, at high noon Wednesday, December 12, at the home of the bride's parents.

The Rev. F. J. Barwell-Walker has been appointed Priest-in-Charge of St. Bartholomew's, Chicago.

The Rev. H. Hobart Barber has resigned the Church of the Messiah, Detroit, Michigan, after a rectorate of ten years and with Mrs. Barber will spend the months of January and February at the Allison Hotel, St. Petersburg, Florida.

The Vestry of Christ's church, Ravenna, Ohio, has extended a unanimous call to the Rev. James H. Clarke, D.D., of Sistersville, West Virginia, to become their rector. Dr. Clarke has the call under consideration. He has been at Sistersville about five years.

The Rev. Ray O. Miller has accepted a call to St. James' Parish, Los Angeles, California, and will take up his work the middle of February. Mr. Miller was formerly rector of the Church of the Saviour, Hanford, California, but spent last year in the East. He is the author of a recent volume published by Sherman, French & Company of Boston, "Modernist Studies in the Life of Jesus".

The Rev. J. A. Weagle, formerly assistant at the Chapel of the Mediator, has been called to the rectorship of St. Bartholomew's church, Philadelphia.

ST. ELIZABETH HOSPITAL DOES 15 YEARS' WORK

Capacity Much Enlarged Since Foundation of the Institution

Shanghai, China.—In March, 1918, St. Elizabeth's hospital will have completed fifteen years of work since its foundation. Although the development of the work has at times seemed slow, yet a comparison of the amount done ten years ago with that of this year is encouraging. For the year ending September, 1907, the number of inpatients received was 299 and of those treated in clinic was 7,198, as against 945 in the hospital and 17,957 in the dispensary for the year ending September, 1917. The earnings of the hospital for those two periods respectively were $2,000 and $11,000, which is a fair index of the increased amount of work.

The capacity of the hospital has been considerably increased during the decade first in 1911, by adding a wing to provide for maternity and tubercular wards and a chapel, and by enlarging and remodeling the dispensary building, in 1913 by building two-story servants' quarters and enlarging the kitchen, and in 1916 by building a nurses' home with dormitories, class rooms and recreation rooms to accommodate thirty students. The first two additions were made possible by gifts from America, but the nurses' home was built from the local income of the hospital.

The parish authorities of St. Lawrence's, Libertyville, have begun the raising of a fund by popular subscription for the purpose of erecting a suitable altar window in the new church building recently dedicated to the memory of the late Bishop Toll, Suffragan Bishop of Chicago. Bishop Toll was the founder of the parish, and until his death its sponsor. He frequently spoke of St. Lawrence's as the "child of his old age". The year before his death he dedicated the older church building, which he had purchased for the parish, and which was destroyed by fire last year.

Church Loaned to Syrians

Grand Rapids, Michigan.—The Syrian Orthodox Church held their Christmas midnight service according to Eastern times, January 6. Grace church was loaned to them for this service. The terrible blizzard and shortage of coal and the order by Mr. Garfield closing the churches and parishes to but six hours a week, have hindered the work of the Church greatly.

Clerical Brotherhood

Philadelphia.—Heatless Mondays have hindered the meetings of the clergy at the church house. Through the hospitality of Dr. Grammer, the regular meetings will be resumed at St. Stephen's church on February 8.

For Country

"You have done your bit; you must now do your utmost!"

At St. Peter's church, Philadelphia, the women of the parish come to the church every Wednesday morning at ten o'clock for a celebration of the Holy Communion, with special prayers for Base Hospital No. 10 with which their rector, Dr. Jefferys, is serving as chaplain in France. Then they go to the parish house and sew and make surgical dressings for the unit. Each woman brings two sandwiches with her, and at noon one of their number makes hot cocoa. In this way they are able to stay at their work until five o'clock. Women of both the uptown and the downtown congregations come together at this time. Never in the history of the parish has their been such a unifying work as this war service.

The following letter is being sent out by the American Girl Scouts to the girls of the United States: "Would you enlist in the United States Service if you could? Perhaps you cannot go to France, but you can do your bit here as a recruiting agent. We are organizing the girls of America solidly behind the national struggle to preserve intact the heritage and liberties our fathers bled to give us. The nation as a whole must be strongly behind our men who go to fight and die—or they die in vain. Already our 15,000 Girl Scouts are doing daily their bit—the bulk of it is great. It must be many hundred times as great. The Girl Scouts not only give war service. Every Girl Scout gives to the home finer ideals for stronger and better living, and the Scout Troop leavens the home town with an organized sentiment for wholesome joy. It makes for practical girl-woman righteousness and effective, devoted patriotism. Girl Scout Troops are self-supporting when once started; but they must be started. It takes field service to carry the message and show the way. It costs less than a dollar to enlist one girl 'for the period of the war' and her training will last a generation. How many girls will you enlist? Now is the time for individual sacrifice. Blood over there and money here. Your help is given twice if it is given quickly. Interest yourself in American girlhood—now!"

Secretary Daniels has sent the following message to the men serving under the color:

"There is not an army in the field whose effectiveness is not reduced by reason of immoral disease. The Navy suffers likewise, and business halts because venereal diseases destroy the manhood of workmen and fighters.

"During the last statistical year men of the American Navy lost 141,378 days by sickness from a small group of absolutely preventable diseases—or, rather, diseases contracted by sin. And this does not count those who, though diseased, were not disabled, or the evil of the loathing danger of contagion to the clean members of the crew.

"The remedy? There is but one—continence. It must be preached in the home, in the school, in the marts of trade, in the pulpit and military camps, and among shipmates afloat.

BALTIMORE

Hospitality to Soldiers at St. Paul's—Old St. Paul's church is showing a lively interest in the large number of soldiers and sailors who visit the city. Its large and attractive parish house is thrown open to them on Saturday and Sunday afternoons and evenings and they are welcomed and entertained by a committee of gentlemen and ladies. Music, stationery, and magazines are furnished, and hot coffee and food are provided. A friendly interest is shown towards the visitors, who are invited to church and guided to suitable places to spend the night. More than 2,000 men in uniform have already been entertained, as many as 200 at a time, and much has been done to impress them with the broad interest which the Church feels in their welfare.

Gift to the Church of the Redeemer—The Vestry of the Church of the Redeemer, the Rev. Charles A. Hensel, rector, has just received from Miss Ethel M. Miller a gift of $5,000, the income from which is to be used by the Woman's Guild for the music of the church services, in which her mother, Mrs. Edgar G. Miller, of whom the gift is a memorial, was deeply interested for many years. The beautiful organ in the church was given by Mrs. Miller as a memorial of her husband, who was for forty-two years a vestryman of the parish.

Bequests by Miss Green—Miss Ella Green left by her will substantial bequests for church and charitable purposes. There is a trust fund of about $75,000, the income of which is to be enjoyed by her cousins. After their death the principal is to be equally divided between Christ church, Baltimore, the Diocese of Maryland for superannuated and disabled clergy, and the Church Home and Infirmary of Baltimore.

PHILADELPHIA

The Church and Coal—One hears on every hand of parish houses being used for Church services. Organizations in the parishes are being asked to meet on one or two days only. Among such reports, one shines out: the Church of the Holy Apostles has closed the church, moved into the parish house, and given some sixty tons of coal to needy families in the neighborhood.

St. Paul's Church, Doylestown—The Sunday school of St. Paul's, Doylestown, has undertaken the support of a French orphan child for one year.

A service flag has been presented by a member of this parish with a star for each of the twelve men who have gone into the service of the Nation. Several young men were confirmed just before they were called to the colors.

On Christmas Day the parish presented the rector, the Rev. W. Y. Edwards, with a purse containing $110.

Personal—The Rev. P. S. Atkins of Morrisville has been extended an unanimous call to the rectorship of St. Matthew's church, Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

CONNECTICUT

1,700 in Service—There are some 1,700 young men from the congregations of Connecticut serving in the Army and Navy. To each of these the Bishop sent a letter for the Christmas season.

Sunday School Union Meets—The twenty-seventh (Mid-Winter) Conference of the Hartford branch of the Connecticut Sunday School Union was held in Christ church parish house, Hartford, on the evening of the Feast of the Conversion of St. Paul, under the joint auspices of the Connecticut Sunday School Union and the Diocesan Board of Religious Education. Few meetings of the Sunday School Union have been more inspiring.

Archdeacon Harte briefly outlined the work and purpose of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education. The Rev. Geo. Henry Heyn of Trinity church, New Haven, then gave a clear and most helpful address on "The Practical Workings of the Christian Nurture Lessons". His conclusions were based on four years of experience with this new system of lessons. On very short notice Bishop Acheson had consented to take the place of the Rev. Llewelyn N. Caley of Philadelphia, who was unable to be present. His topic was "The Personal Touch in Sunday School Teaching". With searching and relentless directness the Bishop pointed out the serious failures of the teacher. Lateness, irregularity, irreverence were no mean offences when viewed in the light of personal touch. It was a splendid and stirring address and gave a remarkably clear perspective of the commonplace in the teacher's work. In spite of the failures it called to mind, the Bishop's address was one of highest hope and encouragement.

The meeting was honored in having both Bishop Brewster and Bishop Acheson present.

War Committee Appointed — Bishop Brewster has appointed a strong committee, with Bishop Acheson as chairman, to take charge of the war activities in this diocese. This committee co-operates with the Church War Commission, and has been of great assistance in carrying out the plans of that body. Bishop Acheson is laying a vigorous hand on the task put upon him.

Social Service Conference—The Commission on Social Service and Social Research, the Rev. Geo. L. Paine, New Haven, chairman, held a conference at Berkeley Divinity School on February 7.

Church Damaged in Storm — Grace church, Broadbrook, suffered severe damage in a recent storm. Sixty feet of the roof was torn away by a severe gale, which will necessitate difficult and expensive repairs.

Coal Conservation—Many churches through the diocese are using every means to conserve coal. St. John's, Hartford, is holding all of its services in the parish house. In most cases the churches have adequate coal for their needs but are meeting in every way possible the suggestions of the Fuel Administrator.

WILLIAM T. HOOKER.

MINNESOTA

Auxiliary Meeting—Enthusiasm and generosity marked the mid-Winter meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese of Minnesota at St. John's church, Minneapolis, and in spite of the cold weather the attendance was very good. The rector, the Rev. Elmer N. Schmuck, opened the meeting and welcomed the delegates to the new St. John's. After an address by Bishop McElwain Mrs. Theopold presided over the business meeting and then introduced Bishop Tuttle, Bishop Tyler of North Dakota, and Bishop Thurston of Eastern Oklahoma.

In his own characteristic manner Bishop Tuttle discussed the influence of women in the home, the school, religion, business, war. "And now", asked the Bishop, "who has put upon woman the business of politics"?

At this meeting announcement was made by the Educational Secretary, Miss Mary Smith, of the plan for gatherings of a strictly educational nature both in Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Downtown Survey—At the regular quarterly meeting of the Church Extension Society of Minneapolis Bishop McElwain appointed a committee to make a survey of conditions in the downtown part of the city with a view to establishing a permanent downtown mission work. Bishop McElwain also stated that it is his intention to have all new suburban mission work placed in charge of one of the older city parishes until such time as the work becomes self-sustaining.

Service Flags—A service flag with nearly 350 stars now hangs in Shattuck school, Faribault, and at the Church of St. John the Evangelist; a second service flag has been hung in the church. The first flag, bearing over seventy stars, proved to be too small.

Coal Conservation—The clergy of the Twin Cities are arranging their Lenten schedules with a view to conserving fuel as far as it is possible to do so. Chapels and parish houses heated for Red Cross work, etc., are to be used for weekday and Sunday evening services.

Lenten Luncheon—This year the rector of Christ church, St. Paul, the Rev. Walter S. Howard has been asked to provide a simple luncheon for those who are anxious to attend the noonday services during Lent. Christ church is the downtown parish of St. Paul, and as a rule there is always a very fair attendance at these services, and it is felt that making it possible for the worshipers to secure their lunch at the parish house will increase their number.

Heatless Monday—From every part of the State comes the word that the people are doing their utmost to keep the spirit of the "heatless" Monday order. The order has created difficult problems in Minnesota as it has in every other State where it is in force, but those most affected are meeting their problems in a patriotic manner.

CHICAGO

Dr. Birckhead in Evanston—The people of Evanston were granted the rare privilege of hearing Dr. Hugh Birckhead of Baltimore on three occasions. On January 26 he spoke at St Mary's Hall under the auspices of the Evanston War Council. On Septuagesima Sunday he was the special preacher at St. Luke's church. That evening he spoke at the First Methodist church under the auspices of the Evanston Sunday Evening Club. On each occasion Dr. Birckhead brought to his hearers the results of his experiences at the front. He had ample opportunity for visiting the various battle lines, hospitals, munition plants, and other activities. He was present during the violent attack and counter attack on the line in Belgium; went up 5,000 feet in a hydroplane, and took a trip in a submarine. Later he went to Switzerland and interviewed several distinguished German officers.

Honor Roll Service in Evanston—An "Honor Roll" service was held at St. Luke's church the Second Sunday after the Epiphany, with the parents, relatives and friends of the eighty men and women enlisted from St. Luke's as special guests. Company E of the National Reserve Militia was present in a body. The processional service flag was carried in procession, the flag bearer being escorted by a soldier on one side and a sailor on the other. The Rev. Frank Wilson, voluntary chaplain at Camp Grant, was the preacher. The choir was assisted by brass instruments, the trumpeters being in procession.

The "Feast of Lights" was observed this year on the Feast of Epiphany. Meanwhile the greatest blizzard of the year was raging. The Wise Men in costume bearing the traditional gifts were represented by men of the congregation. Immediately after the service scores of men fought their way to St. Luke's parish house, a half mile away, to receive instructions for what has proven to be an epochal campaign of conquest for St. Luke's. The ultimate result of the "Blizzard Conference" was a special service of Thanksgiving on Septuagesima Sunday afternoon, at the close of a week's campaign for weekly pledges for parish, missions and building fund. A unique feature planned for the campaign was the issuance of a daily paper which was to be sent to all the parishioners. The first issue was just in the press when Dr. Garfield's Fuel Conservation Order shut down the printing establishments. Nothing daunted, however, the parish authorities contracted for a page in the local newspaper for the six days. Thus each parishioner received each day seven columns of live messages on the church and its work.

New Altar at St. George's—During the month there has been placed in position in St. George's church, Grand Crossing, the Clarke memorial altar. The altar is being presented in memory of Mr. Christopher Clarke, by his entire family. Mr. Clarke was one of St. George's most faithful workers.

"War Analyst" at St. Peter's—In accordance with the expressed policy of the Men's Club of the parish for the year 1917-18 of having some phase of the war situation presented at each meeting, the speaker in January was Mr. S. J. Duncan Clark, the war analyst on the staff of the Chicago Evening Post. Mr. Duncan's subject was "Strategy of the War Fronts". The lecture was profusely illustrated by means of lantern slides.

The Rev. Malcolm J. VanZandt, who for some time has been acting as junior curate of the parish, has been promoted to the position of senior curate. Mr. VanZandt was married early in January to Miss Alice Meredyth, and on the Sunday following the parish presented him with a substantial purse as a token of appreciation and good will.

LOUISVILLE

Church Closes to Supply Coal to Poor—For the first time in eleven years the little Mission of St. Thomas' at Lyndon, Kentucky, was closed on two Sundays, January 13 and 20. On January 13 the Mission was closed because the snow was drifted so deep that the children could not get to Sunday school. On the 20th all services were abandoned that the supply of coal at the church might be turned over to several families in the neighborhood who were entirely without coal and had been unable to procure any on account of the blizzard.

Camp Zachary Taylor—The church activities at Camp Zachary Taylor are broadening out very materially as time enables the organization to be more thoroughly perfected. The Civilian Chaplain, the Rev. Mr. D. C. Wright, has a celebration at the Camp every Sunday morning. The Lay Work of the Camp is in charge of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, which has supplied a Mr. Swiggart, who devotes his entire time to this work. The Bishop preached at the Camp on January 20 and expects to have confirmation on the 27.

FRANK F. GILMORE, JR.

ATLANTA

A Bishop Chaplain—The Rt. Rev. W. P. Remington, who was recently consecrated Bishop of Minnesota, is Chaplain of the Unit Number Twenty-six at the base hospital now located at Fort McPherson, near Atlanta. Bishop Remington was consecrated in the uniform of the United States Army, and then left immediately for his post as Chaplain.

Open House—All Saints' church, Atlanta, is keeping open house every Sunday afternoon for the soldiers at Camp Gordon. The soldiers respond in numbers. They are entertained and refreshed, and it is made as much like home as possible.

Personals—The Rev. J. S. McCloud, of Nashville, Tennessee, has been called to be rector of St. James' church, Macon, and it is understood that he will accept. Mr. McCloud is a graduate of Sewanee. He was formerly the assistant of Bishop Mikell when he was rector of Christ church, Nashville.

The Rev. Randolph R. Claiborne has been appointed Chairman of the War Savings Committee for Cobb County, Georgia.

RANDOLPH R. CLAIBORNE.

BOSTON

A Message From France—The following message is part of a personal letter from one of the younger priests of this diocese, the Rev. Karl S. Cate, who is engaged in Y. M. C. A. work there. It is especially interesting as giving some idea of the great problem of the soldier on leave who visits Paris as an alert and curious stranger. The Y. M. C. A. is enlisting the services of some of the most capable and experienced men in the theatrical and other amusement enterprises of America in this task of providing wholesome and stimulating amusement and recreation for the great numbers of American soldiers who will more and more be flocking to Paris for longer or shorter periods during their times of furlough or convalescence. Mr. Cate writes:

"After having been assigned to a seaport for work with sailors, I came back to Paris in response to a telegram, to prepare a special report for General Pershing on the question of leave for the soldiers. This has been done and I have been hard at work getting the plan blocked out and it now looks as if we should soon begin to develop some pretty extensive centers for the men. The plan has been approved by the high military authorities and by February 15 we must be ready to handle 3,000 men and increase our accommodations as fast as possible, for the demands will grow rapidly when we open up. We need good men and shall require more and more competent helpers as the work develops. If you at home could know the conditions in Paris and what it does to our boys who have been brought over here to fight, you would realize how vital it is for our soldiers to have these resorts to which they may go for rest and recreation. It is going to be a whale of a job.

"Urge everyone fit for the work to get into the Y. M. C. A. and come over and help us. This will be the biggest thing the Y. M. C. A. has tackled; the very largest opportunities for construction and service. We must think bigger, move faster and use our imagination more than we ever did before."

St. Vincent's Festival—The annual festival service for servers and acolytes of the parishes of Boston and vicinity was held in the Church of the Advent, Boston, on the afternoon of Septuagesima. The preacher of the occasion was Father Johnson of the Society of St. John the Evangelist. Bishop Babcock was present in the sanctuary and officiated in blessing the incense and giving the episcopal benediction at the conclusion of the service. Dr. Van Allen sang the service and the Rev. George B. Nicholson, D.D., rector of Emmanuel church, Somerville, read the lesson. After the sermon, the Bishop, clergy, acolytes and choir, to the number of about 125, went in solemn procession about the church. On returning to the chancel, the "Star Spangled Banner" was sung with an inspiring enthusiasm, in place of the usual Solemn Te Deum.

A large number of the acolytes of the diocese are already in active war service, and they were especially remembered in the intercessions at this service.

Men's Communion—The Annual Corporate Communion for the men of the diocese will be held in the Cathedral on the morning of Washington's Birthday, at 8 o'clock. At 9 o'clock the men attending will be the guests of the Cathedral at breakfast. A conference will follow with an address by the Rev. Arthur J. Gammack, rector of Christ church, Fitchburg, Massachusetts.

This annual men's Communion has increased in attendance and in the spirit of co-operative devotion year by year, until it seems now one of the recognized and established diocesan features of our Lenten or immediately pre-Lenten Church life.

Cambridge "Quiet Day"—The annual Quiet Day for the alumni of the Episcopal Theological School of Cambridge was given on February 6 in the chapel of the school. The Conductor was the Rev. Edward T. Sullivan, '92, rector of Trinity church, Newton Centre.

The annual mid-Winter Dinner of the Alumni Association was held the evening before, at which the toastmaster was Bishop Lawrence, '75. The speaker of the evening was the Rev. Prof. Arthur C. McGiffert, D.D., of Union Theological Seminary, who spoke on "The Church and the War". The other appointed speakers in the discussion that followed were the Rev. Philemon F. Sturges, '00, rector of Grace church, Providence, Rhode Island, and the Rev. William S. Packer, '01, locum-tenens of the Church of the Epiphany, Winchester, Massachusetts. Mr. Packer is also one of the chief editorial writers on the Boston Globe.

Vigorous discussion on the fundamental questions of war, peace and reconstruction made the occasion stimulating and profitable to the goodly number of clergy who were able to be present.

KENNETH RIPLEY FORBES.

GEORGIA

Meeting of the Archdeaconry of Albany—The Archdeaconry of Albany held its semi-annual meeting in St. Matthew's church, Fitzgerald, the Rev. J. W. Bleker, vicar, January 22, 23, 24. The Bishop preached the opening sermon, other sermons being preached by the Rev. Messrs. W. B. Sams, W. W. Webster and J. B. Lawrence. An interesting thesis was read by the Rev. R. N. MacCallum on "Democracy and Christianity". The Rev. J. W. Bleker read a review of "The Church Enchained". The 143d Psalm was carefully studied by the clergy and discussed under the leadership of the Rev. John Moore Walker.

Three cottage prayer services were held, two of the clergy going together to each place. It was decided to hold the next meeting in October in Christ church, Valdosta. The main subject of this meeting will be the Apostles' Creed.

At the Business Meeting held in Fitzgerald great interest was shown in the search of scattered communicants. The reports showed that in the past few years communicants have been found in ten counties hitherto untouched by our Church. It is arranged that regular ministrations be supplied to these communicants so far as possible. This shows very good progress in working out one of the main missionary policies of the diocese, which is, to extend the Church into every county within our bounds.

HARRISBURG

125th Anniversary—The 125th anniversary of St. Paul's parish, Bloomsburg, was celebrated during the week beginning January 20. All the living former rectors with the exception of the Rev. John Hewitt were present. They were the Rev. Messrs. David N. Kirkby, Rowland S. Nichols and James W. Diggles. Services were held daily. On the evening of the 23d Bishop Talbot was present, Bishop Darlington not being well and unable to be present on the following evening. Bishop Talbot administered the confirmation. Mr. Nichols, now a chaplain in Camp Upton, preached on the evening of the 24th, in place of Bishop Darlington, on the work of a chaplain in the Army. In 125 years of its history this parish has had twenty rectors in succession. It has been a record of constant progress. Its present "plant", consisting of church building, parish house and rectory, is among the finest in the diocese. The celebration closed with a historical sermon by the Rev. Mr. Kirkby on St. Paul's day. This was followed by a luncheon in the parish house when addresses of congratulations were made by several ministers of the town, one layman, Dr. Waller, at the head of the State Normal School in Bloomsburg, and by several of the visiting clergy of the diocese. The present rector, the Rev. Frederic O. Musser, became rector in 1912. He is also archdeacon of the archdeaconry of Harrisburg.

LEROY F. BAKER.

PORTO RICO

Off for Visitation—Bishop Colmore is about to sail for Santo Domingo and Haiti for his two months' visitation there. On this trip he will welcome to their new field of work in Santa Domingo and Haiti respectively, the Rev. Mr. Wylie and the Rev. Mr. Llwyd. All reports of Santo Domingo are that it is a marvelous country, with wonderful possibilities of development and the Bishop feels encouraged that there is someone at last ready to assist in the pioneer work of the Church there. The Church in Haiti is already established, but it will be a great relief to the Bishop to have such a co-worker as Mr. Llwyd, and to the Haitians he will be a great blessing, they have had so many trials to contend with.

An Architect Enthusiastic—After a two weeks' visit in Porto Rico, Mr. Upjohn, New York architect and churchman, returned to the States full of enthusiasm for the island as he saw it. Plans are being made for the buildings at our mission stations, so sorely needed. Those at Mayagüez will receive first attention, as the work there is developing rapidly and is in quarters inadequate to the mission's activities now progressing so wonderfully under the Rev. Mr. Saylor and his excellent assistants.

Likes "Daughter of the Sea"—Mr. Robert Colmore, father of Bishop Colmore, and for many years connected with the University of the South at Sewanee, is making an extended visit at his son's home, and, like all who come, he, too, praises the land of Borinquen, "daughter of the sea and the sun".

Stays With the Mission—Mrs. Droste, our missionary's wife at Manaté, has just refused a position as Dutch censor at the Post Office in San Juan, because she did not wish to leave the work of their mission that only she could do. She has compromised by assisting once a week, on Wednesdays. Her ability as a linguist is recognized and valuable to the authorities here. The Federal Building is under strong military guard day and night. No one may enter with a parcel unchallenged.

PITTSBURGH

Annual Convention—The opening session of the fifty-third Annual Convention took place at the Church of the Ascension on Tuesday evening, January 22. On Wednesday morning the Convention assembled for its business sessions in the parish house.

In view of the approaching Jubilees of the Bishop's Ordination to the Priesthood, a representative Committee was appointed to arrange for the proper observance of that event.

The Bishop strongly recommended in his address the wisdom of Insurance Endowment for the Diocese. Instructions were given the Secretary to send to the Clergy of the Diocese who have offered themselves for military service in the United States hearty greetings, with expressions of admiration for the part they are taking for their country, and furthermore that expressions of sympathy be sent to all in the Diocese who have met with bereavemen by reason of the War.

It having been shown that there would be a great demand for the work of the Social Service Commission in the presen time, instructions were given that an assessment of $500 be made for the use o the Diocesan Commission, the proportio due to the Joint Commission to be pai therefrom.

During the Convention there were stron appeals for the War Commission's Cam paign. The Bishop read letters fro Bishop Israel and from the rector of S James' church, Florence, telling of the nee in these churches, and requested the Co vention to ask the War Commission make an adequate appropriation, if possibl for the churches in Paris and Florence.

The afternoon session was almost wholl devoted to the consideration of the Mi sionary work of the Diocese. The Arch deacon and several of the Missionaries fro the field made stirring addresses; the Pres dent of the Woman's Auxiliary spoke f that organization, and Mr. W. A. Cornelis for the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. T Rev. Dr. Flint made an exhaustive repo for the Committee on the Missionary Su vey of the Diocese appointed last yea Among their recommendations was one a suring the Bishop of the Convention's wi ingness to act upon his request for a Su fragan Bishop, to take charge of the Mi sionary work, when he shall feel the tim has come to make such request.

The Vestry of St. Stephen's church, W kinsburg, presented a resolution to the e fect that the parish was willing to consid the turning over of its property to t Board of Trustees for Cathedral purpos and asked that the matter be referred the Cathedral Committee of the Diocese.

A Diocesan War Committee was a pointed, consisting of two clergymen a three laymen, to be known as the War Co mittee of the Diocese of Pittsburgh, the purpose being that such committee should assist the General War Commission of the Church in every possible way. The Rev. Dr. Flint, of Crafton, is chairman of this committee. Elections were as follows: Standing Committee, the Rev. Drs. Hills, Brown, Vance and Shero; and Messrs. Hyndman, McClintic, Shoemaker and Snowdon. Missionary Board, the Rev. Dr. Perry, the Rev. C. A. Thomas, and Messrs. M. C. Adams and R. W. Dawson. Committee on Canons, the Rev. Drs. Brown, Shero and Wightman, and Messrs. Hill Burgwin, J. W. Chalfant and E. S. Craig.

Bishop's Anniversary—On the Feast of the Conversion of St. Paul, Bishop Whitehead celebrated the thirty-sixth anniversary of his Consecration at the Church of the Ascension, Pittsburgh. The service consisted of a celebration of the Holy Communion, with a brief address.

JANE CUDDY.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Auxiliary Convention—The Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese held its thirty-third Annual Convention at Union, South Carolina, January 15-18, and throughout the proceedings sustained a record of high purpose and achievement. The opening service was conducted in the Church of the Nativity with the Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry and Dr. Wm. C. Sturgis of the Board of Missions, New York, speakers of the evening.

At the celebration of the Holy Communion Wednesday morning the United Offering was presented—the voluntary thank offering over and above all pledges amounting to $946 for the six months since the change of the fiscal year from May to January. The business session of the Convention was called to order by the President, Miss Katie Lee. Addresses of welcome were delivered by the Rev. L. W. Blackwelder, rector of the parish, and by Mrs. J. W. Mixson, president of the local branch. Letters of greeting were read from Miss Lindley, General Secretary, from Miss Alice Gregg, China, and Miss Uta Saito, missionaries who have recently gone from South Carolina. The Convention sent messages of cordial appreciation and love to them and to Miss Emery, former General Secretary, also to other South Carolina missionaries, the Rev. H. H. Lumpkin, Alaska, Miss Sarah C. Thurston in Cuba and Miss Eliza Huron McCullough in Porto Rico.

The Mission Study Classes conducted by Miss Ford were attended with much interest.

Mrs. C. T. Lundgren presided over the Junior Sessions, emphasized the "New Junior Plan" and expressed the determination of the Junior officers to make this a banner year. A Junior demonstration given by the local branch was enjoyed by the Convention.

Thursday evening the Convention heard talks on "The Catawba Indians", by Mrs. Alexander Long; "The Mill Operatives—Graniteville", Miss Ford; "Columbia", Miss Singleton; "The Rural Districts", Archdeacon Mitchell; "Work Among the Negroes", Mrs. W. P. Cornell; "The Red Cross", Mrs. Mixson. The reception at the home of Mrs. F. H. Garner proved a delightful occasion.

The officers elected for 1918 are as follows: President, Mrs. W. P. Cornell, Charleston; vice-presidents, Mrs. A. P. Gaillard, Ninety-six; Mrs. D. D. Taber, Columbia; Mrs. Sanders Guignard, Mt. Pleasant; secretary, Mrs. T. B. McCarrell, Charleston; treasurer, Miss I. B. Heyward, Charleston; educational secretary, Miss M. P. Ford, Aiken; united offering custodian, Miss Virginia T. Singleton, Columbia; box secretary, Mrs. F. P. Henderson, Aiken; secretary of Junior Department, Mrs. C. T. Lundgren, Spartanburg.

JACKSONVILLE

First Meeting of Colored Archdeaconry—The first annual meeting of the Archdeaconry of Jacksonville held its sessions in the Church of St. Michael and All Angels (Tallahassee, Fla.), of which the Rev. J. Henry Brown is rector, on January 17 to 20. The president was chairman.

The opening was Thursday evening, January 17, at 7 o'clock. Evening prayer was then said, after which followed an able address by the president, the Rev. W. H. Marshall.

A joyous reception with a feast of good things and welcome addresses by the citizens of Tallahassee concluded Thursday's session.

On Friday there was a celebration of the Holy Communion and sermon by Bishop Weed.

On Sunday the Litany was said by the Rev. J. Henry Brown. Holy Communion was celebrated by the president, the Rev. W. H. Marshall, assisted by the Rev. T. H. Brown. The sermon was preached by the Rev. W. H. Marshall.

In the afternoon there was Sunday school session with the Rev. Wm. T. Wood, chairman. As speakers, Miss Ada Speight, Gainesville; Mrs. Katie Hubbard, Pensacola, and the Rev. R. Z. Johnstone.

Sunday night saw a spirited missionary meeting with several searching addresses on the work of the Church among the colored people, as also on general missions. Several splendid papers and addresses were interspersed throughout the sessions and added vigor to the occasion. Among them were: "The Message of the Layman to the non-Churchgoer", by Prof. W. H. A. Howard, A. and M. College, Tallahassee, Florida; "Who Is Responsible for Deficits in Parish Accounts?" by the Rev. R. Z. Johnstone, St. Augustine, Florida; "True Motherhood, the Sphere of Holiest Service", Prof. Wright, A. and M. College, Tallahassee.

On Monday and Tuesday the clergy and lay deputies to the convention went over to the sessions of the council of the white clergy and lay deputies and proudly took a part in those proceedings.

SACRAMENTO

California's Indian Mission—The Church of the Holy Spirit, Orleans, Humboldt County, diocese of Sacramento, has been presented with a "Service Flag" by Mrs. Eleanor Ten Eyck of Sausalito, California. The flag has seventeen stars in the white field, representing the contribution, so far, of the Orleans district to its country; over 75 per cent. of these men enlisted. This number of young men's, mostly Indians' or "castes'" departure has made quite a difference in this "shut-in" district, and leaves many of the older people without their usual support and help, and has also taken away an interesting part of the congregation of our mission among the Indians. A Red Cross Auxiliary has been organized with over sixty members, and the women meet each week to sew, laboring under the difficulty of only three white women to instruct and direct the Indians. At the last meeting there were present, besides the three white women, two castes and three full-bloods, the largest meeting so far. Nevertheless the auxiliary has sent out quite a lot of work, and has been complimented by the chapter at Eureka.

Another difficulty is a place to meet; there is no public hall in the community and the houses are too small, the rectory included, to provide room for larger numbers to meet, either for auxiliary or guilds. The missionary is appealing for funds with which to build a "Community Hall", where all the activities of the district can be centered.

LONG ISLAND

Service Flag Dedicated—A very impressive service was that held at the Church of the Incarnation, Brooklyn, January 27, at which a service flag having forty-seven stars was dedicated. The flag was donated by the Bible class of the Sunday school. While the prayer for the President of the United States was being said, a sailor, a soldier and a young man of the choir filed into the chancel carrying, respectively, the National, the service, and the church flags.

Prayers for "our boys" were repeated by the Rev. A. W. E. Carrington, rector of the church, in one of which each of them was mentioned by name. A most interesting letter from one of our chaplains followed, after which all joined in singing "My Country 'Tis of Thee".

Mission Study Class—At the request of his Missionary Society the Rev. A. W. E. Carrington, rector of the Church of the Incarnation, Brooklyn, has begun a mission study class, taking Bishop Rhinelander's book, "The Gospel of the Kingdom". Twenty-one women were present at the first meeting.

Altar Rail Given—An altar rail of Convent Sienna marble has been placed in the cathedral at Garden City, a gift from Mrs. J. H. Aldrich. It is hand carved, and designed to conform to the Gothic architecture of the church. The gate is of perforated cast bronze, finished in dull gold. The whole is said to be exquisitely beautiful.

Archdeaconry Meets—The annual meeting of the Archdeaconry of Queens and Nassau was held January 23 in St. Matthew's church, Brooklyn Manor section of Woodhaven. Following the celebration of the Holy Community by Bishop Burgess, the Rev. James Empringham, S.T.D., general superintendent of the Church Temperance Society, preached a powerful sermon on the drink evil.

About 200 of the clergy and laymen of Queens and Nassau attended the sessions, which opened at 11 a. m., the archdeacon, the Rev. Roy Farrell Duffield, presiding.

VIRGINIA

Library Organized—A community library has been organized at Oak Grove, Westmoreland county, through the generosity of a Baltimore gentleman, formerly of Oak Grove, and the efforts of the Rev. W. S. L. Romilly, rector of Washington Parish. The library, which contains nearly one thousand volumes, has been named "The Washington Library of Oak Grove", in honor of the first President of the United States, whose birthplace is near Oak Grove. Its management is in the hands of a board of six persons elected from the community.

Personals—The Rev. L. Valentine Lee, assistant minister of St. Paul's church, Richmond, was married on Wednesday, December 26, to Miss Margaret L. Clendon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Clendon of Richmond. The marriage took place in St. Paul's church, the Rev. W. Russell Bowie, D.D., rector, officiating.

The Rev. Arthur Gray, Sr., of Lawrenceville, Virginia, has accepted the position of chaplain at the Home for Homeless Boys, Covington, Virginia.

The Rev. David Campbell Mayers, rector of Emmanuel church, Greenwood, has been granted a leave of absence for one year and will serve as Y. M. C. A. Hut Secretary on the French front.

The Rev. J. F. Burks, rector of Dettingen Parish, who has accepted the call recently extended him to the churches at Evington and Alta Vista, in the Diocese of Southern Virginia, expects to take charge on March 1. Fenton Williamson.

WEST TEXAS

Chaplains at Work—Two camp chaplains are now at work in San Antonio, the Rev. Lee W. Heaton and the Rev. Dwight Cameron. Chaplain Cameron is working at Kelly Field, the aviation camp. His salary is being paid by the Church of the Transfiguration, New York City, where he served as curate. With the clergy of the city cooperating, a distinct advance is being made in caring for the approximately 125,000 soldiers in and near San Antonio.

Service Flag—A service flag has recently been dedicated in St. Mark's church, San Antonio, with eighty stars on it, two of which are in gold for men who have given their lives for their country.

Honorary Luncheon—On Wednesday, January 2, a luncheon was tendered to General J. W. Ruckman by all of the clergy of the various religious bodies in the city, as a testimonial to his vigorous and high-minded stand on vice conditions in San Antonio. Bishop Capers presided, and addresses of appreciation were made by clergy representing the different religious bodies.

City Missionary Departs—San Antonio Church people deeply regret the departure of the Rev. R. Y. Barber, city missionary, who has left to take charge of Grace church, Chanute, Kansas. Mr. Barber has done most effective work as city missionary, and has also had charge of St. John's church, St. Philip's colored congregation, and has been chaplain of the Southwestern Asylum for the Insane. English Church News

Day of National Prayer—One can recall a good many special days of prayer since the War began, but that which was observed on January 6 exceeded all others in importance. It was truly national: an important feature was the reading of a message from the King to the people, asking us to pray for the strength and clear-sightedness which are necessary for victory.

At Westminster Abbey the Archbishop of Canterbury was quite at his best. In spite of the fact that he has preached so often on the War, he managed to give a message which was fresh and appropriate. I venture to think that it was his finest effort so far. "In your patience ye shall win your souls." Had the War had that effect? The answer was a mixed one, one could not generalize. Some had been brought very near to God, others were conscious of loss rather than gain. To the latter he would say: "God knows, and understands. Back to your prayers: you have not really lost heart, only nerve and pulse and freshness." We had perforce to enter on this great struggle suddenly, but it was decided unhesitatingly, and decided aright. The War turns on the home-spirit of the people: nothing that had happened threw any doubt on the rightness of what we did. And the best proof was that the United States, which had not to make its decision in a few hours as we had, gave their final and unhurried decision in a form nearly identical with our own first words. And, remember, "peace is not in itself an ideal. Peace is a condition wherein ideals can be attained. The ideal is not peace, but freedom and liberty to satisfy human aspirations, in joint loyalty to our living Lord".

At St. Paul's—The Bishop of London began with the same thought in his sermon at St. Paul's Cathedral. We were right in 1914, the Epiphany star which we followed was the true gleam, the star of honor. If the wrongs of Belgium, Serbia and Armenia were not to have—not vindictive retaliation but—well-deserved punishment and retribution, then we might still ask: "Where is the God of the fatherless and the widow?" God, as Governor of the world, can only fail if His warriors fail Him. If the dawn of Freedom tarries, may it not be because we have not as a Nation believed in this stupendous Epiphany? Can it be that while we fight a Christian cause, we are not sufficiently Christian ourselves? "When the Prince of Peace comes to His own, it will mean that the Star has done its work, and the morning has come. But until that glad morning comes, let us thank God for the Star, and follow its gleam."

"The Meaning of American Help"—So the Times "cross-heads" the Rev. R. J. Campbell's sermon. If Russia had failed us, we were the more thankful for the greatest event of the whole War—the entry of the United States into the conflict on our side. "What this will mean for all time to come, only God knows. But it is no exaggeration to say that it presages a lasting union of all the free peoples on earth against every form of tyranny, cruelty, and public wrong."

A New Devotional Experience—Information has not yet come to hand as to how the day was observed in other parts of the country. But for once your correspondent himself had an experience which brings him within the news in a very humble capacity. My work lies in the ancient city of Winchester. It was natural that the Cathedral should be the centre of a big effort: and so it was. The Bishop (Dr. Talbot) came and conducted the devotions and preached to a throng of people who filled every corner of the longest nave in England. There was nothing novel in such an event, and the Bishop's discourse was such as his other public utterances had led us to expect. What was novel was the preparation for this great service. One of the Canons conceived the idea of an all-night vigil, beginning on Saturday at 8 p. m. and lasting up to the hour of the Bishop's service. The city clergy were called together, and a plan was drawn up. It was arranged to have nine Celebrations of Holy Communion from midnight onwards. The midnight Celebration was at the High Altar, and there were over 300 communicants, although the notice given was very short. A friend of mine tells me that when he arrived at the cathedral and saw this company his first thought was "We need not despair: there's life in the Old Church yet". The city clergy shared with the chapter the privilege of celebrating hour by hour. It was a weird experience to set out from one's home soon after 2 a. m. and pass through the deserted streets, then along the famous limetree avenue to the gray silent cathedral. A few lights lit up the bare interior. In the beautiful Lady Chapel, behind the High Altar, a small band of faithful souls were waiting. A few informal devotions were said, and then, vesting in an adjoining chapel, one proceeded to the altar to take one's turn. There was a strange solemnity about a Celebration in such a spot at the hour of three in the morning. Somehow one felt, at the end of the day, that the massed crowd looked impressive, but that one did not get so much out of that service spiritually as out of the vigil which prepared for it.

Confirmation: a Suggestion—I have just space to finish the news of the Young People's Mission, and to describe Canon Deane's suggestion. He quotes a saying of a Headmaster: "I always wish that the boys could be confirmed twice." He wanted them confirmed at the beginning and at the end of their public school life. Which is the best age for confirmation? There are advocates for an early and for a late age: the one thing certain, says Canon Deane, is that a point half-way between them has the disadvantages of both and the advantages of neither. But you cannot be confirmed twice. No, but the "renewal of the baptismal vows" with which the present service begins was only added in 1660. Why not separate this part, and reserve it, with due preparation, which the older children could understand, for the age of eighteen?

Some New Books

Random Reflections of a Grandmother. By Mrs. R. Clipston Sturgis. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin Company. 1917. Price $1.00 net.

This is a delightful, bright and exceedingly clever book, with no end of unconventional characterization and household intimacies that will stick in the memory and find quick currency in conversation, even among those who are not grandmothers. It has been sent forth as a "literary babe intended to bring a smile, while voicing truth which it is good for us all to hear". But long before the last chapter is reached the reader will declare the "babe" is a strong and attractive youngster. "Reflections" (or ought they to be called reminiscences?) such as these, born out of a much traveled life and an extensive acquaintance with people, not only will remind grandmothers they have a vocation. They will give these privileged persons in our homes a new distinction, enviable and well deserved.

R. P. K.

On the Bridge. By Helen A. Ballard. New York: George H. Doran Company. 1917. Price $1.25 net.

This book is dedicated to those "who believe we are all captains 'on the bridge', lookouts on the sea of life; that the Bible in its poetic majesty and its supreme life teachings is the compass whereby we steer the ship". Hence the opportunity to present an entirely original conception for the daily reading of Scripture. Each month's selection deals with a particular topic and the Scripture selections are specially and intimately related to the theme for the month. A foreword for each month has been written by such eminent teachers as Harry Emerson Fosdick, Hugh Black, Henry Sloane Coffin, Walter Rauschenbush and others. The gathering together of many texts around one theme, to be followed daily, in the light of the month's foreword, will no doubt make this book one of devotion and comfort. The appropriateness of the King James Version will be noticed with startling frequency.

R. P. K.

The House in Order. By Louise Collier Willcox. E. P. Dutton & Company. 25 cents.

A man having missed life's values loses hope. He faces a closed door, so decides to quit life. He is persuaded to set his house in order and in so doing the light of faith and the joy of service return to his house of life. This fine little essay appeared originally in Harper's.

Dante. By C. H. Grandgent, L.H.D., "Master Spirits of Literature" Series. Duffield & Company. $1.50.

The new "Master Spirits of Literature" series which is to be edited by George Rapall Noyes and Walter Morris Hart, and of which Professor Grandgent's Dante is the initial volume, promises to be a useful addition to the shelves of any small library. Cervantes is to be treated by Professor Schevill of the University of California, Shakespeare by Professor Raymond Alden, Tolstoi by the editor, Virgil by Professor Prescott of Chicago, Molière by Professor Curtis Hidden Page of Dartmouth, Homer and Goethe are to follow, and it is to be hoped Camoens and Chaucer and a few others who come well within the meaning of the title, if it is not to be restricted to the three real master-spirits.

Professor Grandgent's book is a careful and conscientious presentation of its subject. He gives us all that is known or can be reasonably deduced about Dante's life. He then deals with the state of politics and society in Italy at the period during which Dante wrote, and thus having established his background he takes us to the Divina Commedia itself and shows how it reflects the cosmogony of the time, the mediæval ideas of nature and man as well as of the heavenly order. We are glad to note, moreover, that the grim humor of many of Dante's passages has not escaped him.

Si Briggs Talks. By Madeline Yale Wynne, with drawings by Gluyas Williams. New York, 1917: Houghton, Mifflin Co. Price $1.25 net.

Si Briggs is an old friend, well known and greatly enjoyed by those who pass their Summers in some valley of the White or Green Mountains or on the Coast of Maine a bit off the beaten track where intercourse with the "natives" is still unspoiled by a state of feud between the "Summer people" and the "residents". Through the medium of Miss Wynne's altogether delightful vers libre (very libre says some one), we can enjoy the refreshment of Si Briggs' point of view in our own library.

The Daytime Story Book. By Ruth O. Dyer. Boston: Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company. $1.00.

There are two very trying times in the day for little folk—bedtime and getting-uptime. The little stories in the Daytime Story Book were written with the object of forming habits of cheerfulness in the early morning. "The Little Servants" is the story of a little queen who had many servants—two little hands and two little feet, two little eyes and two little lips. These gave very good service and performed many loving acts when they were up good and early, but if they were allowed to stay in bed late they were apt to be cross all day.

Tales of Washington Irving's Alhambra. By Leila H. Cheney, Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company. 50 cents.

Washington Irving's tales of Moorish and Spanish history retold for children. Here are no tales of khaki-clothed warriors but of armored steeds and knights, drums and bugles, romance and chivalry drawn from the old Moorish legends and put into a simplified form that may be enjoyed by a child of eight. The book is attractively illustrated in color and would make a charming Christmas gift.

The Fairy Housekeepers. By Norma Bright Carson. Boston: Lothrop, Lee and Shepard Company. $1.00.

A book for children. It is well bound and illustrated, but not interesting. It lacks the divine touch.

Among all the delightful grain foods, Puffed Grains stand supreme.

These are whole grains puffed to eight times normal size. Almost as flimsy as snowflakes.

They taste like airy nutmeats.

Yet they are scientific foods. Every food cell is exploded so that every atom feeds. Digestion is easy and complete.

They are made by Prof. Anderson's® process—by being shot from guns. And never were whole grains made so enticing, never so fitted for food.

Church Unity and Coal

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

May I ask some questions on Church Unity and National Conservation through your columns?

In many of our small country parishes and even in some large city churches, the question of Church Unity and Conservation of Fuel and other church economies has arisen for this war emergency.

In many towns the Protestant denominations have been asked to unite and hold their services either at different hours in the one church edifice or in one joint service. Most all of the different denominations except the Episcopal are accepting and uniting.

The Episcopalians either make it a point that the other denominations must come to their church building and join in their services or hold their services at different hours of the day in their Episcopal church. Again, many Episcopal churches feel "that the rendering of our distinctive services is of more value to a community than can be compensated for by the saving of a small amount of coal which our co-operation would effect".

We love our liturgy and services intensely, but do we not have to give up for our country and offer gladly what we love? It would be only for three months. The city and larger country churches can give large sums for the War Commission and Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A., but our small country churches and missions can only give or save what they have to give, the self-sacrifice of not hearing our beautiful service or the small amount of coal.

The widow gave her mite and was commended: "She of her penury has given all she had". A willing mind is accepted. There may seem the problem of obscure country churches; but there it is that the Episcopal church is weakest. We may fear, perhaps, losing some members through unions. Is it not a psychological fact that often fear brings to us what we are afraid of? All the other churches do not fear loss, or hesitate on this account. Can we expect other denominations to join us if we do not unite sometimes with them (especially if the Congregational or Baptist church be the largest edifice in a town, and it usually is)? Would we, ourselves, accept a friend's hospitality if we would not sometimes return it? How can we come later to these other denominations with our "Commission on Faith and Order" asking them to consider church unity when now in our Nation's great need we hold aloof? Will they think we are sincere? It seems as if it would choke us to pray for unity and not work for it.

I know I am, for one, puzzled these past weeks as I go about in country towns and people say, "Ah, your Episcopal Church only believes in theory in church unity and not in practice", or "Your Episcopal Church is not backing the nation in conservation in the war".

How are we to prepare our churches to receive back the men from the front after this war? They have been where church unity is practised. Is it not for us to prepare now and not have them find a divided Christianity? How will these men in the Army feel when their mothers, wives or children write them they are suffering with cold for the want of coal and their church in their country towns will not join with the other denominations to save fuel or that five or six denominations are worshiping separately and much of that coal to heat could be given away or saved?

What are our Episcopal churches going to do in Lent? In towns and cities where there are several Episcopal churches would they not unite and in small country places hold "cottage Lenten services"? How is our Episcopal Church to be understood by the foreigners and aliens in our country as we try to make them true democratic American citizens, if in our churches we are not each one of us willing to give up and be self-sacrificing at war time? We ask them to give up allegiance to the country from which they come and not be hyphenated and be loyal Americans.

We cannot truthfully pray for church unity and for our country to win if we do not work for it in every way, and our Church stand as a Church army in a solid phalanx back of those at the front.

HOPE LAWRENCE.

A Better System; Not Dearth of Clergy

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

I note the letter of the Rev. Francis H. Richey, "A Challenge on the Dearth of Clergy". I present a different view of the situation. The whole subject is a serious matter, and deserves thoughtful and careful consideration.

The trouble is neither in a "dearth of clergy" nor in a "want of means" in the Church to support the clergy. The real trouble is stated in the Living Church Annual for 1916, pages 5 and 6 (editorial): "Our system of bringing clergy into touch with parish work is simply atrocious. We need a better system whereby a priest may be transferred easily from one cure to another without loss of time on his part, or long-continued vacancy in the parish."

Here is the great need, "A Better System." Times have changed. The "parish system" of fifty years ago works mischievously now, in the small and weak parishes and in mission stations. The "long-continued vacancy" is common and is very harmful.

Our own church people become discouraged; some grow careless and indifferent; children are not properly instructed in church ways, and many are lost to us. Then from the financial standpoint see the loss. As a rule, people who have no pastor do not contribute to a pastor's support.

In this Province of the Southwest (Seventh) there are fully 4,000 communicants of the Church in vacant parishes and missions, or scattered where they have no pastoral care.

Under a "better system" put these people under pastoral care; remove the "long-continued vacancy." See then the financial gain. An average of $10 for each communicant would make a gain of $40,000 a year.

Now our Church people have the means. See the eight millions and over raised for Church pension fund. See the millions raised for Red Cross work, and for the work of Y. M. C. A.—a good proportion coming from our own Church people. But how can any better system be brought about? It would, of course, take considerable time. There is great need, and when the need is more seen and felt, perhaps some action will be taken to put into effect a "better system".

How can a beginning be made? I would suggest that a Board of Missions might appoint a missionary priest for a definite time (say, five years) with a definite salary. If a missionary bishop is appointed for life, why not also make some suitable provision for a missionary priest? Both are giving a life service to the Church. Many other things could be suggested. The great need is a "better system".

"A Neglected Good"

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

I was much interested in your editorial a few weeks ago entitled "A Neglected Good". I have special reference to the intelligent reading of God's word in our services. It was the charge laid against the shepherds of old that they "did not feed the flock" and it is greatly to be feared that the reproach still rests upon many of our shepherds today in the meaningless, perfunctory way in which the sacred scriptures are read in our churches. It must surely be admitted that to make any part of the service perfunctory is sacrilege. It must be for edification. But how can people be edified if they can neither hear nor understand what is read, or said? And here I will venture to say that monotony is the adder's poison. We need have no fear of the sin of "private interpretation" that some would bid us fear, for, in the name of all that is true, it is right that it should have some interpretation.

The first chapter in our Bibles is often made one of the dullest chapters in the whole book, while if we come to it as we should with bowed head and a soul in tune to speak realities we would find it the most majestic choral that was ever written, when the very "angels of God", we read, "shouted for joy". Each step prepares for that which is to follow, till we reach "the one divine event to which the whole creation moves . . . the purpose of all things. And man became a living soul". Especially we note the repetition of that most majestic refrain, "And God said". It sounds in our ears each time as though it were the voice of God Himself giving the authority for the beginning of a new era. So we say any man that could read that chapter without a bowed head and a thrilled soul can have neither eyes to see nor ears to hear the voice of God speaking to him in His Holy Word, and will never be an intelligent reader till he can learn "to see visions".

WEST VIRGINIA

Personals—The Rev. Henry B. Lee, Jr., has resigned as rector of St. Paul's, Weston, West Virginia, and will begin his work as rector of Trinity church, Towson, Maryland, on April 1. Mr. Lee has been at Weston six years and during that time the parish has increased in numbers and contributions. Mr. Lee is secretary of the Diocesan Convention of West Virginia.

The Rev. R. D. Roller, D.D., has resigned as rector of St. John's, Charleston, West Virginia, after serving the parish for thirty years. Dr. Roller has been elected rector emeritus and will continue to reside in Charleston, West Virginia.

The Rev. P. N. McDonald, rector of Trinity church, Morgantown, West Virginia, will resign in the very near future as he has accepted work in the Army Y. W. C. A. He has made special preparation for this kind of work.

The Rev. G. P. Jung, D.D., has been priest-in-charge of St. Matthias church, Grafton, West Virginia, less than six months; during that time the interior of the church has been frescoed, the parish societies reorganized and money raised to install a beautiful altar and reredos.

Convocation—The Northwestern Convocation of the Diocese of West Virginia met in St. Matthias' church, January 22. Notwithstanding the severe cold weather and the delayed trains, almost all the clergy were present. The Rev. J. Brittingham, D.D., of Wheeling, preached the Convocation sermon on "The Preacher's Vision". The Rev. R. E. L. Strider of Wheeling read an essay on "Pastoral Theology" which the Convocation hopes to present in permanent form to the clergy of the diocese. A report from the Commission on Preaching Missions showed that seventeen missions were held within the bounds of the Convocation during the first week of Advent. From the data submitted it was evident that the Commission's plan of advertising brought good results. The Commission is planning to secure the services of an expert in Preaching Mission work and have him hold normal classes in mission work for the clergy at the September Convocation. Hereafter, a Round Table, conducted by a specialist, on Advertising, the Preaching Function and Social Service will be a regular part of the Convocation sessions. The Rev. H. B. Lee, Jr., resigned as Dean and the Rev. Dudley Boogher of Parkersburg was elected in his place. The Rev. J. H. Garner of Moundsville was elected secretary.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

Chaplain Appointed — Bishop Tucker stated that he has appointed the Rev. R. B. Nelson of Blacksburg as one of the civilian chaplains to serve from this diocese. Mr. Nelson left for Hampton and Newport News on Monday the 28th. Mr. Nelson leaves one of the most important fields in the diocese, since he ministers to a large number of students at the Virginia Polytechnic Institute, and has five or six missions scattered around through the mountain, in which mission work he has drawn a large number of the young men from the Institute. Mr. Nelson is pre-eminently fitted to this service. During his absence the Rev. T. G. Faulkner of Salem will give one Sunday a month and the Rev. C. F. Smith of Lynchburg and the Rev. G. O. Mead of Roanoke will give occasional services to help along in this great enterprise.

War Work—The Rev. Arthur P. Gray, Jr., who for several years was rector of the churches in Brunswick and Lunenburg Counties, is the civilian chaplain at Camp Lee. Mr. Gray is a man of great energy and devotion, and will do fine work in this camp. He leaves a very large field, which no doubt the neighboring churches will look after.

The war work fund which has been before the Church for the last two or three weeks was responded to liberally in the southwest part of the diocese, especially in Roanoke, where the full amount asked of the churches has been paid.

Vacant Parishes—This great southwest part of the State is manifesting the need of men in the ministry. There is no resident clergyman between Bristol and Wythville, the Rev. Mr. Davidson vacating Bristol, the Rev. Mr. Hobson, Abingdon, and the Rev. Mr. Opie, Saltville and Marion. The Rev. E. A. Rich ministers alone to forty mission stations along the Clinch Valley and out in Tazewell and Giles Counties. Indeed there are twenty counties with only four resident clergymen, viz., the Rev. F. H. Craighill, Wythville; the Rev. T. F. Opie, Pulaski; the Rev. C. E. A. Marshall, Radford; the Rev. E. A. Rich, archdeacon, and this field is white unto the harvest. May we hope that these great Army training camps will produce, after the close of this War, many recruits for Holy Orders.

NEW YORK

Lent—Lenten plans are retarded and Lenten cards withheld in some parishes because of the uncertainty in regard to the coal situation. Nevertheless, plans for a deeply spiritual and stimulating Lent are being made with even more care than usual because of the added need this year for the help Lent brings. Trinity church has announced an unusual plan for the Holy Week services. Instead of having the same preacher throughout the week, Dr. Barry will preach on Monday, Bishop Greer on Tuesday, Bishop Burch on Wednesday, Dr. Manning on Thursday and the Archbishop of York at the Three Hours' service on Good Friday. At St. Paul's there will be the usual daily service at five minutes after twelve every day. St. Paul's has the distinction of having a celebration of the Holy Communion at 2:30 a. m. every Sunday morning for nightworkers. On Friday afternoons throughout Lent there will be half an hour of devotion, "The Way of the Cross". Among the Lenten preachers at noon on Fridays are the Rev. Karl M. Block, Dr. Crowder, Bishop Matthews, Dr. Sedgwick and Dr. Gates. At the General Theological Seminary the pre-Lenten retreat is on Wednesday of this week. It will be conducted by the dean.

Dr. Lubeck's Anniversary—February 1 was the thirtieth anniversary of the rectorship of the Rev. Henry Lubeck, LL.D., D.C.L., as rector of Zion and St. Timothy's church. The anniversary will be celebrated on Sunday, when he begins the thirty-first year of his ministry to that congregation.

The Cathedral—At the cathedral the building is heated—"so-called" says the vicar, for it is only 54 degrees, the minimum heat necessary—on Sundays only. The choir room is used for weekday services. The preachers last Sunday were the dean and Dr. Crowder. On Sunday the tenth a very interesting service is planned for 4 o'clock in the afternoon. It is a service for the soldiers and sailors near New York. Invitations have been sent to the training camps, cantonments, naval stations and ships nearby. The preacher will be Dr. Karl Reiland.

St. James' Church—On account of the scarcity of coal the parish organizations meeting on Mondays and Tuesdays have arranged either to meet on other days or to meet at the residence of one of the parishioners. The offering for the War Commission was taken on February 3. The confirmation classes have just begun. The Employment Society is planning to send a box of clothing to Trinity church, Paris; a number of such boxes have already been sent. One—or shall I say two—of the most interesting organizations are the twins, the Junior Service League and the Christian Nurture Classes, which work out betwen them the New Junior Plan. It is hard to tell where one ends and the other begins. One is devoted to work for the Church, in the parish, diocese, country and world; the other, with worship at home, in the church and in the individual lives of the children. There is a basketry class, a Builders' Committee building a model church of "loads of brick and slate purchased at 25 cents a load," which money goes towards the building of the chapel for the men in the camps near San Antonio; and other active committees.

St. Bartholomew's—Special music is announced for every Sunday afternoon in February at the 4 o'clock service: Schubert, Eccard, Bach, Purcell and Dvorak are composers whose music has been selected. The new year book is out and shows a remarkable record of work at the church and the chapels. There are 3,406 communicants in the parish.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

MR. CHAPMAN'S article entitled "Faith and the War" has met with a very favorable welcome by our readers. The dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, has written to the Editors asking for permission (which was gladly given) to reprint the article in sufficient quantity to send to all those on the mailing list of the Cathedral. Speaking of reprinting, it was interesting to have an important publishing house telephoue to the Editors last week asking for book rights for Dr. Slattery's article, "The Holy Communion". The Churchman Company, however, is already printing it in the Tracts for the Times series.

The Rev. H. Usher Monro of North Andover, Massachusetts, has sent us a beautiful account of a visitation made by Bishop Brooks. Mr. Monro was rector of St. Mary's church, Lower Newton Falls, at the time.

The Rev. Pascal Harrower is the rector of the Church of the Asceusion, New Brighton, Staten Island, New York.

The Rev. Edward L. Parsons, D.D., rector of St. Mark's church, Berkeley, California, and warden of the Deaconess Training School of the Pacific, contributes the second of his suggestive papers on the question of professional training and position for women working in the Church.

George Foster Peabody is a man eminently fitted to write an appreciation of the life of H. B. Frissell. He is a Southerner by birth and education, although for many years he has made his home at Lake George, and his wide business interests as a banker have centred in New York City. He is a trustee of the American Church Institute for Negroes, of Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute and of the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute. He is also closely identified with other boards of education.

The Rev. James Cairns, who has long been the English correspondent of The Churchman, and whose weekly letters are a constant delight to our readers, is vicar of St. Bartholomew's, Hyde, Winchester. Recently there was sent to him inadvertently a copy of suggestions issued for our American correspondents. For the benefit of correspondents who may be prone to write catalogs under the misapprehension that they are writing news, there appears in the suggestions this paragraph: "In writing stories of ordinary meetings do not give the time of various addresses, etc. For example: At 9.30 a. m. the business session opened; at 10 a. m. the Rev. Mr. Blank spoke, etc. No one cares whether Mr. B. spoke at 9 or 10. If he spoke at 3 a. m. it would be news." In a note inclosed with the English letter this week Mr. Cairns writes: "Curiously enough one of your suggestions to correspondents, 'if he spoke at 3 a. m. it would be news', gave me the idea for one of this week's paragraphs. I did not speak, but celebrated Holy Communion at 3 a. m. in Winchester Cathedral, and I therefore brought in a personal reference which is, I hope, excusable, seeing that the all-night vigil with hourly communions was quite a new venture." We are sure that our readers will be grateful for that personal reference.

Obituary

HENRY ARMAND LONDON

Of St. Bartholomew's church, Pittsboro, North Carolina, departed out of this life into a better, the second Sunday after Epiphany, January 20, 1918. He was born in Pittsboro March 1, 1846, and spent all his life in this small town, excepting the time of his service in the Confederate Army. He was a graduate of the University of North Carolina; became an able and distinguished lawyer; served his people and his State with advantage to them and with honor to himself, in various positions of trust, in both local and State affairs; and was known throughout North Carolina as one of her most useful, capable, upright and patriotic citizens. Few were more widely known or more universally esteemed.

Brought up from infancy in the Church, and by family tradition from Colonial days associated with the most interesting and important events in the history of the diocese, he was from boyhood a loyal and devoted Churchman, sustaining all departments of her work and interests by his devoted service, and illustrating her teachings in a pure and godly life. He had been for forty years a vestryman and the treasurer of his parish; a faithful and useful member of the Diocesan Conventions; and ever ready to respond to any call for his personal help or service.

J. B. C.

THE REV. J. THOMPSON COLE

On Decemher 11, 1917, the Rev. J. Thompson Cole, rector of St. Paul's church, Cheltenham, entered into rest. The wardens and vestrymen desire to put on record this expression of their grateful respect for Mr. Cole, their keen sense of the great loss the parish has sustained in his death, and their affectionate sympathy for his family.

Mr. Cole came to St. Paul's, in May, 1898, as assistant minister, during the last months of the long rectorate of the Rev. Dr. Appleton; and he was elected rector upon Dr. Appleton's retirement, entering upon this more intimate and responsible relation to the parish on All Saints' Day, 1899. Thus for nineteen years and almost five months he served this parish—a term less indeed than that of his predecessor, yet long in these days of more frequent change. When he came to the parish he found 266 communicants; in his last report 420 were recorded.

No man could have proved himself a more faithful and active pastor than Mr. Cole. His greatest interest was always in human beings; he was never quite himself save when surrounded by a group of people. And this interest was the animating motive of all his life and all his work. He was indefatigable in parish visiting; and quite unsparing of himself, by night no less than by day, in answering every call for sympathy or help among his people. He lived for them and gave himself to them; and his memory will live in their hearts. His cheery vigor, his unfailing friendliness, even his active and stalwart form will be long and sadly missed in the streets and the homes of the community. And the mark he made, not upon individual lives only, but upon the life of the parish, will be his best and greatest monument; as he himself would have counted it his dearest reward. He was the friend of all; and what better word could a minister of the Lord Jesus earn among men?

Resolved: That this memorial be entered upon the minutes of the vestry; and that a copy be sent to the family of Mr. Cole.

(Signed) CHAS. D. BARNEY, Rector's Warden.

Sucks stolen life. The days will come

INDISPENSABILITY

THERE are a good many things in this life that we can do without. There are publications that we don't have to read.

Religion is about the greatest force in human life, or as Mr. Britling puts it "Religion is the first thing and the last thing." CHURCH PEOPLE must rely on their CHURCH PAPERS for authentic, dependable news and comment of their Church.

The Church paper for Church people is the nearest approach to INDISPENSABILITY we know of among periodicals.

A good many of our readers and advertisers are commenting on the marked advance The Churchman has made of late.

TO ADVERTISERS

If you will weigh The Churchman fairly, squarely, intelligently and impartially as an advertising medium, you won't have to put your foot on the scales.

Our School Service Bureau

FOR YEARS we have maintained for the benefit of readers of The Churchman a School Service Bureau, which has aided parents materially in selecting the right school. Years of experience have given us a knowledge of good schools which school-seekers will find valuable, and it is entirely at the service of our readers.

In seeking advice about schools we ask our readers to give the following information:

The age and sex of the child.
The maximum amount you are able to pay.
The state or section of the country preferred.
If any special training is required.

With such information at hand, we shall be glad to suggest schools to meet the conditions.

There is no charge whatever either to the school or school-seeker for this service.

ADVERTISE YOUR WANTS IN THE CHURCHMAN CLASSIFIED SERVICE

Some Books

Old Crow Stories. Illustrated. By Katharine B. Judson. Boston Little, Brown & Company. $1.35 net.

Indian stories arranged with continuity as one tale for little children and dealing with animal life personified in the individualities of "Old Crow" and "Raven" and "Grizzly" and "Coyote" and the first people of the earth; the beginning chapters concern themselves with events before there were earth people.

The Other Side of the Hill and Home Again. By F. W. Boreham. New York: The Abingdon Press. 1917. $1.25.

In his introduction, written in Melbourne, the author says that he has here tried to see The Other Side of the Hill—and the other side of other things. He has notably succeeded, surprising unsuspected truths and expressing them with great charm. The subjects are diverse, running from "The Enjoyment of Sorrow" to "Luxuriating Among Cowslips." With satisfaction we greet this Tasmanian writer in our sparsely-essayed day.

Familiar Ways. By Margaret Sherwood. Little, Brown & Company. $1.25.

Fifteen essays along the familiar ways of home and a woman's inner life by the author of The Worn Doorstep. The style is distinctive and charming. The essays are happy and kindly in humor. From the commonplace of the trivial round they dart out to wider horizons, bringing home some pleasing thought or feeling that beautifies the familiar way. Before they were gathered into a single sheaf these essays graced the pages of The Atlantic, Scribner's and Vassar magazines.

Getting Together

SOMETHING is wrong with any church that ministers largely to prosperous people. Its religious life cannot be healthy. Its gospel is likely to be partial and onesided; its helpfulness to its own people scant. Protestantism presents to the world today as a lamentable perversion of Christianity a segregation of worshipers into classes. This condition does not obtain in the Roman Church. The Greek Church, nourished under autocratic governments, has not produced this hybrid. We see it in Protestant England and America developed to an unwholesome and dangerous degree. A church which has so succumbed to its environment as to seem to minister to people by classes is a negligible factor in a Christian community. A church that is not democratic is not Christian. No matter how conscientiously the rector tries to preach the whole Gospel of Christ, a glance at the congregation shows that the content of his message has been annulled by his environment. You cannot preach effectively the Brotherhood of Man and the Fatherhood of God in a church that has so reacted upon its surroundings as finally to gather within its doors only one class of society.

The Episcopal Church sins in this regard more grievously than does any other Church. There are in every large city parishes that have so yielded to circumstances as finally to minister only to the well-to-do. These churches, strive as they may by their munificent charities to preach the Gospel of love, are glaring symbols of class separateness. It is needless to say that their rectors are conscientious ministers of Christ. They feel how damaging to the Christian ideal is the imputation laid upon any church that it is a "fashionable church". But they are apparently helpless to change the drift of circumstances that finally effected the unhappy result. The unwholesome selection of one class of people to make up a parish has been a normal evolution, normal so far as the world is concerned, but abnormal so far as Christianity is concerned.

Different forces have worked towards this condition. An unimaginative, uncatholic conception of Christ's religion permitted free play to many contributing causes. Among them the pew system stands as the outward and visible sign of a Christianity that has made terms with worldliness. A glance at the average "pewed church" in the prosperous quarters of our great cities reveals a depressing caricature of the Christianity Christ came to found.

In the second chapter of the book of the Acts of the Apostles we get a picture of an early Christian community that bears witness to the fact that for a little time, at least, Christian churches were moulded into form by the spirit of Christ, not by their environment. We know of no more beautiful words in the whole narrative of Christian history than those contained in the last six verses of that second chapter of Acts. "And all that believed were together, and had all things common . . . and they continuing daily with one accord in the temple and breaking bread from house to house did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart."

Of late, church after church in America has awakened to the conviction that worship is a duty and privilege to be shared by all of us together. But not till the pews are empty and the church has been abandoned by the drift of population does the vestry take steps to draw to its forsaken doors and forlorn services the population that for years has been taught to feel their presence was not needed. Christian fellowship came too late to revive the dying church that never really trusted Christ. The class to which it ministered forsook it. Nobody else had been taught to call that church his home. Many an American church has suffered this tragic death.

Sermons are being preached about the period of reconstruction after the War. Clergymen meeting together at the clericus ask, "How shall the Church fit itself to meet the new opportunity and dominate the undisciplined forces that are likely to break loose upon the world?" Some of these problems are altogether too complex to be solved by human initiative. The spirit of God will change and mould what we seem helpless to alter or create; but there is one immediate step that the Episcopal Church in America can take which requires no arduous statesmanship or prescient wisdom. We can abolish our class churches. At least in the house of God we can learn to live together.

Temperament and Religion

TEMPERAMENTAL people give Christianity a good deal of trouble. They certainly are problems to their rectors. Temperament is the mother of egotism, and the egotist always finds it difficult to adjust his conveniences to a common worship. He thinks he wants God's help in living the Christian life; but his temperamental differences from the common lot are such as to unfit him for team play in the community—especially that highly democratic team play of worship in which all sorts and conditions of men work together under a high loyalty for some supremely beautiful end in life.

Temperamental people begin with the hypothesis that they are unique. They need a special gospel; they have individual needs; they have temperament. They do not mean to be superior, but they feel that in the matters of religion they are not at home with the masses. Their needs are not the same. Their manner of worship must be different.

Is there any more distinguishing characteristic of what we call a catholic religion than its manner of dealing with temperaments? Any one familiar with the genius of our Prayer Book must have noticed how it levels people. It treats us one and all like children. It takes for granted that there is nothing unique about any of us. Our problems, our needs, our shortcomings, are all perfectly familiar and commonplace. The word temperament, or its equivalent, is not once mentioned in this classic book of worship. It takes for granted that everybody has more or less difficulty in speaking the truth, living honorably, and acting unselfishly. It is never overawed by anybody's personality, nor is it diffident about asking him to join the great company of his fellowmen on their knees before God, seeking forgiveness, strength and light. Its teaching is all very homely and simple, and concerns itself with very homely and simple affairs. We do not know of one unusual, unique case mentioned in our Prayer Book. People are treated as if they were as alike and commonplace as we actually are.

After the race has been living on the planet these many, many centuries, trying to live right and continually going wrong, passing through the same experiences, birth, childhood, maturity, death, struggling against the same vicissitudes, made happy by one and the same thing, made miserable by one and the same thing—children of the same race and the same God, it is quite unlikely that some one should emerge today who has a special need; who has so unusual a problem in his life that to confess in simple English that he has done wrong and needs God's help to give him the will power to do right is a superfluous obligation.

Helgum, one of Selma Lageröf's heroes in her romance, "Jerusalem", is made to say: "The idea of being a Christian is so very hard a task that you need help—more than God's help; you need man's help." The race can never be made brothers, working together for the common good, until we learn to worship, to pray together for the common good. Worse than any caste system in government is the caste system in religion.

Whenever we feel that we have private claims upon religion, we may make up our minds that we have very little religion—Christian religion. The Father's house must become the home of all sorts and conditions of men. There is one infinitely valuable truth, which the Roman Church holds before the world, which Protestantism is likely to slight, that a king or a genius is not too distinguished, too gifted to use the same simple means of grace as the peasant. We shall never have real democracy until the blue-stocking idea of religion is abolished, for it is the religious complement to the caste system in government.

The Non-Democracy of Books

CARLYLE once said that the book has now become the church.* Men now enter into books as formerly they entered into churches. We suspect that he thought it a good sign. It is a pitiably tragic sign to those who hope for brotherhood in the race. I own my book and I choose it. I can choose a book which I can understand and my neighbor cannot understand. I can take my book and commune with choice spirits, a selection which may exclude a peasant or the weak and erring neighbor at my side. I can draw down the curtains of my windows and be alone with my book. "The book is a separating influence." I can sit apart from my brothers and friends with my book. It can give me thoughts which are not their thoughts and a distinction which cannot be theirs. It imparts a pride of intellect and theories of life which raise a barrier between my brother and me.

But a church is a different thing from a book. Under its roof I cannot choose to sit apart. My book here is the race's book; black and white, bond and free are together. My host here is my brother's host. Here we say "Our Father". Unless I sin the sin of the Pharisee my confession of need and gratitude includes my brother also. I cannot pull down the curtains of my soul in the Church of God and ask for a separate hearing befitting my social status and my temperament. For if I know myself, I know how commonplace I am in the sight of God.

But this sense of unity, the bond felt when we pray together, brings to our work one quality which modern work so often lacks. We recall when one of the great masters of painting, of whom Florence in her best days was proud, had finished his masterpiece, the townsfolk bore it in triumphal procession through the streets, and then into the church where men were accustomed to guard and love their treasures. That was a wonderful expression of democracy. No matter whether they lived under a tyrant or a ruler of their own making, the people's hearts were knit together in working for the beautiful things of life, and their unifying bond was the relation with a common Father. We shall have beautiful cities with beautiful buildings, science and trade dedicated to humanity, when all of us learn to think of our work as an offering to God—are made so to think of it, because there is one home where as a family we meet together to exchange courage, handshakes, compassion and glimpses of the common life. This is infinitely better than "my book" and "my walk in the woods", "my intellectual companionships" and my "temperamental needs". What a lean and beggared thing the religious life of increasing multitudes is becoming. Once the whole nation said its prayers together. Now, not even the family can contrive to kneel at the same Lord's Table. The father has his book or his newspaper, the child selects or rejects a church. Religion is not a matter of intellect or temperament or individual taste. Its most beneficent aim is to destroy the cold separateness of our lives. It is living together for the common good.

Has there ever been a Lent when the necessity was more urgent for men and women of every class, every temperament and vocation, to draw together as one family to ask God to show us the common life that Christ came to give? The heart of the world is astir today with great desires. None of us knows the way out of the hate, the prejudices and cruelties of our tragic lot. We shall never learn what Christ would have us to do till in penitence we come to Him together.

*Quoted by Stephen Graham in With the Russian Pilgrims in Jerusalem.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

Signs of the Time

THEY say that in the military hospitals the crucifix is very dear to wounded men. The sense of Christ's companionship in suffering gives them comfort and courage. There is a picture, popular in the wards, that shows Christ on the Cross with the legend For Humanity and at its foot a wounded soldier with the legend For His Native Land.

A story is told of a little boy who went out at night for the first time with his father, a young officer. The child was unaccustomed to the dark sky; when he saw the evening star shine out suddenly, he said, "Is that God's service flag"? The father answered, "Yes, God gave His only Son".

It is rather remarkable in the current magazines to notice their preoccupation with religion. In a recent book review supplement of an important daily newspaper, it was noticeable that wherever it was possible to consider the book from the religious angle, that angle was the one selected by the reviewer.

On the other hand we hear in every direction that the tide of religion is setting away from the Church. At perhaps the most significant gathering of students our country has witnessed, that held at Northfield in January, the current of religion ran deep and strong, but no reference was made to the Church, that is, to organized Christianity, except when the question of the disposal of the missionary fund was considered. Then the Church was recognized as a necessary agency. The secretaries of the mission boards present were not the leaders. Spiritual life freed from the shackles of ecclesiastical organization of any sort seemed the normal modern development to these keen, vividly living young intellectuals.

All of this puts an even greater burden of responsibility than usual upon the Church to exercise a Lenten ministry that shall be at once strong and spiritual, appealing to the mind and the heart.

Barred Doors

IT has become more and more the custom to keep our church buildings open all day long, and to post on the church porch the invitation "Enter, Rest and Pray". We know of a certain rural parish that boasts of having lost the church key.

In certain parts of the country, however, the old rule of bolting the church door between Sundays is still preserved. One of our college student secretaries told the other day of an experience in a Southern city. It was in the station waiting-room. Whether the business woman noticed the secretary's little cross or not, was not clear. At any rate, she came up to her and said, "I wish they would keep the churches open all the time. I had an hour and a half between trains, and I wanted a little quiet time. But I could not find a single open church." It happened that the secretary had just returned from a similar fruitless quest for an open house of God. We recall instances where we have passed similar waiting hours in a Roman church after the barred doors of the Episcopal church had turned us mournfully away.

The Tuscania

AS America approaches its first Lent experience in the great War, the heart of the Nation is shocked and saddened by the sinking of the "Tuscania". The Prayers for Those at Sea will hereafter be heard with anxious hearts in our churches. During the coming year a million or more of our boys will face the peril of the deep. They do so with stout hearts. May God help those at home to equal courage. It was interesting to read in the daily papers that as the news came over the wires of the disaster to the great troop ship, the recruiting stations everywhere were swamped with applications for enlistment. "How soon can we go across?" was the general question asked by the applicants. This must be the mood of the Nation until the end of the War.

A Chinese Bishop

IT is always a matter of deep significance when a native priest in the "mission field" is raised to the episcopate. The Ven. Archdeacon T. S. Sing has just been elected assistant bishop of Chekiang, one of the Chinese dioceses supported by the English Church and manned by English missionaries. This is the first instance of a native Chinese bishop. The only other instance of an Oriental bishop is the Rt. Rev. Vedanayakam Samuel Azariah, D.D., consecrated in 1912 to the newly established see of Dormakai in South India. When in 1909 by joint action the dioceses of the English, Canadian and American missions became the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hei, the Holy Catholic Church of China, and established their own synod, the first step towards the nationalizing of the Chinese Church was made. The next important development was the native Board of Missions which has undertaken the evangelization of the great "not-yet-Christian" provinces of the Celestial Empire. Now we welcome the first Chinese bishop. It will be a long time before the Sheng Kung Hei can dispense with help from the older churches. But more and more that help should be limited to the great institutions of education and mercy, while the pastoral work which can never be done so well by foreigners will be in the hands of the native ministry.

Archdeacon Sniffen

THE diocese of Western Massachusetts was for many years singularly blessed in the possession of so consecrated a missionary as Archdeacon Sniffen. It has suffered an incalculable loss in his death. In the affectionate appreciation of his work and character by the Rev. Arthur J. Gammack which we published a fortnight ago we find the explanation of the missionary's power to win his fellow-men. The life he chose to live was a life of stern sacrifice. "The conditions of his life were hard, and the rewards, except in affection, were few; he never had salary enough to have a home of his own but lived to the end in a boarding house. In the light of this life, so remarkable in nobleness and accomplishment, we feel the need of new standards for estimating men and meting out rewards."

Was it not this very hardship of his lot, a hardship which he shared with most of the clergy of the diocese in which he worked, that made his fellowship with the poor and distressed so wholesome and real? He was the pastor pastorum of a large section of a diocese that presents many missionary problems. The clergy knew that he shared their lot: so they went to him with their troubles. There was no one else to whom to go who would understand. It is this type of unworldliness that is always the biggest asset of the Church.

Bishop Johnson of Missouri writes of him: "He busied himself with no arm-chair theorizing about missionary work. The way to do it was to do it! Others might or might not tell with fervid oratory the story of what was going on. But for a dozen years it was this loving shepherd of the sheep whom those who looked out of their windows in Western Massachusetts saw with the lambs on his shoulder and in his bosom fetching them home!"

Prayers for Missions

SUPPOSE we really took our Lord at His word and prayed for the things we desire! Is it that we desire them only theoretically? Or is it rather that we find it much easier to work with our hands than on our knees? It is much less effort for most of us to spend an afternoon packing a missionary box than to spend an afternoon in missionary intercessions.

An instance has recently come to our attention that illustrates this point. There is in England a quarterly intercession paper published like our quarterly Church Prayer League leaflets. Indeed, it was the model for ours, and it is used by some 40,000 members instead of as with us by only 4,000. In England this leaflet is printed in Braille for the blind. Some years ago a petition was inserted for the guidance of the S. P. G. "in the matter of raising funds for the special training of candidates for the mission field". The S. P. G. wished to provide scholarships for men and women who volunteered but had no private resources for the special courses needed for the mission field. This need was made urgent to the members of the Prayer League at the time.

A copy of the leaflet in Braille was then given regularly to an old woman in a county almshouse. She offered her prayers; but she did not feel that enough. So she began to set aside the little doles that friends brought her for sugar and small comforts that are not to be had in almshouses. As soon as she had $1.25 she sent it to the secretary of the League. To him it seemed a manifest leading, and in the next number he told the story, and suggested the opening of a voluntary offering from members of the League, apart from their dues, to be called the "Candidates' Five Shilling Fund".

It grew gradually, until in 1913, the year before the War, it reached its high-water mark—$16,880. Even in 1916, the third year of the war, it amounted to $15,390; the difference being not in the lessening of smaller contributions, but in the omission of a few large gifts. And at this moment the fund is educating seven men and thirty-two women for the mission work of the S. P. G.

El Siglo Nuevo

THE Board of Missions is at last able to make its first venture into the literature of the mission field. This is perhaps the greatest missionary need of the day. The missionary has his converts and inquirers for one day in the week. During the remaining six they are held by a press that is atheistic or theosophic or spiritualistic or erotic or socialist or just materialistic. For a number of years the Methodist Church has conducted a carefully planned campaign of literature hand-in-hand with preaching, healing and teaching campaigns. The Seventh Day Adventists have a special publishing house for this work. But except for sporadic and ill supported attempts in the mission field, our Episcopal Board of Missions has done little in this line.

Now comes the welcome announcement that a Spanish paper called El Siglo Nuevo is to be published monthly at the Church Missions House under the editorship of the Rev. A. R. Gray, D.D., secretary for Latin America, and the Rev. W. Lloyd Bevan, Ph.D. Some of the clergy, both American and native, in our Latin American missions will serve as contributing editors. The twelve pages will include besides editorial matters and news, a section called Reflexiones y Meditaciones, Philosophia Christiana y Doctrina, Sociologia and Historia. One series of articles that is planned is on socialism, to be written by Dr. Bevan. Socialism is a burning subject in Latin lands, and our people need to hear it discussed from a Christian point of view.

THE CHURCHMAN wishes good luck to the new venture in Church journalism.

Japan and the United States

IN view of much anti-Japanese propaganda which has been in progress in this country it is reassuring to hear that an American banker, Mr. A. Barton Hepburn, has just made a gift of one hundred thousand yen to the Imperial University of Tokyo for the endowment of an American professorship of international law and comity. "The purpose of the gift," says the Tokyo Advertiser, "is to promote understanding and good will between the two countries." Accompanying the gift was a letter from Mr. Hepburn to Baron Shibusawa stating his ideas about American-Japanese relations, which was received with satisfaction by the Japanese press. Indeed, since the Ishii-Lansing note there has been a great development of friendship and enthusiasm for the United States. As an evidence of this, the American ambassador has been entertained by one club or association after another in Tokyo this Winter. Mr. Hepburn is distantly related to the great missionary. "At our last interview," writes Mr. Hepburn, "he said to me 'the Japanese are a good people and a great people and I want you always to be their friend'." It would be an excellent thing if some Americans would take this advice to heart.

The Spirit of Anti-Christ

By THE REV. R. J. CAMPBELL

A BOOK has just been published in this country which throws a most instructive light on the aims and purposes of the military governing class in Germany, and therefore what we are up against. It is always rather difficult for one nation to understand fully the psychology of another; it has been repeatedly said during the War that Germany is conspicuously lacking in this respect, hence her incredible diplomatic blunders, but perhaps we are not so very much better. Have we ever understood Germany; do we understand Germany now? This is the question suggested to the writer by the perusal of this extraordinary book which is a revelation of what we have to expect if we enter into peace negotiations with unconquered Prussianism.

The book is from no less a pen than that of the Acting Chief of the German General Staff. It is entitled Deductions from the World War, by Lieutenant General Baron von Freytag-Loringhoven (Constable & Company, 2/6 net). There could be no higher authority on the subject of which it treats or the view which German Imperialism takes of the future as influenced by the experience gained in the present war. If we have any illusions about the chastened spirit of our foes they will be rudely dispelled by a study of these pages, which were not intended for our reading but for that of the German people. Every care was taken by the Berlin Government to keep the book from the knowledge of the outside world while promoting its circulation in Germany; only a few copies have been smuggled across the frontier while the sale within the territory of the Central Powers has been enormous, a fact of much significance; evidently there is still a large German public which feeds upon this kind of thing and heartily approves it. The rulers of Germany know enough to be aware that if the outside world had an equally clear grasp of Teutonic policy as herein set forth it might inconvenience them at the present stage when they desire to gain time by posing as ready for peace and disarmament, but they have no such fears about their own people.

What has the candid writer to tell us, or rather to tell his fellow-countrymen? (By the way, it is somewhat noteworthy that the personage in question, Baron von Freytag-Loringhoven, is by birth a Russian and began his career in the Russian Army.) Not by word or hint does he suggest the possibility of belief in the moderation of German demands at the conclusion of peace or in time to come; on the contrary, he assumes that there will be a next struggle for even greater ends, and a next, and a next beyond that. War is to last forever; there is to be no thought of its disappearance from the earth; when not actually engaged in fighting, nations are to be preparing for fresh wars. "War has its basis in human nature, and as long as human nature remains unaltered war will continue to exist, as it has existed already for thousands of years. The oft quoted saying of Moltke that wars are inhuman, but eternal peace is a dream, and not even a beautiful dream, will continue to be true." "Therefore the idea of a universal league for the preservation of peace remains a Utopia, and would be felt as an intolerable tutelage by any great and proud-spirited nation." "In any event, as regards us Germans, the World War should disencumber us once and for all of any vague cosmopolitan sentimentality. If our enemies, both our secret and avowed enemies, make professions of this nature, that is for us sufficient evidence of the hypocrisy which underlies them." "We find it impossible to believe in the realization of genuine pacifist ideals, such as are cherished by well-meaning sentimentalists. Only a spiritual transformation of the human race could bring this about, and how far we are from any such transformation has been revealed by the War."

The gulf between the hopes of the Bolsheviks and the men with whom they are treating for a separate peace could not be more plainly stated. Germany, as represented by her military autocracy, has no intention of making a final peace with anybody; she relies upon the sword and has a cynical contempt for the ideals of international amity and brotherhood; she does not desire to see a world from which war should be banished forever, nor does she conceive that such a consummation would be in any way to her advantage. That she may find it diplomatic to say the opposite occasionally when something is to be gained thereby at the moment should not blind us to her matured conviction on the point.

Our author has no hesitation about the use of the word militarism. He is not only unashamed of the achievements of militarism as fathered by Prussia but glories in them. "The spirit of German militarism, as Prussia first developed it and Germany adopted it, is every whit as monarchical as it is aristocratic and democratic, and it would cease to be German and the mighty expression of German imperial military power and military efficiency if it were to change." "The spirit of German militarism, which has enabled us to stand the test of the World War, and which we must preserve in the future, because with it our world-position stands or falls, rests ultimately on the building up of an officers' corps which shall be thoroughly efficient for purposes of war. For this purpose a sound aristocratic tradition is of the highest value." No thought of compromise with Americanism here! We are left in no doubt as to the attitude of the German governing caste towards democracy in any and every form. "The masses, as such, can never rule. If mob rule is consequently an absurdity in a state, how much more so is it in an army?" The genial Baron goes on to argue frankly that an efficient army is dependent upon absolutism and cannot exist without it. It must be officered aristocratically also for the same reason—"for what has rendered our army so efficient has been precisely the thoroughly aristocratic organization of the officers' corps upon a democratic basis". The simple reader might imagine from this latter observation that at least officers might rise from the ranks. Not at all. "The officer must be of that ruling race who exert a controlling influence, even if momentarily they are not within sight or hearing." The German Chief of Staff will have nothing to say to equality of opportunity in the army or anywhere else; privilege is to be maintained, and all nations coming within the German system will have to submit themselves to it. Fear and love are to be the two great instruments of government, and fear is to "perform the lion's share". Universal military service is to be perpetuated—that blight and curse of modern civilization. "To it Prussia-Germany owes her advancement, and it was inevitable that, when all the great Powers adopted it, the violence of war should be again augmented." There is to be no puling sentimentality here either; there can no longer be any non-combatants; it is whole peoples, and not professional armies only, that contend for mastery in present and future wars. So now we are made to comprehend, if we had not already done so, why Belgium and Serbia have been ravaged and trampled underfoot by their merciless invaders.

This is a shocking picture of the mentality against which we are having to strive, the mentality with which we have to deal when there is any talk of making peace, the mentality which, unless it is exorcised once and for all, will hold the world in dread for generations to come as it has done for generation past. This mentality is in every respect the direct antithesis of that represented by the responsible spokesmen of the free self-governing communities of the earth. There can be no real compromise with it; either it must go under or we must. It is a truly diabolical thing, dark, sinister, and dreadful, that has thrown its hellish spell over a great and virile race. It is the complete expression of everything on this planet that is opposed to the reign of Christ in the hearts of men.

How are we to get rid of it? Perhaps those are right who say that it will never be (Continued on page 229)

The Spirit of the Reformation–I

By THE REV. F. J. FOAKES JACKSON, D.D.

What Rome Meant to our Ancestors

I WAS once told by an examiner at Oxford that a brilliant young man in the viva voce examination made a disparaging remark about Dante. Whereupon the president remarked, "Sir, no one was alive six hundred years ago of whom you can possibly have heard who was not of great importance". Well this applies to Martin Luther and to much of the chatter about him in certain circles. One would think from what some otherwise educated people say about him that all he did was to defy the pope, marry a nun, and allow the Landgrave of Hesse to have two wives! But Luther must always be acknowledged as a man who changed not merely the course of human events, but of the whole of human thought. He made an attitude of mind practically unknown during the middle ages in Western Europe possible, namely, what we know as Protestantism. In his challenge to Rome, made just 400 years ago, he sounded the death knell of a system which for good as well as for evil had dominated the nations from which I imagine the vast majority of those I address today derive their origin.

It is not to be supposed that Luther did this consciously or that he saw the far-reaching results of his famous ninety-five theses. Great man as he undoubtedly was he could not have acted with the full knowledge of all in which his acts would result. To no man is it given to have such foresight. For a human life is so short and man's outlook necessarily so limited that it is impossible to speak or act save under the influence of the circumstances of the time. Luther was of a deeply mystical nature as well as a man of heroic courage. He grasped what he conceived to be a great truth, he acted as one possessed by its influence and left the ultimate result to God. What that has been up to the present day we are able to judge far better than he.

I want to invite your consideration to two things, what Rome meant to our ancestors and what Protestantism means to us.

The Church of Rome is one of the most remarkable facts in history. Founded, as it boasted even in remote antiquity, by the two Apostles Peter and Paul, it was recognized as early as the close of the second century as the repository of the tradition of the Apostle to the Jews and of the Apostle to the Gentiles. Two centuries later it had become the symbol of the unity of the whole Christian communion. In the doctrinal quarrels of the next age its steady, if not very intelligent, orthodoxy held the balance between the divided Churches of the East, and amid all the disasters of Italy and the city itself the prestige of the Church steadily increased. When the world was overwhelmed in barbarism, the Roman Church stood for the glories of the old civilization and commanded reverence, not only for this, but as the home of the bones and relics of the martyrs and saints of early Christianity. Kings and princes flocked to Rome to lay aside their crowns and worship at her shrine.

The reverence, the gratitude of the simple savages of the North towards the Roman see was unbounded. They dowered the Church with the territories from which the Lombards had driven the Byzantine emperors; they accepted every document Rome produced to confirm her right to unbounded jurisdiction, based on the wildest legend and the most barefaced forgeries. They taxed themselves and their Churches freely for her support. Their missionaries won kingdoms for Christ and laid them at the feet of the popes; their armies fought in the cause of the Roman Church; their scholars were proud to labor in its defense. When their own countrymen made it impossible for a pope to be safe in Italy, he was received North of the Alps as a veritable confessor of the Faith. The papal bulls were received with respect in the remotest parts of Norway and even in Iceland. It is hardly too much to say that for centuries obedience to Rome was regarded as the highest service to Christ Himself.

To do the papacy justice much of this honor was deserved. Often the popes stood nobly for the highest known ideal of purity and justice; they mediated between kings and their oppressed subjects; they stood outside the petty jealousies of warlike princes. They advocated a unity of Christendom in the face of a world largely Mohammedan and pagan; they made it possible for a man to take the long and dangerous journey from, say, Scotland to Rome and be sure of finding himself at home in every Christian church; they gave Europe a common language; they used their authority to mitigate the horrors of war and to give at least brief seasons of universal peace. This at least must be set to the credit of the Roman see and certainly it merited some of the gratitude it received. But there was another side. It is often claimed that medieval Rome was international. So it was entirely in theory, and in part in practice. But in many respects it was local in the extreme in its aims. It demanded unquestioning obedience, and obedience often meant the subordination of all interests and rights to the policy of the popes. Of this I must cite a few examples.

There are few blacker pages in history than the treatment of the Churches of the East. Scant justice has been awarded to the work done by the Roman emperors at Constantinople in keeping alive Christianity and civilization for centuries after the appearance of Mohammed. For long ages their empire was the only Christian civilized power on earth. But the Christianity of the East was not a mere acquiescence in dogmas; the fresh mind still strove to understand what it accepted and this resulted in countless controversies. The safety of the whole empire depended on Christian union. Compromises were offered which promised to satisfy all parties, but in every case Rome interfered. The result was the early success of Mohammedanism. Even when there was an endeavor to suffer the growing superstition which made men worship pictures rather than God, Rome threw her whole weight on to the side of the image servers. By so doing she weakened the whole moral life of Greek Christianity. She made an unauthorized insertion of a word into the common creed the excuse for excommunicating the entire Orthodox Greek Communion. After the event she sanctioned the atrocious crime by which a Latin army was diverted from a crusade against the Mohammedans to capture the Christian city of Constantinople in 1204. She broke up the empire, the sole bulwark against the Turks. Even in the last throes of its existence Rome forced on the Church of Constantinople a scheme of union as a price for aid from the West that never came and in a sense the awful curse of a Turkish empire in Europe may be laid at the door of the domestic policy of the papal see.

Look again at Rome's treatment of Italy. From the days of the Ostrogoths in the sixth century down to the present day the papal policy has been against allowing Italy to be a united nation. It was Rome who intrigued to bring the Byzantine into Italy; two centuries later she invited the Franks to break up the Lombard kingdom. She encouraged the Norman invaders in the eleventh century; she brought in the French in the thirteenth. Even in the youth of some of us it was Rome who supported the atrocious regime of the kingdom of the two Sicilies against Victor Emmanuel and Garibaldi and by her influence the French committed the mistake of holding Rome for the pope till 1870, when they paid so dearly for their infatuated policy towards Italy in the Prussian War.

And as Rome has treated European nations so has she treated Churches, not of Protestants, but those of her most devoted sons. The Romanists of England afford a striking example. At the death of Mary it was all to the interest of her sister Elizabeth to be on good terms with Pius IV. She sent to announce her accession, and her ambassadors were grossly insulted. Why? Because the papacy was at that time at war with her brother-in-law and ally, Philip II. of Spain, and to question Elizabeth's rights was to embarrass the political enemy of Rome, who be it remembered was a fanatical upholder of Catholicism. The Queen of England had no alternative but to throw herself into the arms of the Reformers. Even then Elizabeth was desirous of securing the good will of her Romanist subjects. She offered them large concessions, she was prepared to go farther. But it was to the interest of Rome that the English Romanists should furnish martyrs; the country was flooded with Jesuit emissaries; plots were hatched and as a result loyal Roman Catholics had to groan under severe penal laws.

France has had an analogous experience. The suppression of the Jansenists deprived the Church of its most pious adherents. The slightest effort to assert the independence of the French Catholics was regarded as the worst of heresies, and Gallicanism, as it was called, was more dreaded than Protestantism. The loyalist French clergy were completely sacrificed in the Concordat with Napoleon, which was welcomed as ousting Gallicanism, and all the sufferings of the Church in France in recent years had been provoked because the interests of the Roman see have seemed to demand it. The same interests have tied the mouth of Benedict XV. when Belgium, one of the countries most loyal to the pope, was overrun and Cardinal Mercier, the champion of orthodoxy against Abbé Loisy, has been as far as possible ignored.

This then is what Rome means: and it is what Luther consciously or unconsciously defied—a highly centralized power with world dominating aims, embracing as far as possible the whole human race and at the same time declaring that those subject to its influence ought cheerfully to sacrifice themselves or be sacrificed in its interests. It cannot be denied that even since the reformation it has had its successes and at times has produced splendid results. It is far more efficient than any other Church; its centralized despotism enables it to command better service, its missionary activity is magnificent. It still produces saints and martyrs.

But at what expense! Take the story of any two Romanist and Protestant countries you choose since 1517. Spain, then in the height of her wealth and glory, the most enterprising and warlike race in Europe and one of the most intelligent, and Scotland, the poorest and most uncivilized of the age. What is their relative position now? How many great men has each nation produced since, say, A. D. 1700? Would it not be almost an insult to the barren states of New England to ask whether or not they had given the world ten, aye, twenty times as many famous men and women as the rest of the American continent from Mexico to Cape Horn? It is the same everywhere. Where Rome has had her opportunity, she has brought intellectual barrenness—not because Protestantism has had better material to work upon; but because Rome has imposed a religious Kultur of her own—good of its kind—but, because imposed by force or craft, paralyzing to the human intellect. That is the reason why, even though we acknowledge some virtue in Rome, we can never sneer at the word Protestant or refuse to apply it to our Church.

On Training the Clergy—I

By THE REV. JOHN P. PETERS, Ph.D., D.D., Sc.D.

FIFTEEN or twenty years ago I thought I knew something about the way in which men should be trained for the ministry of the Church, and I had a great desire to propound my views in a paper to be read before this Club, which, after due discussion and consequent reflection and modification, I had hoped to publish somewhere for the good and edification of the Church at large; but every time my turn came around I was deeply interested in some other question, particularly the religion of the Hebrews, and anxious to present some phase of that subject to the Club in the hope of testing out the material on which I was then working for my volume on the "Religion of the Hebrews"; and now, when at last I do take up this theme, it is hardly of my own volition, and it is with a profound sense that I do not know what I thought I knew fifteen or twenty years ago. Indeed, I am very doubtful whether I know anything at all; nor should I have taken up this subject unless it had been suggested to me as one that is timely, and which ought to be discussed even more. (I say even more, for we discussed it two months ago in connection with Dr. Nichols' most interesting paper.) That paper and that discussion, in which I did not venture to take part, made me conscious of my ignorance and filled me with a desire for enlightment, which was increased by reading an article in the last number of the Harvard Theological Review on Theological Education in England, Holland and America, by Professor Kirsopp Lake.

The paper which I shall present to you today I beg you to regard not as an attempt to instruct you, but as a plea for enlightenment. Because of the state of my mind on this whole matter, however, I must present what I have to say in a somewhat personal, and, I fear, a very egotistic manner.

In the first place let me briefly summarize my own training and experience as throwing light on my qualification, or lack of qualification, to discuss the subject at all. I am by nature and original training a teacher. I love teaching. It is a delight, satisfaction and amusement to me. I would rather teach a class in almost anything than even play a game of golf. I began teaching Sunday school when I was about thirteen years old, and off and on I have been giving religious instruction to children ever since. I began my experience in secular teaching shortly after my graduation from college. I was always ready to take a class, or a school, to relieve a friend, even without any consideration or emolument, for the sheer pleasure of it; and I think, in point of fact, that I have derived more satisfaction from teaching arithmetic, geography and English grammar and composition to boys of ten or twelve than I have derived from teaching theology to theological students.

The method of teaching has always interested me: to get the pupils interested, to feel their minds respond, to find methods of imparting information, or rather of stimulating the student to desire to secure the information which shall make the class work vital. I always liked it because I got such a lot out of it myself, and because it was such a revelation to me of the minds and natures of my pupils. I taught for my living during the greater part of my theological training. Then I entered the faculty of Yale College and taught Greek, and a little Latin, to undergraduates for three years. There I was allowed a good deal of freedom to develop my own methods and to experiment for the benefit of the department. Then I studied in two German universities and used my pen. Later I became a professor of Old Testament in the Divinity School of Philadelphia, and of Hebrew in the University of Pennsylvania. During that period, with my old fellow-student, Professor, afterwards President, W. R. Harper, I engaged in Summer school work, and I also became interested in extension work, coming through both of these into contact with new lines of teaching, necessitating new methods.

But all this is of the distant past. Twenty-four years ago I resigned my professorship in the University of Pennsylvania, and since that date I have had comparatively little to do with the actual practice of seminary or university teaching. I did have, it is true, for two or three years, a seminar of students of the General Seminary, who used to meet at my house for Old Testament study. I have also during this time done a fair amount of lecturing in seminaries, colleges and universities on three somewhat unrelated themes, the Bible, archæology and sociology, and in this way I have come in contact as a lecturer with a considerable number of students. I have also been trustee of a college. Farther during this time I have in a general way interested myself in methods both of secular and religious education. While I was a tutor in Yale College I used to assume considerable additional work in examining students for admission on geography and the common English branches in order to learn how the fundamentals of education were being handled in our schools.

This is the first part of a paper to be printed in four sections, read before "The Club", a group of clergymen from New York and the neighboring dioceses, and published by vote of The Club.—THE EDITORS.

Since I have been rector of St. Michael's I have at various times interested myself pretty closely in the work of the public schools of my neighborhood. At one time I gave a morning each week to visiting these schools, going from room to room to follow the instruction given, and at times taking it over myself, at the suggestion of the principal or teacher. I have been in most of the experiments in religious education which the Church has tried in latter years, from the Sunday School Commission to the Demonstration School, at present located in St. Michael's parish. So much for specific experience in educating, omitting the et ceteras.

Permit me to add that as a natural result of this interest in education I have at various times developed very definite views on the organization of the public school system, its methods of training, how it should be brought into connection with the vocation of the pupils, as also on the proper development of colleges and universities, in general and in particular fields. A theory which I propounded very earnestly, especially in a series of papers in the Evening Post over thirty years ago, was that the college course should end at about the close of the present sophomore year, that up to that point there should be a fairly constant general training, varying somewhat according to the line of work to be pursued later, cultural on one side, scientific on the other, and that the specializing university work should begin about where our present junior work now begins. I thought that our small colleges and our universities should work together toward this.

I have twice been interested in attempts to accomplish the organization or reorganization of a university. When I was a graduate student at New Haven, Connecticut consolidated its two capitals, New Haven and Hartford, into one, and in order to provide a proper State House at Hartford bought the site of Trinity College. This left the latter institution foot-loose, with a considerable sum at its disposal to start life anew. President Porter of Yale College sent for me and proposed to me the following plan: the removal of Trinity College to New Haven to be established as a college there, co-ordinate with Yale College and part of a larger university scheme, somewhat on the plan of the English universities. It met with my enthusiastic approval, and he made me a sort of confidential representative to present unofficially to friends and trustees of Trinity most generous offers and proposals. Had Trinity accepted, a similar proposal would have been made to Wesleyan College and to Berkeley Divinity School at Middletown and I suppose also to the Congregational Seminary at Hartford, with the idea of bringing together all the institutions of higher learning in Connecticut in one place, as so many colleges of one great university. It was a grand scheme, one which won my fullest sympathy and enthusiasm, and it was with great regret that I was forced to report that the Trinity authorities would not really give it serious consideration.

When I was called as a professor to the Divinity School in Philadelphia I hesitated, because I was not in sympathy with the idea of a divinity school flocking by itself, away from university surroundings. I finally told those who were responsible for my election my views, and stated that, if I accepted, I should do so with the idea of making every effort to bring the Divinity School into closest touch with the University, and that I would not accept unless I could be sure of their support in such effort, or at least that I should have free hand to make the effort without opposition. It was to carry out this idea of co-ordinating the Divinity School with the University that a little later I accepted a professorship in the University of Pennsylvania without salary, my payment being the right of Divinity School students to take certain University courses agreed upon without fee. Hebrew became optional in the college course for juniors and seniors, and with the consent of the authorities of the Divinity School I transferred all my Hebrew work to the University, putting my seminary students, as far as the study of the Hebrew language was concerned, in the same classes with the University students, much to the disgust of the former, but, as I believe, to the advantage of both. I then proposed that the University should pursue the same policy with regard to all the divinity schools in and about Philadelphia, appointing their professors of Hebrew professors in the University on the same terms on which I had been appointed, and proceeding gradually to treat New Testament and other chairs in a similar manner. This was to be, however, only a step to a larger co-ordination of institutions of higher learning; and at the request of the Provost of the University I drew up a preliminary proposition of a University scheme affecting not only the Divinity Schools but the medical schools and other institutions for higher learning. My proposal was so to combine all institutions for higher learning and of research as to enlarge the scope of the University to cover every branch of learning, so as to secure the fullest opportunities and the best instruction in each department of knowledge and research, retaining at the same time the autonomy of the parts very much on the lines partly carried out in New York a little later under President Low. I did not propose to eliminate divinity schools as such, but to transfer every course which could be so transferred to the University, making the various professors University professors for that purpose, and leaving to the schools themselves the cultivation of the purely religious and practical side of clerical training. Unfortunately for my scheme, just when I had reached this stage I left the country on my Babylonian expedition, and, while Provost Pepper expressed the greatest interest in and sympathy with my plan, he had too many irons in the fire to work it out.

But, as I have already said, my years of experience as a teacher and an organizer of teaching are long past. There have been enormous changes in the twenty-four years since I resigned my last professorship. My experience as a trustee of Hobart College showed me something of this. Today I am probably better qualified to speak of the training of the cleregy from the point of view of the rector of a parish who has had many curates, trained in divinity schools and otherwise, and who has had a long and somewhat varied experience of the practical needs of the ministry, than as an educator. But before undertaking that even indirectly let me go back once more to antiquity and ego. (To be continued)

A Prayer for Victory

LORD God of righteousness, Who holdest the worlds in the hollow of Thine hand, in Whose sight the starry hosts are but as dust, to Thee it belongeth to raise up nations and to cast down, to up-build or to destroy. Regard Thou not, we beseech Thee, our sins past, but bare Thine outstretched arm on our behalf as we draw the sword and join our hosts with those that fight to establish truth and justice in the earth, offering up our youth innumerable that the powers of darkness, of savagery and lawless might may be dethroned. Defend, O Lord, the right; lead us and our allies through righteous victory to lasting peace; and by the fiery trial of this awful war bring all nations at the last to own Thee King of kings and Lord of lords; through Thy Son, our only Saviour, Jesus Christ.—Amen.

Immortality

By THE REV. CHARLES LEWIS SLATTERY, D.D.

ONE of the expected results from the multiplied tragedy of the War is an increasing number of books which in various ways take up the subject of Immortality. Many people with little interest in psychical research read Sir Oliver Lodge's Raymond because it was the record made by a grief-stricken father. So with nearly all the books which have come to us from England written during the War, there is the profound personal note in all references to the great hope for the future.

It is quite evident that the Church will meet its supreme opportunity, not in conventional exhortations to a sound, ethical life, and not in seeking leadership in the work of the Red Cross. Both of these functions are important, but others may do them as well. What the Church may do with unique power is to take from its sacred experience the new assurance of Immortality.

As our vision widens, as we discover that this War is not for the ambition of any individual or class or nation, but for the common good of a struggling humanity, so we know that the approach to belief in Immortality is not to be along the road of justice to man but along the road whereon man shall discover what is the endless plan of God, in which men's co-operation will be needed, not for a mere earthly span, but for an eternity of effort and of victory. We have told ourselves that it would not be fair to man if God put into man's heart ideals and ambitions, and snapped off the current of life when these ideals and ambitions were, even by the best men, only beginning to be fulfilled. Such logic has force; but the War is making us all think more of God, less of man apart from God. All sorts of people, people quite outside conventional attachment to religion and the Church, have this new sense of Presence. Within the Church the sense of Presence is vastly deepened. Therefore we are looking at Immortality from His point of view. We are thinking of it, not because man needs it, but because God's bewildering purpose evidently demands it.

In the last year of his life the distinguished English scholar, Dr. Swete, delivered a course of six popular lectures on "The Life of the World to Come".* These lectures mark the extremely careful exegesis of the generation which is almost past. Only here and there is there a sentence which seems to come out of a vivid experience. But there are exceptions: for instance, Dr. Swete says in one place, "If there is a purgatory there, it is not what the Middle Ages imagined, a fire of penal suffering; but it is the all-holy presence of Jesus Christ, in which all that is not holy must melt away and vanish". So in the last chapter he defines eternal life as (1) The Knowledge of God and Christ, (2) Possession of Them, (3) Service or Work, and (4) Incessant Progress.

A far more important book is the recent collection of essays published under the title, "Immortality: An Essay in Discovery, co-ordinating Scientific, Psychical, and Biblical Research".† The essayists joined with a number of others in conference, so that there was the stimulus of criticism and confirmation. Such a co-operative book may lack life. When Lux Mundi was finished Dr. Illingworth wrote to a friend his disappointment in the result of the labors of himself and the other authors of the book. "Years ago", he said, "one would hardly have thought that the finished effort of the writers would only have issued in adding one to the countless tomes of dull divinity—safe, sound, and unreadable—yet so I fear it is. Moore had some good jokes, and Holland some wild outbursts, but they were ruthlessly expunged—and I had such a pretty purple passage whose orthodoxy was not equal to its rhythm, and so it had to go."‡ We see the bold advance which has been made in this later attempt to write a book in partnership. One of the authors is a surgeon in the Royal Navy; another, an author on eschatological questions; another, a woman who has written popular religious books. Of the two remaining writers, Mr. Clutton-Brock is well known as the author of The Ultimate Belief, and Canon Streeter is known best of all as the editor of Foundations and Concerning Prayer. If one may put doubts in the place of physical ailments one may say that, instead of going to a family physician, the reader goes to a group of specialists to have his doubts treated. Again and again I discover the announcement of theories and intimations which I fancy most people would hardly like to take out into the light for fear that they would be either laughed at or patronized. There is a wholesome daring in nearly all the essays which is refreshing. Angels of hope are brought down to give a message. Goblins of superstition and of wild vagaries are driven back into their woods.

A few random passages may suggest the scope of this book. The surgeon, for example, asks if the proved power of telepathy may not be an indication that in its highest development the mind not only influences and controls the physical but is so far its superior that it can function without the body. Canon Streeter, finding that the great majority are neither good enough for heaven nor bad enough for hell, declares that there is no satisfactory solution except progress as a necessary element of the future life, and that this progress must include joy. "We cannot conceive of a heaven", he says, "in which Christ would be content to dwell unless there was to be found in it the counterpart of other things He loved on earth, the wild flowers and the birds, the children playing, friends gathered round the common board, the fellowship of labor and of love, and the quiet hour on the mountainside at dawn." Mr. Clutton-Brock has a venturesome passage in which he imagines Henry James really happy in heaven: "If he were still himself, his state of blessedness would be talking it over with an enhanced power of hinting, in involved, exquisitely adjusted sentences, just what he would prefer instead of it". Mr. Clutton-Brock also states, "We are so unfit for perfection that it would be a nightmare if we were thrown into it". This he says by way of insisting that we must be always growing. In one of her essays Miss Dougall has a delightful fling at Lord Halifax. Speaking of psychic research, she writes, "I do not think that there is any evidence to prove that telephonic communication with the other world has been established. His Lordship thinks that a devil is speaking into the receiver at the other end". This able woman's suggestion to the mourner is that prayer is better than spiritualism because it is more direct. Her advice is "to pray for the welfare of those whom we have loved and who are lost to sight, and, after such prayer, take time to think of them there in the silence and ask ourselves whether we have not some reason to believe that they are also thinking of us".

Before the War is over I suspect that there will be many books on Immortality. The very quality of the men who go out into the unknown will compel us to believe that the Creator with an ageless purpose could never waste such spirits. If one moment we look down at the seeming waste of the battlefield, the next we must look up to the onrushing plan of God. Thereby we shall know, as by revelation, that the brave and the strong, giving the best that life knows in their time, shall go on to serve the Lord God in the spaces which for us are still invisible. Already in our vision we see them pushing on to greater and happier victories. And we see the heroes here melt into the innumerable company of heroes there, one endless throng of servants of a patient and loving God.

Heart of the Jungle Tales – III

By ADA M. SKINNER

In Pygmyland

TRAVELERS in Africa have told from time to time about a wonderful race of little people, called Pygmies, which they found living in the heart of the great Congo Forest. Few people believed these tales to have any truth in them. It was only after Stanley, the great explorer, forced his way through the dangers of this forest and came upon tribe after tribe of dwarf people that the world accepted their existence as a fact.

Later, a young missionary named Lloyd, with a small band of natives, braved the jungle and came across a settlement of the dwarfs and actually lived among them for a while. He gives us an interesting picture of these little people whom he found very kind and obliging in many ways. He tells us that after a six days' march through the perilous forest he had not seen a trace of the Pgymies and he began to half believe that the Pygmy stories were not true. On the seventh day, however, as they were making their way through the jungle, his boy suddenly called out "Monkey", at the same time pointing to the top of a high tree close by. Mr. Lloyd looked up and saw a creature who from the boy's description he took to be a gorilla. He raised his rifle and was about to fire when the boy suddenly pulled his arm and called out, "Don't fire—it's a man!" At that moment the little creature ran along the branch in which he stood and, jumping from tree to tree, disappeared in the forest. Mr. Lloyd saw in a moment it was a Pygmy!

In a little while the travelers came to a pleasant spot fairly clear from underbrush and here they pitched camp. Mr. Lloyd sat down at the tent door intending to read, when, on looking up from his book, he saw a number of little Pygmy faces peering at him through the thicket. One little fellow, bolder than the rest, peeped around the trunk of a huge tree. Mr. Lloyd's boys were very much afraid of the little fellows and Mr. Lloyd himself was not at all sure of what they would do. However, he called out in one of the native languages the ordinary greetings of the country. To his great surprise one of the Pygmies answered him in the same language.

"Come here and let us talk together", called out Mr. Lloyd. The little fellow crept very shyly toward Mr. Lloyd, followed by some of the others. He hid his face behind his hands, while many of his companions dodged behind each other. Some of the little people would not come forward but stayed partly hidden in the jungle.

As the brave ones came near Mr. Lloyd noticed that each one carried either bow and quiver of arrows or short throwing-spears. Round their arms they wore iron rings and some of them had these round their necks also. Mr. Lloyd chatted away with the little fellow and he and the Pygmies became friends at once.

During the rest of his journey across the Great Pygmy Forest he came to know the strange little people very well and learned much about their ways. They do not build towns as other African tribes do, nor do they plant gardens. They wander from place to place gathering fruit and nuts from the trees, and wild honey. They shoot animals with their bows and arrows. Often they follow a wounded elephant for days, shooting into it hundreds of their little iron-tipped arrows, until the creature dies from exhaustion. They then make their camp all around the carcass and live upon the flesh as long as it lasts. As soon as it is gone, away they go again to seek other food.

The dwarfs often attach themselves to superior tribes and wander about in their neighborhood. They are fond of traveling and like nothing better than an exchange of dried meats, nuts and honey—the things of dwarfs—for the things of real people.

In an old clearing in the forest, near one of the villages of the Bulus, could be found from time to time a tribe of the little dwarf people. Be, the headman, and his followers often came back to the place to dry the meat of the last hunt which they had made. Be was well known to some of the Bulu people, especially to those who had had dealings with him when on trading expeditions in the forest—for traders were always sure of a welcome from Be and his group. But visits to the clearing for any other purpose were looked upon with suspicion by the little fellows.

The Bulus, who had become Christians and who wished to carry the "Word of God" to the little creatures, found it hard work indeed to approach them.

It was the custom of some of the native boys of the village to spend their vacation speaking the Word of God to these shy little wanderers. Hard work, indeed, these boys laid out for themselves, for the Pygmies were never easy to approach and they seemed to have little desire for the "Things from above". They had a religion of their own, strange as it may seem. They worshiped the Spirit of the Great Trees among which they lived. Often the foot of some huge tree became a shrine and bundles of food neatly tied up in bark cloth were laid there, or perhaps there was an offering of forest beans or a little handful of rice. These shrines, as well as little temples, very neatly made of leaves and boughs, were holy places to the little people, for there they offered up of what they had to the Spirit of the Great Forest.

For this reason the boys who were to carry the Word of God to the dwarfs were chosen with much care. They had a good reputation for endurance and courage.

Miss Mackenzie, in her delightful book entitled African Adventurers, gives an interesting account of some Bulu boys who preached to Be and his group when the little fellows returned to a clearing near their village.

Obam, the leader of the boys, had often been with his father in trading expeditions and knew Be the headman.

*The second path at the forking of the way was so thin—such a thread of a path—that a white man might easily pass by and never see it. This was the way to the dwarf people who followed the little dwarf headman, Be. So the boys went by way of the thread of a trail through the deep forest to the dwarf clearing.

No human being stirred in that clearing when the boys came out of the shadow of the forest into the sunny open. Little shelters of leaves were there, fires burned in the shelters. Fire burned in the centre of the clearing, and upon forked sticks about these fires hung the meat of monkeys. The school boys knew that bright eyes were watching them from the near wall of the forest. They laid their loads aside. The biggest shelter of leaves they knew must be the palaver house, where they sat down, sure that the dwarfs would soon be coming to salute them.

When Be saw from his hiding place the face of Obam he came quickly to salute him. After him came many little brown bodies of dwarf men and women and children. Soon that little leafy shelter was full of these —who looked in silence at the beautiful young men of the Bulu tribe, so grand in their singlets and their loin cloths.

Be was hoping as he looked at Obam that there was much fine goods for him in their loads.

"I greet you all," said Be to the school boys; and they greeted him.

"I ask you—why have you come to us at this time? Is it because of the meat of the last hunt that is now drying by the fires? Did the news of that meat bring you with cloth and other goods to trade for it? Much money I have in little gourds, do you wish to trade for it? Or nuts, do you wish? Open up the loads quickly so that I may see the beautiful goods brought to me by Obam."

"Mine are not loads of barter", said Obam. "They are my blanket to cover me at night and a lantern and some oil. There are besides some of the words of God that I have brought for your ears. Ah, Be, headman of this people, we desire to share with you the 'things from above'. We have come to open for you these things that have been hidden from you in the past."

"As for me", said Be, "I have no use for the words of which you speak. They are not for us. They are for the white people. I believe that trouble will come upon those black people who follow these new things. And even if great black chiefs agree to these new things and follow the white man's God—where will I end if I go on that path? Do the men who follow the new things make medicine for the hunt? Do they know a charm to protect those who climb trees and the steep cliffs? There is no profit for me or for my people in the new way. I myself, before the last rainy season, I went to see the white man who is the man of God and I begged him for dried fish—No! I begged him for rum—No! I begged him for a leaf of white man's tobacco as big as an eye-lash—No! I said, 'I have a child at home that is a girl child—give me a little piece of cloth that I may tie it about her head'. No!

"Then I said to that white man, 'I, the headman Be, have now come to your village for the first time—and am I to leave without a present? Nothing to carry away in my hand?' And the white man said, 'This is not a town where presents are made. This is a town where there are teachers and teaching of the Word of God—He who created you. The old law of God is known in this town and here your children may come and learn wisdom. Here your sick may come and be healed. But if you come to salute me ten tens of times', said that white man, 'and beg me with as many beggings as there are stars above for the goods of the white man and the riches of men, I will never give you of these as much as an eye-lash'."

"'If that is so', I told that white man, 'I am going'. And I went. And I have never desired the new things of which I heard that day. I do not desire them now. I desire all the things that the men of your father's tribe carry up from the beach on their backs—the good things of the white man, rum, and cloth, and beads, and iron pots that are not quickly broken as clay pots are. I beg of you, open your loads and we will bargain for the goods. Then you may go with loads of dried meat and honey and nuts."

"There are no trade goods in my loads," said Obam. "I come on another palaver. Every morning at dawn and every evening when the stars are created I will teach you of the things of God. These words that you hate before you have heard them—perhaps you will love when you have heard them. All this moon and the next moon I will open to you this wisdom."

"We are not sitting down in one place, as your father does", said Be. "We people who are dwarfs must do the forest work, we must go on the many little paths hunting and fishing and nutting. So it cannot be that you will visit us for two moons. We rise and go away from this place tomorrow."

"Where you go, I too will go", said Obam.

"And sleep where we sleep?"

"As you say."

"And eat what we eat?"

"Certainly."

"Since I was born!" cried out Be, "I never saw a son of your father's tribe that would endure these things. What new customs people begin to have!" And he slapped his thigh and laughed. All the little dwarf people laughed. They all laughed at the foolishness of the four Bulu boys who sat in their little palaver house looking very grave and dignified.

That night was a night of full moon. There was a great sound of drumming in the little clearing, with the palms of their hands the drummers beat the skin that was stretched on the heads of the upright drums. In the silver moonlight the dark little bodies capered to the sound of that drumming.

When Obam lit his lantern that night was a golden light. He drummed upon the call drum a little call to assemble. Then he sat upon the call drum. The four Bulu boys sitting together by the golden light of the lantern began to sing. One by one the dwarfs drew away from the dance—they gathered to the sound of that singing—even the drummers at last came near. The singing was about the love of God. Presently among all those people who sat in a dark group upon the ground Obam rose to tell them of the remembering with which Zambe* had remembered them.

"All these generations of men who said 'He-who-created-us' has forgotten us—they were all mistaken. 'He-who-created' remembered—so much He remembered that He made a visit. That visit was in the body of the son of 'Him-who-created'. That son was the Lord Jesus. And He is the chief of the new tribe that is being created by Zambe—'He-who-created' all tribes. Jesus is the headman. He shows those who follow Him the custom of the new tribe—that is a different custom from the old custom of the black people, and the law of this custom is ten words of law. He alone knows the path beyond death.

"Many things of all this news I will tell you on the nights of these two moons", said Obam. "But now we who have traveled today—we will go to bed."

The dwarfs laughed as they listened to Obam and his news—a laughter of surprise and of amusement. They laughed and talked together as they moved away in the moonlight. Soon the drums throbbed again and the dancers leaped above their black shadows.

The four Bulu boys lay beside the fire in the palaver house that was no more than a little leafy roof. Those dwarf beds were too small for the Bulu boys, they twisted and turned and stuck their legs out into space. All four were a little homesick.

Miss Mackenzie tells us further that the little sermon that Obam preached to the dwarfs is just a common beginning sermon. The boys who go into the villages to speak to the people about the things of God always speak to the more ignorant ones in that way.

Lent

By HARRIETTE H. BROOKS

THROUGH all these long, sad forty days of Thine,
Lord, fill me with adoring sympathy,
In meek attendance may I mark Thy steps,
Content to walk the lonely path with Thee,
O, fasting Christ.

From cold, compulsory service make me free,
For Thy great heart would none of grudging love,
I would unbidden taste the Cup with Thee,
And vain and worldly pleasures rise above,
O, loving Christ.

To live so emptied of this worthless self,
That Thy great love may fill and through me shine,
To wrestle in my wilderness with sin,
And conquer through Thy grace and strength Divine,
O, tempted Christ.

'Tis sweet to feel that so I touch Thy life,
So share Thy conflict over sin for me,
That with Thee in the Garden I may pray,
And weeping, bow before Thee on the Tree,
O, suffering Christ.

And then, Thy sorrows having humbly shared,
To greet Thee, Lord, as one long loved and known,
When with exultant heart on Easter Day,
I hail Thee Victor o'er the sealed stone,
O, risen Christ.

What Shall We Do With Our Synods?-II

By THE REV. EDWIN AUGUSTINE WHITE, D.C.L.

PROVINCIAL synods might well be given some voice in the selection of a bishop for a vacant missionary district within the province. This could be done in one of two ways. First, if the House of Bishops did not within a specified time exercise its power to transfer a missionary bishop to the vacant missionary district, then the vacancy might be filled by the synod of the province, the bishops nominating and the deputies consenting, this choice of the synod to be subject to confirmation by the House of Bishops either collectively or individually. Or, the synod might nominate to the House of Bishops a suitable person to be elected bishop of any missionary district that may become vacant within the province.

It is reasonable to suppose that the bishops of a province and the deputies to the synod would have a much better knowledge of the circumstances and needs of a missionary district within the province, and of men fitted for the post, than the whole House of Bishops or the General Convention.

Power should be given to a provincial synod to elect, subject to confirmation by the House of Bishops, a suffragan bishop to exercise his office in the congregations of a particular race throughout the province. An amendment to the constitution providing for such an election was passed by the House of Deputies at the last Convention, but was referred by the House of Bishops to a joint commission, to consider and report to the next Convention. The Convention also directed that the proposed amendment be transmitted to the secretary of each of the provinces for consideration by the provincial synods.

The province should be given the power, now exercised by the House of Deputies, and the Standing Committees, of confirming the election of a bishop, a coadjutor bishop, or a suffragan bishop of a diocese within the province. The present method of requiring the consent of a majority of the Standing Committees, during the recess of the General Convention, to the election of a bishop is far from satisfactory. Too often their consent is merely perfunctory, and usually without the possibility of intelligent action. The synod might well be substituted for the House of Deputies, and the Standing Committees of the dioceses within the province for the Standing Committees of all the dioceses, but still requiring the consent of a majority of all the bishops exercising jurisdiction within the United States. It would make confirmations to the episcopal office more real and also might guard against a man being stabbed in the back with no opportunity to make reply to charges made in private correspondence.

Power to give consent to the election of a bishop coadjutor or a suffragan bishop for a diocese within the province, now exercised by the House of Deputies or the Standing Committees as the case may be, might well be given to the synod of the province.

The principal power now given to a provincial synod is to act as or provide for a provincial Board of Missions, a provincial Board of Religious Education, and a provincial Board of Social Service, but with the provision that they shall be severally auxiliary to the General Boards having jurisdiction of these subjects. In other words, they are simply auxiliaries to the General Boards, without power of initiative or legislation. My mind is not quite clear as to the standing of the provincial Board of Social Service, or as to the right of the synod to create such a board. When created, it must be under the canon auxiliary to the General Board of Social Service, but there is no General Board of Social Service to which it can become auxiliary.

The remedy which suggests itself to my mind is not the creation of a General Board of Social Service at present, but to give to each provincial board full power and authority over social service matters within the province. The social service needs in one province are not the same as those in another province. Each province has it own peculiar problems to meet in this matter, and each province should be left to deal with those problems as it sees best.

While in missionary matters the provincial Board must necessarily be auxiliary to the General Board, its powers could be increased by giving to each province the right to require that the annual appropriations of the Board of Missions for work within the province be paid in gross for subdivision by the provincial synod, as well giving it the right to require the apportionment to a province be made to it in gross.

Much of the development of the educational work of the Church might well be left to the provincial Board of Religious Education, leaving to the General Board the unification of that work.

What I would plead for is more power of initiative in the several provincial boards, power to legislate on all questions that are peculiar to the province.

The weakest part of our ecclesiastical system is the judiciary. In theory we are supposed to have a diocesan Trial Court, a provincial Court, or Court of Review, and a Court of Appeals. The Court of Appeals, while provided for in the constitution, still waits for the action of the General Convention for its erection. The Court of Review is yet of little worth because its review of cases that come before it is so extremely limited owing to the non-existence of Courts of Appeal. So that, practically, the only court of the Church that possesses any real power, except in a few cases, is the diocesan Trial Court, and in most cases its decision is final. This being the case, one would naturally expect to find that these Courts were carefully constructed, and their membership well guarded. Unfortunately, in a majority of the dioceses, just the opposite is the case. Less care and thought seem to have been given to diocesan Courts than to any other part of the diocesan machinery, with the result that their decisions have too often not commanded the respect which they should have had. And why? Simply because of the way in which the Court was constituted. In some dioceses the bishop, with or without the approval of the Standing Committee, appoints the members of the Court. In other dioceses the Convention elects the members of the Court, but provides that in case of vacancies the bishop shall fill such vacancies. What has been the result? Trials have been had, with conviction of clergymen by a Court the majority of whose members were appointed by the bishop.

The bishop presented the clergyman for trial, the members of the Court, appointees of the bishop, convicted him, and the bishop executed the sentence. In other words, the bishop was the prosecuting attorney, the judge and the executioner. No wonder that the American sense of justice was shocked at such a condition of affairs, and the cry of an unfair trial was raised. Such methods of procedure need immediate correction. There should be an uniform composition of diocesan Trial Courts, and an uniform method of procedure in such Courts, especially in a province where appeals from such Courts are taken to the provincial Court of Review. The only way in which such uniformity can be obtained in a province is to give to the provincial synod the power to legislate thereon, and provide how the Court shall be constituted, and how it shall proceed in the conduct of a trial.

While my next proposition may not meet with unqualified approval in some quarters, my observations have convinced me that it would be of benefit to the Church, viz., the substitution of a Board of Provincial Examining Chaplains for our present diocesan ones. Too often, I fear, men are appointed to this office, not because they are possessed of some peculiar fitness therefor, but in recognition of their long and faithful service in the diocese. Some reform in the matter of canonical examinations is urgently needed, and provincial examining chaplains would seem to meet that need. Such a system might also bring about a closer correlation between the seminaries and examining chaplains, which is greatly to be desired.

The final proposition that I would submit for your consideration is, by far, the most radical of all.

Anyone who has attended any of the more recent General Conventions could not but be impressed with the size and unwieldiness of the House of Deputies. The present membership of that House is now six hundred and twelve. This number is bound constantly to increase as dioceses are divided, and missionary districts are erected into dioseses. It is becoming exceedingly difficult to obtain a hall large enough to accommodate the House of Deputies, and difficult for the deputies who are seated in the rear of the hall to hear the proceedings of the House. Few are the speakers who are not continually greeted with cries of "louder" from men in the rear. All this causes delay and confusion, and the wonder is that the House is able, under the circumstances, to accomplish as much as it does. That the House of Deputies is too large will, I think, be universally admitted, but how to reduce its numbers is the question. The constitution provides that the Convention may, by canon, reduce the membership from the diocese from four to not less than two in each order. A canon was introduced in the Convention at Richmond in 1907 by the late Dr. Huntington, reducing the number of deputies in each order from a diocese from four to three, but it met with defeat. At the last Convention an attempt was made to amend the constitution so as to provide for proportionate representation, but the proposed amendment was also overwhelmingly defeated, and I doubt if anyone will have the temerity to repeat the experiment. Certainly those of us who have had the steam roller pass over us will not attempt it. There seems no prospect of relief from the Convention itself by any reduction in the number of deputies from a diocese. The only way in which the desired relief can be obtained, as it seems to me, is for the House of Deputies to consist of deputies from the provinces instead of from the dioceses as at present. This method of representation would seem to be logical. Each parish has its deputies to the diocesan convention. Each diocese has its deputies to the provincial synod, and each province would have its deputies to the General Convention. But the time is not yet ripe for this method of representation. The provinces must first be given more and more power, and prove their worth in the exercise of these increased powers.

Again I repeat, if the provincial system is to live and grow, if it is to be of any practical use to the Church, then is it absolutely necessary that the powers granted to the provincial synods be greatly increased. The General Convention must have relief, and that relief can come only through a larger use of the provincial synods.

I believe that the General Convention stands ready to give increased powers to the provinces just as soon as the provinces make known to the Convention the powers they desire to have granted to them, especially if all or a majority of the provinces agree upon the definite powers desired.

Therefore I would strongly urge the several provincial synods to memorialize the General Convention in the matter, clearly and concisely stating the precise powers they desire to have granted them.

In these days new problems, new opportunities, are constantly arising. These problems often require immediate solution. These opportunities must be seized at once, or they pass by never to return. The General Convention, meeting but once in three years, cannot solve, cannot seize them in time, and the Church suffers the penalty.

But the provincial synod, meeting every year, if given large powers of initiative and legislation, can solve those problems, can grasp those opportunities at the psychological moment. Therefore, I urge the largest possible grant of powers to the provincial synods, in orders that they may adequately meet the needs of the Church of today.

Church Usage

By PASTOR IN URBE

BY the Editor's request I am writing a series of short articles for THE CHURCHMAN, giving certain counsels upon the usages of the Church. I shall write somewhat dogmatically, telling frankly what my own experience, linked with reverence for sound customs, has assured me to be, if not the best way, at least the best way I know. A good many people seek advice in such matters; and all of us are glad to discover "a more excellent way" if it can be found.

I. Fundamental Principles

When one enters a Church, all unnecessary conversation should cease. Before and after a service there may be the briefest greeting; anything more than that is distracting. A man or a woman, especially after the service, has the right of going from the Church with the mind still intent upon the meaning of the service. We can talk in the House of God as friends, and the warmth of fellowship can be evident, without talking with one another. The hum of whispered conversation before a wedding is sometimes appalling: two or three ill-bred persons can make a whole congregation seem to be both vulgar and irreverent. Without judging others, we may make stern rules for ourselves.

The silent prayer upon entering the Church is important. It ought to be said, kneeling, before any service: before weddings and funerals, as well as before Morning and Evening Prayer and the Holy Communion. The prayer will best be a prayer in one's own words for the people and for the causes which are nearest one's heart. Any silent spaces in the service are valuable. When the formal silent prayer is finished and we sit quietly in the pews, we may wait like the good Quakers to hear the Spirit speak to us. Therefore there should be no casting about of the eyes.

Because the prayer in silence is important, only the utmost necessity should allow one to be late to a service. It is worse to be late at church than to be a late guest at a dinner table. Grave necessity may excuse one in both cases; but a trivial excuse verges upon insult in the one case, irreverence in the other. Where distances are great and streets crowded, it is impossible always to calculate the time needed to reach the church in season. But one can try very hard to be in one's place, to have the preparation of quiet, and to avoid disturbing one's neighbors by a tardy entrance.

As kneeling is the ordinary attitude for prayer, and as sitting is the ordinary attitude for listening, so we stand to express the ready joy of our praise. Whether we join the choristers in the hymn or are silent while the choristers sing Te Deum, we ought to be lifting our hearts in praise in both instances. The great beauty of the music in which we do not share with our lips may kindle the more praise in our hearts. Therefore it is fitting that in all canticles and hymns the congregation should rise immediatly when the choristers stand, though there be a brief space filled with organ music before the first note is sung. If one is used to this reverent custom, and chances upon a congregation which rises reluctantly as the first line is being sung, there is a sense of dreariness, lack of spontaneity, and lack of co-operation. Moreover the first line of Nunc Dimittis sung by a radiant boy's voice, has often been quite lost through the rustling and scuffling of a drowsy congregation, getting at last to its feet. For the same reason the congregation should stand at the beginning of the processional hymn, though the choristers have not yet entered the church. If it is our rule to stand to express praise, we should stand when the notes of the organ give us warning that the praise is to begin. The stranger should have the impression that there is a church full of people alert and eager to worship with body, mind, and soul. There is joy in promptness. Reverence does not consist in elaborate outward expression. It may or may not so clothe itself. But the essential quality of reverence is deeper, and makes itself known in such simple and natural ways as these I have tried to indicate, the seemly and instinctive expression of a fine and reverent nature.

A Snap-shot from Russia

By THE REV. JESSE HALSEY

MOSCOW, December 6.—On the spot where the late (and we suppose the last) Czar of all the Russias crowned himself; where many of his predecessors had stood on similar occasions; with the thirty bells of "Ivan Veliky" chiming out on the frosty, sunrise air; with the boom of the sixty-ton "ascension" bell lending diapason to the majestic choral of the choirs; in the presence of saints and angels, frescoed from floor to dome; before the iconastas studded with its profusion of precious stones; under the rough scaffolding, hiding the cruel scars of bombardment from the latest "revolution"; in the many-shadowed light flung down from the hundred tapered candelabrum (made from French silver picked up by the Cossacks after Napoleon's retreat); here in the Uspensky Sabor (Cathedral of the Assumption) on the Kremlin hill in the holy city of Moscow, the new Patriarch of the Græco-Russian Church was set apart to his high office.

At the completion of the ceremony, surrounded by his clergy, preceded by the holy icons, and followed by the crowd, he made a circuit of the Kremlin courtyard, dispensing his blessing and sprinkling holy water upon the bystanders, from a vessel used by many of his ancient predecessors.

In 1721 Peter the Great suppressed the patriarchate and placed the mitre upon his own head. In its place he instituted the Holy Synod which, until the revolution of last March, was the ruling body in the Russian Church. The Metropolites of Kief, Moscow and Petrograd, and the Exarch of Georgia were ex officio members. In addition the Czar "nominated" eight clergymen, six of them bishops and the other two, ordinarily, his private chaplains. The convener of the Synod, called the procurator, was always a layman, and appointed by the Czar. He held a portfolio as a minister of State, and directed the schools and seminaries of the Church. These, with other powers, made him the practical dictator in all ecclesiastical policies. The Czar might dismiss any member of the Synod, at will, and at its convocation each member took the following oath: "I acknowledge him (the Czar) to be the supreme judge in this spiritual assembly."

With the fall of the old regime the Church was free to elect its own head, and for the past months, throughout the country, delegates have been selected to choose candidates for the office of patriarch. At length, these delegates, two hundred in number, selected three men as qualified by character and training to fill the position. On Sunday, November 18, in accord with Apostolic usage (Acts 1:26) lots were cast "and the lot fell upon" Tichon, Metropolitan of Moscow. On December 4 he was inducted into office.

It would require Dean Stanley's knowledge and insight rightly to appreciate and interpret the symbolism of the majestic pageant, but even upon the untutored mind it made a strong impression. At sunrise the procession emerged from the Synod and proceeded to the cathedral, where the candidate was conducted to a raised dais near the east end. Here, surrounded by the abbots of the great monasteries, arrayed in their purple robes, the new Primate received the homage of his bishops. One by one, "glorious in their apparel", copes rigid with gold, jewel bedight mitres, they came, bowed low and kissed the Patriarch's hand, yielding allegiance in feudal fashion.

The Eucharist was celebrated with all the gorgeous pomp of the Greek ritual; then Anastasius, Archbishop of Kishinef, delivered the sermon, outlining the duties of the holy office and urging the people to uphold the hands of the "Holy Father" during these troublous times.

The Patriarch was then led out before the altar by the two unsuccessful candidates and Vladimar, the senior Metropolitan, charged him with the duties of his office and presented him, as a symbol of his authority, with the staff of "Peter the Wonderworker". Recognizing the weight of the responsibility placed upon him, and asking for the prayers of the people, he would undertake to bear "this cross of responsibility even as Christ bore his", the Patriarch said. Several of the higher clergy then came forward and presented him with valuable historical memorials of former patriarchs of the Church, and as the mitre of Nikon, appropriated by Peter two hundred years ago, sparkling with diamonds and pearls and surmounted by a jeweled cross, was placed upon his head by Vladimar, the choirs broke out in a glad Te Deum, in which the congregation heartily joined. Each worshiper had provided himself with a candle when entering and at this point in the service these thousand tapers were lighted while the Primate made his way to his throne—once that of Czar Alexis Michalovitch—and from there blessed the people. In deep, resonant tones the officiating deacon proclaimed—"Long live our Holy Father, Tichon, Patriarch of Moscow and all Russia," and with all still singing, the clergy filed out of the cathedral.

The Russian service is always impressive, especially the music, as the well-trained choirs are seconded by the congregation in the chants, which everyone seems to know. There is no instrumental accompaniment, but the unison singing of one choir, with studied pauses that leave the echoes reverberating through the recesses of the church, is taken up by a hidden choir in another part, and in his turn the priest answers back—one continuous antiphonal. This particular service "for the installation of a Patriarch" had not been heard for two centuries, but so careful was the preparation that no pauses nor discords were apparent from one end to the other.

The new Patriarch is just past sixty, of medium stature, somewhat bald, but with an ample fringe of long, brown hair. A beard of modest proportions, quite white, frames a mouth that pictures gentleness rather than decision. He is reported as interested in church affairs solely, is not a politician and has hopes of making the Church a contributing factor in restoring stability to Russia in the present crisis.

The new Synod has just convened—December 8—and consists of the Patriarch and six members, elected for two-year terms. Thus is the spirit of democracy working in the Russian Church; it remains to be seen whether the Church, until so recently a State institution, can adjust itself to an environment permeated by extreme democratic ideals.

The Spirit of Anti-Christ

crushed on the battlefield and perhaps they are wrong. If the German people once see that they are not strong enough even materially to stand out against the outraged moral consciousness of mankind they may cease to put faith in their blood-god. There must be sane elements somewhere in Germany though we hear so little of them; it cannot be that seventy million educated people can sincerely believe that sentiments like these are preferable to those, say, of President Wilson; and perhaps the day is nearer than many suppose when they will rise in their strength and make an end of the whole brutal system that holds them in thrall. A revolution in Germany would bring peace within twenty-four hours; there would not be another blow struck; by universal consent we should offer the most generous terms to a German republic or federation of free popularly governed states, and should feel ourselves perfectly safe in so doing.

But whether this end to the European holocaust comes to pass or not, we have one sure and certain hope: it is absolutely inconceivable that human nature can forever tolerate the conception of its destinies as set forth in this book. As the Bishop of Oxford said earlier in the War, Germany has one ideal of human relations, and God revealed in Christ has another. One is of hell and the other of heaven, and we know therefore which will prevail, be it soon or late.

DEAN FOSBROKE URGES A BROADER CURRICULUM

Speaks at Annual Meeting of G. T. S. Alumni

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—The second annual reunion and luncheon of the Connecticut Alumni of the General Theological Seminary was held at the Hotel Taft, January 31. There was a large attendance.

The invited speaker, the Dean of the Seminary, Dr. Fosbroke, gave an intimate and interesting account of certain phases of seminary life. He spoke of the need for a broader curriculum with greater opportunity for students to elect lines of work for which they show special qualifications. He also emphasized the fact that the common life the men lead one with another constitutes no small part of their preparation for the ministry, and expressed the hope that there might be developed in the student body a true social consciousness making itself felt for good in the solution of student problems. The Dean won the hearts of all by his sympathetic interest, his use of every opportunity to meet and know the men.

At the business meeting which followed it was decided to continue the Day of Devotion and Reunion at Kent School in September. The election resulted as follows: President, the Rev. Philip C. Pearson; vice-presidents, the Rev. Messrs. A. F. Lewis, R. E. Marshall, G. H. Smith, L. R. Sheffield, H. B. Phelps and C. S. M. Stewart, one representing each archdeaconry; secretary-treasurer, the Rev. Frank S. Morehouse; executive committee, the Rev. W. O. Baker, the Rev. L. I. Belden and the Rev. Prof. Hedrick, with the president and secretary-treasurer.

CLERGYMAN'S SON DIES EN ROUTE TO FRANCE

Elmer Van Fleet University Honor Man and Rhodes Scholarship Winner

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—The Rev. J. B. Van Fleet, rector of St. Stephen's church, received a message from the War Department on Saturday, February 2, that his son Elmer had died of scarlet fever on shipboard en route to France.

Young Van Fleet graduated with highest honors from the University of Cincinnati last June. He was also awarded the Rhodes Scholarship from Ohio. On graduation he at once offered himself in the Officers' Reserve Corps but was not accepted on account of his youth. He then enlisted in the signal service corps and spent last Summer in preparation. In October he was called to Camp Sherman, Company C, Field Signal Battalion. He soon received his warrant as a non-commissioned officer and was appointed clerk in an ammunition train. Later he was transferred to Seventeenth Casualty Company and sailed for France the first of the year. Van Fleet was considered one of the brightest students ever graduated from his university. He was also a leader in athletics and was a power for good on the moral and religious lives of those brought into contact with him.

At Camp Sherman he was the right-hand man of the then voluntary chaplain, the Rev. F. L. Flinchbaugh, and usually brought to the chapel a dozen men for each service. At home in his father's parish he exerted the same influence.

CONSIDER RECONSTRUCTION PROBLEM AT CONFERENCE

Churches Discuss Responsibility and Methods for After-the-War

A preliminary conference on "After-the-War Problems" was held at Atlantic City, January 29-31, under the auspices of the Federal Council of the Church of Christ in America. Among the subjects considered were reconstruction of the devastated districts of Europe and relief of the local population now and after the declaration of peace; problems of child welfare, defectives and dependents, etc.; labor problems, including provision of employment for demobilized soldiers under proper conditions; economic reconstruction, involving the question of international control of raw materials, colonial possessions, etc.; financial problems, dealing with war debts and the cost of reconstruction, as above indicated; the substitution of some scheme of economic peace for economic warfare; and, lastly, propaganda by the Church along the above lines in the form of lectures, study courses, literature, and oral propaganda in general. The conference particularly considered in connection with the above topics these three questions: What are the essential principles that Christians ought to support? What are the definite practicable methods that should be advocated? Where shall the Church function?

The Episcopal Church was represented through the Joint Commission on Social Service by its executive secretary, the Rev. F. M. Crouch.

Holy Apostles' Fiftieth Anniversary

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA. — The fiftieth anniversary of the Church of the Holy Apostles was observed week before last. Monday evening was kept as "Historical Evening" in the Sunday school building. The music sung at this service was the same that was used on January 26, 1868, at the opening of the parish. George W. Jacobs, accounting warden, and Professor Wm. A. Casner, vestryman, delivered brief addresses on the history of the parish. A souvenir book, well illustrated, has been published for the anniversary. Services were held in the three chapels of the parish on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings. On Friday there was a reception by the clergy and vestrymen of the parish to the members of the congregation. The crowning service of the anniversary was held on Sunday evening, January 27, when Bishop Stearly, a former rector, preached. The Rev. George Herbert Toop, D.D., is rector of the parish.

ARCHBISHOP'S VISIT HERE KEPT SECRET IN ENGLAND

Learned of American Plans Through Our Papers

By James Cairns

LONDON.—I had for once the experience of reading a bit of "news of the English Church" in the columns of THE CHURCHMAN. I wondered if I had made what reporters call a "bad miss". But it was not so. The secret had been well kept, and it is only now announced in the daily and Church press that the Archbishop of York will leave England very soon on a visit to your country. Dr. Lang is one of the very small number of bishops who have really a following. His career has been an interesting one. Like the other Archbishop, he is of Scottish birth. His father was a distinguished minister of the Scottish Established Church, who when he died had attained the position of principal of Aberdeen University. Cosmo Gordon Lang is still remembered for his brilliant career at his first university, that of Glasgow. Thence he proceeded to Oxford, with not the slightest thought of taking Holy Orders. Indeed, his course was set towards what would have been a position of the highest eminence at the bar. Some day his biographer will describe the sudden and overwhelming resolution, which resulted in the sending of a telegram on the very day on which he was to be called to the bar. He turned his back on the law, and in due course his friends heard to their amazement that he was working as a curate in the slums of Leeds. But Oxford soon claimed him, and he became vicar of the University Church of St. Mary. Later, he plunged into more active parochial work at the great parish of Portsea, where with a large staff of ten loyal curates he made a great mark on the churches and civic life of Portsmouth. He was clearly in the line for the episcopate—his predecessor had gone as bishop to Newcastle—but his friends thought that he scarcely got his deserts when he was finally named to succeed Dr. Ingram, as bishop suffragan of Stepney. Yet it suited him well; for he has always loved to be among the workers. He has shown the same disposition since his elevation to the Archbishopric of York. The Church of England Men's Society owes the greater part of its effectiveness to his inspiration and leadership.

Churches Ordered Closed

ENDICOTT, NEW YORK.—The fuel administrator of this village has ordered that all the churches be closed indefinitely. The school house has been placed at the disposal of the various religious bodies. The rector has an early celebration of the Holy Communion in one of the rooms. A separate room has been assigned for the use of each of the Sunday schools and a Union Service is being held morning and evening for all the religious bodies together. Bishop Fiske was the preacher.

TWO CLERGYMEN ORGANIZE PERMANENT RELIEF WORK

Grows Out of Effective Handling of Coal Shortage Situation

LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY.—Through the untiring labors of the Rev. Dr. Richard Wilkinson, rector of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, and the wise counsel of Dean R. K. Massie, the needy of Lexington were given seasonable relief during the recent cold spell, when coal was scarce and work stopped. Groceries and provisions were supplied, and "200 tons of coal were distributed in suitable portions to fireless people without one cent of cost to them, and without asking any questions whatever, because workers knew these homes 'had need of it'".

So greatly did this movement meet the emergency that permanency has been given it through the formation of the "Emergency Committee of the Associated Charities of Lexington", with Major E. B. Ellis, president; Mr. John G. Stoll, treasurer, and the Rev. Richard Wilkinson, general director. Sub-committees will be set to work districting the city and gathering necessary information, whereby distribution may be made with the least possible loss of time. The committee will co-operatively relate itself to the work of the Associated Charities of the city.

The work sprung out of the opening of the Court House "which Judge Bullock had ordered on leaving his office Saturday afternoon to afford a lodging place for any who desired to avail themselves of such shelter through the promised cold of that night—for hundreds had no coal in their homes". Dr. Wilkinson, realizing that this was not going far enough, since no coal for heat meant no fire for cooking, and learning that no provision had been made for food, set to work to provide food for the needy and those gathered in the court house. Simultaneously, but without the knowledge of what Dr. Wilkinson was doing, Dean Massie was organizing members of the cathedral congregation for similar relief work at the Parish House. When this became known Dr. Wilkinson and Dean Massie united forces with the court house as centre. Food was provided for Sunday, and by Monday the body of workers had greatly increased. The city aided by giving to the workers right of way to fill orders for coal to shivering people. Two schools were opened as a sort of permanent restaurant where the hungry were fed, as was being done at the court house.

RECTOR IS PREACHER AT SALVATION ARMY REVIVAL

Union Services Create Better Feeling Toward Episcopal Church

GREENVILLE, OHIO.—St. Paul's has taken an active part in fuel conservation. The rector was instrumental in having most of the Protestant churches in the city close their doors Sunday nights and all join in a union service which has been held at the various churches in turn. Last Sunday night this service was held in the Episcopal church, when the rector, the Rev. George Peckonby, was in charge. By permission of Bishop Reese the pulpit was occupied by the pastor of the Baptist church, while the pastor of the United Brethren church read the Lessons. A large congregation was in attendance, representing most of the churches in the city. All of these joined in the singing of old familiar hymns and it is thought that a better feeling was created, and that the Church is better understood throughout the community.

The rector of this church preached the sermon at the opening union service and has since taken part in most of the services in other churches, even to preaching at a Salvation Army revival meeting.

DESTITUTE OF FRANCE ARE IN NEED OF CLOTHES

Le Cercle Rochambeau Will Forward Any You Send

NEW YORK CITY.—Viviani says we must clothe France. The War Relief Committee of Le Cercle Rochambeau asks for garments, worn or new. These garments will be sent through the American Fund for French Wounded direct to France. The following is part of letter received from the Duchesse d'Uzès, president of the Lyceum Club of Paris: "Croix Rouge Francaise.

"With what joy have I received your letter, madame, and how I thank you for your kindness. All our unfortunate outcasts have returned absolutely destitute. Children come to us without underclothing, without shoes. We cannot manage to clothe them all—even simply."

We trust that everyone reading this heartrending appeal will send us something. The garments are going, in many instances, to people who are almost naked. Coal is $75 a ton in France. Can you imagine what the people will do if they have not warm clothing? Our Nation is learning in a wonderful way the meaning of service and of sacrifice, and we believe that this appeal, which comes from the personal experience of a Frenchwoman, will be responded to by everyone who reads it. Send garments to Mrs. John R. MacArthur, 346 West Eighty-fourth Street.

GIFTS AND MEMORIALS

Recently at Grace church, Hartford, Connecticut, a new altar was dedicated in memory of the Rev. John Humphrey Barbour, D.D., who for sixteen years was in charge of the church, then Grace chapel of Trinity parish, as layman, deacon and priest. The sermon was preached by Dr. Barbour's life-long friend, the Rev. Lucius Waterman, D.D., of Hanover, New Hampshire, and the celebrant was his son, the Rev. Paul H. Barbour of Christ church, Hartford, Dr. Waterman and the rector, the Rev. F. J. K. Alexander, assisting. The altar was designed by Bertram G. Goodhue, and follows old English models.

From the time that he left Grace chapel in 1889 until his death in 1900 Dr. Barbour was Professor of Greek and the Interpretation of the New Testament at Berkeley Divinity School. The altar was the gift of members of his family.

THE MASTER OF TRINITY, CAMBRIDGE, ENGLAND, DIES

Dr. H. M. Butler Was Patriarchal Figure in English Life

CAMBRIDGE, ENGLAND.—With the death, at Cambridge, in his eighty-fifth year, of the Rev. Dr. Henry Montagu Butler, master of Trinity, a fortnight ago in England, passes away the most patriarchal figure in English academic life, and a most distinguished scholar in a family remarkable for its scholarship. He was born in Gayton rectory, Northamptonshire, in July, 1833, his father, George Butler, who was headmaster of Harrow from 1805 to 1829, held the rectory at Gayton with his headmastership, and subsequently with the deanery of Peterborough till his death in 1853. He went to Harrow, and thence to Trinity, where as a freshman in 1852 he won the Bell scholarship. He was, perhaps, a student of men rather than books. Tennyson and Browning alike made him their intimate, and when they died no one could discourse of them more elegantly.

When he was only twenty-six and a layman he was chosen headmaster of Harrow in succession to Dr. Vaughan in 1859. His six and twenty years at Harrow were a time of great expansion. They brought him into contact with remarkable men.

In 1885 he accepted the deanery of Gloucester. It was not the only honor he had received. He was appointed in 1871 Commendatore della Corona d'Italia, and was chaplain to Queen Victoria from 1875 till he became a dean. Between 1879 and 1883 he served as examining chaplain to Archbishop Tait and Archbishop Benson, and he had already received a prebendal stall in St. Paul's Cathedral. Thompson, the scholarly and almost scornfully exclusive Master of Trinity, died in 1886, and Lord Salisbury recommended Butler to the Crown as his successor.

No choice could have involved a greater change at the chief college in the University or in the administration of one of the most important posts in royal patronage. The Lodge at Trinity seemed suddenly thrown open and its beauties and art treasures revealed to all the world. Any good cause found the Master ready to give it a welcome, and undergraduates were entertained as readily as dons. The Master of Trinity, as such, has plenty of opportunity for public speaking, and Butler seldom touched a subject without adorning it in singularly felicitous language. His gifts as a preacher were not lost; no great occasion and no notable death passed without a short and elegant comment from the Master.

Grand Rapids Lenten Preachers

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.—The United Lenten Services are to be held in Grace church this year. The speakers will be as follows: Ash Wednesday, the Rev. Howard R. White, South Bend, Indiana; February 20, the Rev. Francis R. Godolphin, Oak Park, Illinois; February 27, the Very Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell, Fond du Lac, Wisconsin; March 6, the Rev. R. H. Chalmers, Tiffin, Ohio; March 13, the Rev. Dr. George Gunnell, D.D., Toledo, Ohio; March 20, the Rev. W. H. Poole, Jackson, Michigan; March 27, the Rev. Walter F. Tunks, Muskegon, Michigan.

LENTEN SELF-DISCIPLINE URGED BY MISS SCUDDER

Social Service Commission Issues Her Appeal to the Church

Through the Joint Commission on Social Service Professor Vida D. Scudder, of Wellesley College, has issued "A Lenten Suggestion" to church people in which she says:

"In face of the misery of a starving world, only a coarse and pagan obtuseness can claim more physical comfort than is needed to keep one fit for service. Each portion of rich food eaten at a midnight restaurant or at home might have fed a hungry baby for a day. As Ruskin said, 'The cruelest man living could not sit at his feast unless he sat blindfolded'; today the bandage has been torn from our eyes.

"To maintain personal expenditure at the same level as before the War, or carelessly to indulge in ephemeral and expensive pleasures, is not only to scout our patriotism; it is to deny our discipleship to Him Who prepared for His ministry by fasting forty days. Dare we claim that our spiritual welfare can dispense with what He found helpful?

"Discrimination is, of course, in order. Temporary distress will be caused by too rapid a suspension of trades which cater to the pleasures of wealth; yet with a little thought it is possible to find ways of employing people to the benefit of others rather than of oneself. Two principles of priority might well be observed: that we be slowest to withdraw patronage from trades which conserve not only the physical life but the mental and spiritual health and growth of producers as well as consumers; and that in what expenditure we allow ourselves we select commodities of permanent value to the higher interests of the community.

"Profound industrial readjustments lie inevitably ahead. The Christian conscience has a unique opportunity to regulate the consumption of life's necessities by Christian people on lines not automatic but reasonable and humane. Carefully planned personal self-control is the first step. Shall not such planning be an integral part, this year, of Lenten discipline?"

DR. MANNING TAKES HIKE WITH SECOND BATTALION

Finishes March Through Snow, But Some Fall Out

New York City.—Dr. Manning writes from Camp Upton to The Trinity Record:

"Yesterday afternoon I went with our Second Battalion on a 'hike'. The marching was heavy, with several inches of snow on the ground and more falling, and the Major who led the column is famous for the pace that he makes. It was genuine exercise, and as we marched through the open country, with snow-covered stumps and holes and ice patches, the scene might have been anywhere in France or Flanders. A few of the men had to fall out on the way, but practically all came through in good style, and swung back through the camp to our headquarters singing 'We're Going Over' with great spirit. It is surprising to see how a march of that sort stimulates the spirit of good comradeship.

"Every day in the camp is full of interest and full of work, and almost every hour brings some unexpected incident or new experience. The room next to my sleeping quarters, from which I am separated only by a partition of thin boards, has been used within a few hours for a trial by Court Martial, for a drill in the use of gas masks, for a spirited boxing contest, for a French class for non-commissioned officers and for pastoral interviews between the chaplains and some of the men. For the past few Sundays the attendance at the services has shown a surprising increase, due in large part to the fact that a much smaller number of men heretofore have been given leave of absence. Last Sunday the number of soldiers at the early celebration of the Holy Communion compelled us to move out of the smaller room in which we have been holding this service into the big hall, and this in spite of the fact that it was a bitterly cold morning, with one of our characteristic winds blowing and that the Y. M. C. A. Hut is far from being well heated at that early hour.

CHURCH BUILDING FUND COMMISSION HAS MEETING

Permanent Fund Has Now Reached Sum of $658,908

New York City.—The American Church Building Fund Commission held its annual meeting recently at the Church Missions House. The following officers were elected: President, the Rt. Rev. Charles Sumner Burch, D.D.; vice-president, the Rev. Henry Anstice, D.D.; secretary, the Rev. William W. Bellinger, D.D.; treasurer, George Gordon King; assistant treasurer, E. Walter Roberts; corresponding secretary, the Rev. Charles L. Pardee, D.D.

The reports for the year showed seventeen loans granted, amounting to $56,000; sixty-four gifts, amounting to $27,320; and twelve grants, amounting to $8,150. In addition to these payments it was shown that ten loans, amounting to $33,050; twelve gifts, amounting to $4,550, and thirteen grants, amounting to $10,150, had been approved for payment when the necessary papers were ready. Fifty-seven dioceses and districts have been aided during the year, and the list of jurisdictions to which the Commission has been of help at some time in its history now numbers ninety-six.

The report of the treasurer showed that the Permanent Fund had reached the sum of $658,908.46.

During the year legislation looking toward the enlargement of the scope of the Commission's work and a wider liberalization in methods, has been enacted and further enlargement is pending final action by the Supreme Court of the State of New York.

Gifts to Hospital

Duluth, Minnesota.—Last year St. Paul's congregation gave well on to $80,000 and has much still to do for itself and in building up St. Luke's Hospital, one of its proteges. This is the twenty-fifth year of the present rectorship and the payment in full of the large debt seems like a miracle in these strenuous times. The Hon. Thomas S. Wood was the chairman of the Committee of Arrangements and he read the article of donation on the part of the congregation. He is the vice-chancellor of the diocese.

DR. BIRCKHEAD FINDS WEST NEEDS TO BE AROUSED

Country People Do Not Understand War's Grimness

Baltimore, Maryland.—It is with a sense of the splendidly virile qualities which the United States has to throw into the war for civilization, once those qualities are in full operation, that he has just returned from a trip to the West, says the Rev. Dr. Hugh Birckhead, but also with a feeling that the West has not yet understood the grimness of the struggle.

Dr. Birckhead, whose letters from the Western Front telling of visits he made to men in the trenches, of battles he witnessed and of air raids he saw in London, were published in the Sun recently, spent the last half of January visiting Chicago, Detroit and Cleveland, in each of which places he spoke several times of his experiences abroad.

"The people in the country districts in the West need to be made to understand the terrible grimness of the thing", said Dr. Birckhead. "Their feeling is that it has been decided that now that our boys are over there it will be ended soon. They are not as close to it as we are. But they have a splendid spirit.

"On the trains, too, one sees the splendid spirit of America, deeply interested in the war, in the talk one hears in the smoking compartments and in the dining cars. I traveled in uniform. When one is in uniform that makes every man you meet feel that he is at liberty to speak to you and ask you any question he wants, makes him feel that you belong to him. I sat down in a dining car one morning and a man across the car whom I had never seen called to me, 'Come over here, lad; I'll buy your breakfast for you'. He was eager for information about the war, was eager to help.

"But what is needed is men to make the people understand that it isn't all settled because our boys are there. Secretary Baker says that we shall soon have 500,000 men in France. But the people do not realize, for instance, that in the battle of the Somme, a battle which lasted three months, the French lost 1,500,000.

March 25-28—The Right Rev. William A. Guerry, D.D., bishop of the diocese of South Carolina.

CANAL ZONE CHURCH OBEYS GEORGE V PROCLAMATION

Two Thousand Gather Inside and Outside of St. Paul's, Ancon

ANCON, CANAL ZONE.—The largest audience ever gathered in St. Paul's church, Panama, was recorded on a recent Sunday when the spacious edifice was crowded beyond its capacity, and there were as many persons on the outside of the church building.

The service was one of prayer and thanksgiving, arranged by the rector, in accordance with the proclamation of King George V of England.

Diplomatic representatives of the United States, France and Panama with His Britannic Majesty's Minister's representatives were seated in the front pews. Several visitors from Ancon were also present.

Two thousand voices joined with the choir in singing the processional hymn, "Onward, Christian soldiers".

At regular distances four acolytes carrying the flags of Panama, France, the United States and Great Britain respectively, were interspersed among the choir.

Sir Claude Mallet, His Britannic Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Panama and Costa Rica sent a message by his representative, Hon. W. McAdam, which was read along with the proclamation of the King.

The address of the rector, the Rev. H. R. Carson, was altogether appropriate. In a word he said that the progress of the war has witnessed the cementing of international ties between England and her allies and that he was proud of the fact that this service proclaimed by King George V found observance here in Panama.

During the service the American Battle Hymn of the Republic, the French Marseillaise, the Panamanian El Himmo Nacional de Panama were sung.

HOW COLORED SOLDIERS DO THEIR BIT IN FRANCE

Have Well-Deserved Joy at Christmas Celebration

By the Rev. LeRoy Ferguson

SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE.—Under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. the colored soldiers here had a real American Merry Christmas. In the centre of the spacious "hut", decorated and illuminated, stood, with inviting branches filled with souvenirs, their Christmas tree!

The men who gathered for the occasion in great numbers responded heartily to the Christmas spirit everywhere within the hut so generously made manifest. Many who expressed their appreciation said that the tree not only brought back to them the thoughts of the Nativity season, but also their far-off American homes. The program rendered also contributed to the joy of the occasion, during which their voices rose in full melody, singing the old carols, popular songs and those familiar plantation refrains which they so well know how to sing.

When the souvenirs, donated by American friends through the Y. M. C. A., were distributed the hut rang with cheers.

Their Christmas was further made happy by the dinner served in the Army mess halls. It was a typical American dinner. The colored soldier is proving his usefulness and worth here for the cause of America and victory. Whether it is unloading the huge cargoes that feed and supply the Army, digging roads or giving up his life on the firing lines, he seems to face the call with rugged cheerfulness. As he moves forward to the task it is great satisfaction one gets by doing all that is possible to make his hours of leisure profitable as well as entertaining.

I have met officials of the Church here on duty, Bishops McCormick, Israel and Brent, who have promised aid and encouragement in our work among the colored soldiers. I am glad that the Church is present and able to give leadership in solving the stupendous problems here facing us. I have also met many clergymen, close up to the perilous scenes. May our friends in America remember that the colored soldier is doing his bit "somewhere in France".

G. F. S. CONDUCTS INQUIRY IN WESTCHESTER COUNTY

Patriotic Leagues Established There by War Service Committee

NEW YORK CITY.—Early in November the president and the chairman of the War Service Committee of the diocese of New York sent into Westchester County to investigate protective work for girls in that county. A conference with the Y. W. C. A. was held and it was decided to divide the work, the Y. W. C. A. to take charge of the work through the centre of the county and the G. F. S. to work in the towns along the shore where there are G. F. S. branches. In four towns representative women were interviewed personally and a community committee formed for protective work among girls. The establishing of the girls' Patriotic Service Leagues is under way at present.

On January 2, the G. F. S. sent a worker into New Rochelle to organize the girls' work of the War Camp Community Service. The work in New Rochelle will be directed by an advisory board composed of five women representing the various interests of the town. The girls' organization will be called the Girls' Patriotic Service League and will be formed along the lines of the G. F. S. Small units throughout the community with volunteer leaders and a headquarters where information in connection with all girls' work can be had. This League will offer every girl in the community an opportunity to give patriotic service as well as promote the highest ideals of womanhood.

BISHOP ISRAEL WRITES OF SOAP BOX HUT TALKS

Finds Inspiration in Splendid Spirit of Our Boys

ERIE, PENNSYLVANIA.—In a letter addressed to his "fellow Rotarians" and written from France Bishop Israel says:

"I have had the privilege of meeting with many thousands of our soldiers, addressing crowds in the Y. M. C. A. huts afternoons and nights and then meeting them personally afterwards. To talk from a soap box, table or chair in a dingily lighted, smoke pervaded, damp, cold hut to hundreds of men, who with eager upturned faces are looking to you for encouragement and cheer is most inspiring. And after the address to hear the cheers for both country and the cause for which we fight and to be overwhelmed with great strong handshakes of those crowding to meet you and to listen to the quiet word which indicates determination to be strong for the right and hear many questions about home and relatives in other parts of the Army, fills me with gratitude that it has been made possible for me to be here. On the other hand my heart sinks with sadness as looking into those strong young faces I realize that thousands will never return to home and loved ones and that many spared to return will, like the hundreds of English and French to be seen everywhere, be maimed and marred for life. Upon this thought it does not do to dwell. I fear you in America cannot realize how it broods and hovers over the countries at war. The freedom of nations and the liberty of the individual for which we fight, however, is God's cause, and we keep this to the front, whether in camp or city, and thus all sacrifice and suffering appear small.

BOARD OF MISSIONS HOLDS REGULAR MEETING

Eastern Oklahoma Asks for Increase of Its Appropriation

NEW YORK CITY.—Twenty-five members were present at the regular meeting of the Board of Missions held February 6.

The Bishop of Kansas appeared before the Board with a carefully prepared plan for the better development of the work in his diocese. It involved an additional appropriation of $1,540 per annum, which was granted.

A communication was received from the Synod of the Province of Sewanee in reference to the better development of the mountain work here. The Board adopted a resolution assuring the Province that it will do everything possible to strengthen the Church's work among the mountain people of the South and arranged for a deputation to visit the dioceses and districts in the Province of Sewanee having such work.

In the absence of a Provincial Secretary in the Province of the Pacific, the Bishop of Idaho very generously offered his services in any way in which he could be used. The Board accepted his offer with great appreciation, hoping that he would be able to accept any invitations to speak within the Province in this connection.

A communication from the District of Eastern Oklahoma was received asking for an increase in their apportionment from $1,543 to $1,750. The Board expressed great appreciation of this generous act.

Mr. George Wharton Pepper, because of the great pressure of other matters, felt obliged to present his resignation both from the Board and Executive Committee. The Board recognized the many calls upon his valuable time, and felt it necessary to relieve him from his duties on the Executive Committee, but unanimously requested him, if possible, to reconsider his resignation from the Board. Mr. William Fellowes Morgan was elected a member of the Board to succeed Mr. Henry Lewis Morris, who died recently, and was also elected to the Executive Committee to succeed Mr. Pepper.

In the absence of the President the Board felt that there should be someone to act in an executive capacity representing the Board. Mr. John W. Wood, Foreign Secretary, was unanimously requested by the Board to act in this capacity. The Secretary for Latin America announced that a magazine in Spanish was being published in New York to supply the needs of the Latin American countries. The Board expressed its appreciation of the new venture.

Word was received through the Presiding Bishop of the illness of the Bishop of Honolulu and the need for an extended leave of absence. The Board assured the Presiding Bishop that whatever arrangements he might make would, so far as the Board is concerned, be satisfactory.

There is great need for Christian literature in the vernacular in the mission fields in the Orient. At the last meeting of the Board the Rev. C. H. Patton, D.D., of the Congregational Board, and on the American Section of the Committee on Christian Literature of the Continuation Committee of the Edinburgh Conference, presented this matter most fully to the members. We have, in the District of Kyoto, a missionary of exceptional ability in this line, and at the request of Bishop Tucker the Rev. Dr. Irving H. Correll was assigned to the work of translation.

The meeting adjourned at 8 o'clock to meet again in May, when two days have been assigned for the transaction of the large amount of business which demands the attention of the Board.

The Executive Committee met at the Church Missions House on the day preceding the Board meeting. A request was presented from the Bishop of Atlanta and the head of the La Grange Settlement, La Grange, Georgia, for an appropriation of $21,500 to further develop the work of the Settlement. The mill owners are deeply interested in this work and have volunteered the land and three-fourths of the cost of the construction of the desired improvements. The Executive Committee, while appreciating the value of the work done by the Settlement, regretted exceedingly that owing to the lack of funds it could not make the desired appropriation.

Mrs. Sarah M. Peppers was appointed missionary in the District of the Philippines, under the United Offering of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Are There More People at Your Services?

MANY people are asking what effect the War has had on church attendance in the United States. THE CHURCHMAN will be glad to publish in its news columns brief reports from clergymen or laymen which are careful estimates of such attendance. Let us hear from you. Are there more people attending services in your parish, or less, since last April?—NEWS EDITOR.

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.—The Rev. William Porkess, rector of Grace church, is writing a series of seven sermonettes on "Modern Studies in Camouflage", for the Sunday issues of the Pittsburgh Gazette Times for Lent and Easter Day. For five years he has carried on this ministry of the pen.

HOBART PRESIDENCY GIVEN UP BY DR. POWELL

Resignation Goes Into Effect July First on Fifth Anniversary

GENEVA, NEW YORK.—The Rev. Lyman P. Powell, D.D., has announced his resignation as president of Hobart College. This resignation will take effect on July 1, when he finishes his fifth academic year at that institution. At present Dr. Powell, together with President Wilbur Everett Colby, is campaigning through the West in the public service. "It is becoming increasingly evident", writes Dr. Powell, "that for some time there will be no furlough for many months for some of us, and for others there is no possibility of returning to our respective callings for a long time".

FR. FIGGIS SHIPWRECKED ON HIS WAY TO AMERICA

Returns to England—Was to Preach at Trinity Church

NEW YORK CITY.—A cable message has been received by the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity church, of the torpedoing of the British vessel on which the Rev. Fr. Figgis, C.R., of Mirfield, England, was a passenger. Fr. Figgis, who is a member of the Community of the Resurrection, an English clerical order, was scheduled to preach at the Lenten midday services in Old Trinity church from February 25 to March 1, inclusive. The message states that he has returned to England and will not make the trip to this side.

FAMOUS BROOKLYN CHURCH TRANSFERS CONGREGATION

St. Peter's to Be Sold Only to Be Born Again

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.—St. Peter's church, one of the historic church edifices of Brooklyn, where twenty years ago the eloquent voice of the Rev. Dr. Lindsey Parker lifted the parish to the heights of its fame, is for sale. The property is in the hands of the parish trustees for liquidation, and the activities of the old church have been transferred to St. Ann's Episcopal church.

After its golden age, St. Peter's, which was established in 1848, fell upon unfortunate days. The old parishioners died or moved away.

Lately St. Peter's has been without coal and the various activities of the parish have been carried on in one room, which has been very inconvenient. Then the assistant, the Rev. John H. Heady, was appointed curate of St. Ann's and an invitation came from that church to the parishioners of St. Peter's to meet in worship with them. On Sunday the last services were held in old St. Peter's, after which some forty or more members of the congregation marched to St. Ann's.

Archdeacon Webb, acting rector, said that the old church would be reopened on Whitsunday, so that the parishioners might return and bid it farewell.

"The parish has not died", he said. "There will be a new St. Peter's some day."

CHURCHES CALL TO PRAYER FOR MONTH OF MARCH

Bishop Lawrence Joins in Appeal for Union Services

The General War-Time Commission of the Church, at the request of the War Commissions of several Communions, sends out this call to the Church throughout the United States for the joint observance of the month of March as a time of special penitence and prayer and intercession. A booklet, "New Ventures in Faith" for the use of churches, groups or individuals, containing meditations and suggestions for prayer for the entire month, has been prepared and can be obtained at ten cents per copy or $10 per hundred copies from the General War-Time Commission of the Churches, 105 East Twenty-second street, New York City, and from the War Commission of each denomination.

In behalf of the General War-Time Commission of the Churches we venture to suggest the possibility of finding special occasions this year for interdenominational and community acts of co-operation and unity.

1. Hundreds of men have been called and hundreds more will be called from the ministry of the churches to service as chaplains in the Army and Navy. As chaplains they will be ministers not of their own denomination, but of the Nation, serving in Christ's name all the sons of the Nation enlisted in the Army and the Navy. Wherever from any community a chaplain goes forth to this great service we suggest that all the churches of the community join in a general consecration service, sending him forth, bearing the ordination of his own body, but with the blessing of all and with the consecration of the community from which he goes to the ministry of the Nation.

2. It would not be right in view of fuel conditions that all the churches of the community should be kept open throughout the month, but we suggest that such arrangements be made as will provide some one open church or parish house throughout the entire month to which Christian people may resort by day and by night for prayer.

3. As a means of fellowship and unity in common intercession, as well as of just observance of the Government's call for the husbanding of every resource, we suggest an enlarged number of union services among such churches as may find it possible, and especially we suggest a united community service of all Christian people in support of our present national duty.

4. Whenever it is found to be possible we suggest intercommunion celebrations of the Lord's Supper.

5. In a few months the Government will summon the second enrolment of men under the military registration. In advance of the call we suggest that the churches in every community come into touch with all the men in Class I of the Government registration, so that when these men are summoned to the camps they may go forth with such a work of love and faithfulness already done in their behalf as may steady and uphold them in the life to which they go.

We are sure that the Nation by diplomacy and on the field of battle will do all in its power to bring this great struggle to a just close and to restore peace to the earth, and we call upon the Church to use every resource of power and faith and love to hasten the end of strife and to bring in the Kingdom that is first righteousness, and then, peace and joy.

GENERAL PERSHING ASKS AID OF HOME CHURCHES

Conditions in France Demand Increase of Chaplains

WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—The following cablegram from General Pershing has been received at the War Department:

To the Adjutant-General, Washington.

For the Secretary of War.

1. In the fulfilment of its duty to the Nation much is expected of our Army, and nothing should be left undone that will help in keeping it in the highest state of efficiency. I believe the personnel of the Army has never been equaled and the conduct has been excellent, but to overcome entirely the conditions found here requires fortitude born of great courage and lofty spiritual ideas. Counting myself responsible for the welfare of our men in every respect it is my desire to surround them with the best influence possible. In the fulfilment of this solemn trust it seems wise to request the aid of the churches at home.

2. To this end it is recommended that the number of chaplains in the Army be increased for the War to an average of three per regiment with assimilated rank of major and captain in due proportion, and that a number be assigned in order to be available for such detached duty as may be required. Men selected should be of the highest character with reputations well established as sensible, practical, active ministers or workers accustomed to dealing with young men. They should be in vigorous health as their services will be needed under most trying circumstances. Appointees should of course be subject to discharges for inefficiency like other officers of the National Army.

It is my purpose to give the chaplain corps through these forces a definite and responsible status and to outline, direct and enlarge their work into co-operative and useful aid to the troops.

(Signed) PERSHING.

New Organ at Rahway

RAHWAY, NEW JERSEY.—A new organ was dedicated at St. Paul's church, the Rev. H. A. Linwood Sadtler, rector, on Septuagesima Sunday. The instrument is valued at $7,000 and was built by the firm of M. P. Moller of Hagerstown, Maryland, and represents many of the newest developments of the organ builder's art.

Later an echo organ is to be added. The funds for this latest of the many new additions to St. Paul's church was raised by parochial subscription.

BISHOP JONES TURNS OVER UTAH IN GOOD CONDITION

"Where I Serve the Church Is of Small Importance"

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.—At the meeting of the eleventh Convocation of the District of Utah, held January 30-31, a letter from Bishop Jones was read, turning over the affairs of the district to the Council of Advice. Not a word was said concerning the resignation of the Bishop, or the stand taken by him, by any of the delegates. The concluding paragraphs of the letter were as follows:

"In turning over the affairs of the district to the Council of Advice at this time I am happy to be able to report that our missions are as fully manned as they ever have been and to the extent that our means allow, the institutions are in better financial shape than for many years, all the financial obligations of the district up to date have been met, and there are no pressing problems of immediate concern. The future lies in your hands.

"I do not care to criticise the action taken by the Council of Advice. No doubt the Council acted according to its best judgment, and time will show the wisdom or folly of that judgment.

"I regret the necessity for taking leave of the many friends throughout the district whose loyal service has made the work successful; but, after all, where I serve the Church is of small importance, so long as I can make my life count in the cause of Christ. I am more concerned at the remarkable conclusions expressed by the Commission of the House of Bishops which I think must call forth vigorous protests from people who love the Church no matter what their attitude on the War question may be. Expediency may make necessary the resignation of a bishop at this time, but no expediency can ever justify the degradation of the ideals of the episcopate which those conclusions seem to involve.

"In the earnest hope that the future of the District of Utah may be rich in service and achievement, I bid you God-speed."

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH JOINS IN COMMUNION

Members Receive in Service at St. Paul's, Chatham, New Jersey

CHATHAM, NEW JERSEY.—On the first Sunday of the month a remarkable service was held at St. Paul's church, when the members of the Stanley Congregational church joined with the members of St. Paul's in the service of the Holy Communion. Every seat in the church was filled and practically every member of the Congregational church received the Communion in spite of the fact that the whole liturgy and method of administration were strange to them. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Laurens H. Seelye, pastor of the latter church, his sermon dealing largely with the significance of the Communion in the present war times.

This service marked the beginning of joint services on the part of the two churches, for the cold months, which were inaugurated with the patriotic motive of saving coal. During the present month they will be held at St. Paul's, and next month at the Congregational church. It is already evident that much will be accomplished apart from the saving of coal. The good will and new understanding engendered have made the services very true to the finer spirit of Christianity. Prejudices are being removed on both sides. One man who has been bitterly opposed to the church in general called up the pastor of the Congregational church and said, "I want to tell you that that service was very inspiring."

Our Weekly News Letters

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Ordination—On Sexagesima Sunday at Trinity church, Elmira, the Rev. John Edenden Wootton was advanced to the priesthood by the Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese. The litany was said by the Rev. Henry E. Hubbard, the rector of the parish. The candidate was presented by his brother, the Rev. Ray Wootton, the rector of St. Paul's church, Warner. The sermon was preached by Bishop Fiske. The new priest will retain his charge of St. John's church, Marathon, New York.

Clerical Changes—The Rev. W. E. Tanner, for a number of years the rector of New Berlin, will assume charge of his new parish of Trinity Memorial church, Binghamton, on Quinquagesima Sunday. The Rev. Robert J. Parker of St. John's church, Elmira Heights, has resigned to take charge of St. James' church, Clinton, to the rectorship of which he has just been elected. The Rev. Charles P. Bispham has resigned the charge of Grace church, Waverly, to become an assistant at the Church of the Holy Apostles, Philadelphia.

UTAH

Convocation Meets—The eleventh Convocation of the District of Utah was held in St. Mark's cathedral, January 30-31. The opening service consisted of the ordination to the priesthood of the Rev. Stephen C. Clark, minister in charge of St. Luke's church, Park City. The Bishop of Nevada officiated, assisted in the laying on of hands by the Dean of the Cathedral and Archdeacon Reese. The ordination sermon was preached by the Rev. J. H. Dennis of St. Paul's church, Salt Lake City.

Convocation was called to order by the Rev. M. J. Hersey, senior presbyter of the district, in the absence of the bishop. The Rev. Hoyt E. Henriques was re-elected secretary. The Bishop's fourth and last address was read by the secretary. In it was noted the advance made by the district in the last year and in the three years of the episcopate. The greatest gains were in the number of missions and preaching stations, the number of Sunday schools and children attending them. The number of communicants is slightly more than at the beginning of the period, but the gain was limited to the missions, while the parishes really report losses. The indebtedness on the Bishop's house has been paid off, the Bishop Spalding Memorial Fund amounts to more than eleven thousand dollars and five thousand dollars have been added to the permanent funds of the district by bequests.

Missions and mission support seemed to be the theme of the sessions. Deaconess Phelps emphasized the need of constantly growing help in the "waking up" of China.

The institutions all showed a splendid condition when the unsettled condition of the market is considered. Rowland Hall had to advance rates of tuition and board fifty per cent. in order to meet advancing costs, but has as large an enrolment as before. Miss Tremain has imparted a strong spirit of loyalty in all the young ladies. Convocation urged the appointment of a field worker to build up a clientele.

St. Mark's Hospital continues to do more of free and charity work than all the other hospitals in the city combined. 3,000 patients were treated in 1917, being a record. The buildings are overcrowded and the site unfavorable. An entire new plant is ardently hoped for in a better section of the city. The staff of physicians and surgeons is made up of the best in the intermountain country.

The Emery House has been filled to capacity since the Fall opening of the university. For the first time it is self-supporting, due to the able supervision of the student-manager, Mr. Richard Budeleir.

With few exceptions the old boards and committees were re-elected for the coming year, and all appointive officers hold over until their successors are named by the Bishop.

The Woman's Auxiliary held its annual meeting on January 30 in connection with Convocation. Delegates were present from all branches and many parochial guilds were represented by delegates. The following officers were elected:

President, Mrs. W. W. Reese; secretary, Mrs. J. W. Horne; treasurer, Mrs. George Morrow; secretary of Babies' Branch, Mrs. H. E. Henriques; secretary of Junior Work, Mrs. George Rose; treasurer United Offering, Miss Gertrude McGrath.

HOYT E. HENRIQUES.

NEW YORK

War Offerings—Only a few New York parishes have as yet announced the amount of their offering for the War Commission. Grace church, however, has turned over to the Commission the splendid sum of $44,413.72. The Church of the Holy Communion, as the result of a house-to-house canvass conducted by thirty young men, made an offering of $1,018.80.

The Cathedral—On Ash Wednesday the preacher at the eleven o'clock service was Bishop Touret. Two courses of three lectures each will be given on the Wednesdays in Lent at four o'clock in Old Synod Hall. On February 13, 20 and 27 the Rev. Stuart L. Tyson, D.D., will deliver the first course; the subject is "The Bible from the Modern Point of View". On March 6, 13 and 20 the lecturer will be the Rev. W. Lloyd Bevan, Ph.D. There will be a patriotic service under the auspices of the Sons of the Revolution and the Society of Colonial Wars at four o'clock on Sunday, February 17; Dr. Stires will preach. Representatives of the societies of the Cincinnati, the War of 1812, the New York and Long Island Historical Societies, the Loyal Legion, the Aztec, Huguenot, Holland and St. Nicholas clubs, the Colonial Dames, D. A. R., and numerous other patriotic organizations will attend. On Lincoln's birthday a patriotic meeting was held in Synod House under the auspices of the Cathedral Auxiliary and the Cathedral League. Dr. Birckhead gave a most interesting account of his recent experiences in France.

Trinity Parish—The reception when the eight thousand members of Trinity parish gather every year at Trinity Mission House to meet the clergy and their fellow parish-oners was especially interesting this year ecause of the khaki-clad clergy and laymen vho gave picturesque color to the gather- ng. The rector, Dr. Manning, had secured eave of absence from Camp Upton and vas enthusiastically greeted by his par- shioners, who have missed him so greatly his Winter. Dr. McComas, senior curate f Trinity, and Dr. Gates, vicar of the ntercession, were present in their uniforms s chaplains of regiments of the Home De- ense. During the present coal shortage o coal is provided by the Corporation for veek-day services in any of the chapels, although they are kept open with enough eat to prevent the pipes from freezing.

Clergy Retreat—The Junior Clergy Mis- ionary Association held their annual re- reat at the Church of the Holy Communion n February 5. The thermometer regis- ered seven below that day, which some- vhat interfered with the attendance. Dean Rousmaniere gave a series of very stimu- ating addresses on the challenge of Lent.

St. Michael's Soldiers' and Sailors' Club vas organized this Fall. The location of St. Michael's, Amsterdam Avenue and Ninety- ninth Street, so near the Ninety-sixth treet dock, made it a particularly desirable pot for a Sailors' Club. Any man in uni- orm is welcome. The men of the parish ave given up their comfortable clubroom n the parish house for the use of the Sammies and there they can go any time f day to write letters, play games and ead. The ladies run a canteen which is pen from 3 to 9 p. m., where the men an get tea, coffee, sandwiches, etc., for ive cents. Every Wednesday there are lances, always a great success. From 100 o 175 soldiers and sailors come each week. The music is usually furnished by the band rom one of the ships. The British sailors re regular patrons of the canteen and that hey greatly appreciate what is done for hem is shown by the fact that they always eturn when in port. A few French sailors ave also found their way to the club and eem to enjoy it, particularly when they find omeone who can talk to them in their wn language.

Clerical Anniversaries—On February 3 he Rev. Henry Lubeck, LL.D., D.C.L., completed thirty years as rector of Zion and St. Timothy's. He was born in Sydney, Aus- ralia, and was educated at Trinity College, Melbourne, and at Melbourne University. He was ordained deacon in 1881, and priest he following year, in the diocese of Graf- on and Armidale, New South Wales. Com- ng to this country in 1883 he accepted the ectorate of Zion church, Fonda, where he emained two years. He was then called o Grace church, Lyons, New York, and vhile there took the degree of M. A. at Hobart College in 1887. The Rev. Mr. Lubeck came to this diocese on February . 1888, as rector of St. Timothy's church. n 1890 that church was burned, and with nbounded energy he undertook the task of malgamating two parishes, St. Timothy's nd the old Zion church, on Madison ave- ue and Thirty-eighth street, with the addi- ional problem of building a new church. On April 29, 1891, the cornerstone of the present Church of Zion and St. Timothy, n West Fifty-seventh street, was laid, and rom that time the growth of the parish under his pastoral care has gone steadily and rapidly forward. Dr. Lubeck has filled a prominent place in the diocese of New York, having been a deputy to the General Convention for many years, besides being one of the senior clergy of the diocese.

The Rev. E. Clowes Chorley, D.D., cele- brated his tenth anniversary as rector of the St. Philip's Church-in-the-Highlands, Garrison, on January 13 and January 20. On the latter date Bishop Courtenay con- firmed a class. MARGARETTA MILLER.

The Children at Grace Church, Tucson—Our work among the children is not per- haps so very different from the work done in the parishes, and yet its story and its example may help a similar struggle else- where.

The winning to the service of our Sun- day school of the wife of one of our lead- ing professors, along educational lines, has been the final turning-point. She is super- intendent of the primary and infant grades; and through her efficient man- agement, and through an adjunct to our work, the suggestion of which I want to hand on to others, the Sunday school has more than doubled. Tucson is scattered, and many of our very little ones have lived at too great a distance to come on foot, and are too tiny to be trusted alone upon the electric cars or to cross an inter- vening railroad track. So the Sunday school each Sunday morning sends a hired closed machine, with some grown girl in charge, to the extreme other end of the town to gather up the little ones. The superintendent gathers in her own machine another group of children from another far-off and scattered section. These joy- rides preceding and succeeding the hour of Sunday school are a factor in the increased interest.

Two organizations, more or less con- nected with the Sunday school, increase the promise of this work amongst the chil- dren. For some years there has existed in Tucson a small branch of the Junior Auxiliary, its members drawn in the main from the girls of our Sunday school. The Christmas treats these little girls have taken to the children of some of our tubercular residents in our pathetic tent city, the resort of the very poor sick peo- ple, who come to see what our wonderful climate will do to help them; and the little boxes of dolls or aprons or scrap-books they have made up and sent to Miss Thack- ara to help along her work amongst the Indians of northern Arizona, have all along helped develop the Christ spirit of thought- fulness for others.

A student of our State University, too, a young man of exceptional personality, and a member of our local chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, has been will- ing for the first time to organize a club amongst our choir and Sunday school boys. The organization of this club as a Greek letter fraternity, and the making of the learning of the Greek alphabet a test of admission have given an air of mystery to the club which has appealed to the boys. Then again the adoption of a ritual of admission just as sacred and just as appeal- ing in the highest sense as that of the Girls' Friendly Society has helped draw the boys and bind them together.

PHILADELPHIA

The Bishop's Lectures Now at St. Mark's—The last two of Bishop Rhinelander's lectures on "Religion in War Time" will be given in St. Mark's church on Thursdays at eight. The Fuel Administration has re- quested that St. James' church be closed on week days.

Churches Unite to Conserve Coal—In response to the Nation's call for conserva- tion of coal, three of the largest and most influential Episcopal churches in the city have decided to combine their week-day services. The churches are Holy Trinity, Rittenhouse Square (Dr. Floyd W. Tom- kins, rector); St. Mark's, Seventeenth and Locust streets (the Rev. Elliot White, rec- tor), and St. James', Twenty-second and Walnut streets (Dr. John Mockridge, rec- tor). Sunday services will be conducted as usual in all three churches at the usual hours. Each week-day there will be three celebrations of the Holy Communion at St. Mark's. The clergy of the parishes alter- nating in conducting these services. Eve- ning Prayer will be said at five daily, the clergy alternating. On Wednesday night the three congregations will worship at a service in Holy Trinity. These parishes, combining, represent many-sided Church- manship; they have been called "Low", "High" and "Broad". Three of the largest Presbyterian churches have already been holding union services.

Called to Carlisle—The Rev. Harry D. Veitz, who has been assistant at old St. Peter's for the past six years, has been called to St. John's church, Carlisle, Penn- sylvania. The Rev. Alex. McMillan retired as rector of St. John's the first of the year.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew Noon-Day Lenten Services—The Garrick Theatre, 12.30 to 12.55: February 13, Bishop Rhine- lander; February 14, the Rev. Dr. Tom- kins; February 15-16, Bishop Talbot; Feb- ruary 18-22, the Very Rev. Frederick Ed- wards, Detroit; February 23, the Rev. Dr. Toop; February 25-March 1, the Rev. Dr. Gates, New York; March 2, the Rev. John M. Chattin; March 4-8, Bishop Darst; March 9, the Rev. N. V. P. Levis; March 12-16, Bishop Woodcock; March 18-23, the Rev. Harvey Officer; March 25-29, the Rev. H. Percy Silver, West Point, New York; March 30, the Rev. Richard J. Morris. At Old St. Paul's church: February 13, Bishop Talbot; February 14, the Rev. Dr. Mockridge; February 15, Bishop Garland; February 16, the Rev. Percy Stockman; February 18-20, the Rev. Frederick E. Sey- mour; February 21-23, the Rev. Crosswell McBee; February 25-27, the Rev. Albert E. Clay; February 28-March 2, the Rev. N. V. P. Levis; March 4-9, the Rev. Lwewellyn N. Caley; March 11-15, the Rev. Francis M. Tait; March 16, the Rev. H. K. B. Ogle; March 18-23, the Rev. Dr. Tomkins; March 25, the Rev. William N. Parker; March 26, the Rev. Waldemar Jansen, Jr.; March 27, the Rev. Charles Townsend; March 29, the Rev. Dr. Perry; March 30, the Rev. H. C. McHenry.

Mission at Christ Church, Germantown—The Rev. Harvey Officer is to conduct a ten-day mission at Christ church, German- town, beginning February 24.

Pre-Lenten Clerical Conference—President Powell of Hobart College addressed the clergy at the February clerical luncheon at St. James' church. Dr. Powell is lately back from a study of college conditions in England. He gave a clear picture of the effect of the War on young men and education. There was a pre-lenten preparation for the clergy conducted by Bishop Rhinelander, who have helpful ideals and suggestions for the leadership of parochial thought and devotion.

Sailor Services at Cooper Hall—Holy Apostles' Parish is putting the large Cooper Battalion Hall to constant use of the sailors and marines. Beds and meals are provided for the men: and they feel at home in their "Tent and Ship Club" there.

Sunday nights more than 400 of the men gather for service conducted by Dr. Toop, and addressed by Mr. E. J. Cattell, city statistician, who is the lay-preacher.

Bishop's Lectures at St. James'—Each week sees a growing and wider appreciation of Bishop Rhinelander's lectures on "Religion in War-time". The first one has already been published in pamphlet form: and there is hope that the rest may be so spread and kept. One comes away with keener faith in the Lord of Hosts, though realizing clearly that devil's work is seen in war. There is help here, not to minimize evil, but to magnify God.

Galilee Mission—The twenty-first anniversary of the Rev. Dr. Hall's "Life Saving Station", as he likes to call the Mission, has lately been kept by special services in the chapel on Vine street, and one in St. Matthew's church. Both bishops, Drs. Tomkins, Mockridge and Washburn, the Rev. Messrs. Caley, Keeling and Norwood expressed the interest and importance of such work. Laymen, who have given time and work and money to the mission, spoke of their investment as well placed. Converts of the mission bore witness to its power for good and God to them.

Last year 57,495 men attended service: and of this number 1,267 professed allegiance to Christ.

In nine years the mission has sent thirty-three men into the ministry. Several converts are now serving the brotherhood in the army camps.

Dr. Hall may well feel encouraged: and help should be fully given to the saving of men at Galilee Mission.

Service Flag—A beautiful service flag with eighteen stars upon it has been presented to Trinity cathedral by Mrs. Thomas D. Merrill. It will be hung from one of the cross-supporting beams at the east end of the nave, and will be dedicated by the bishop on Sunday, February 3. A Roll of Honor inscribed with the eighteen names hangs by the west door.

A Church School Offering—The Church School of Trinity cathedral voted to give the cost of what would have been presented to them on the usual Christmas tree to the Armenian and Syrian Children's Fund. The children also added to this their Christmas offering, which brought the sum up to $20.32.

Testimony from Soldiers—A young man, just home for the holidays, from his first term at college, was asked to speak a few words to the children of the Church School, where he had recently acted as secretary. He said, "Boys and girls, I have not much to say to you, but one thing I really do want to tell you, and that is—when I went to college, I found myself pretty lonely at first, and I realized as I had never done before, what the Church meant to me. It was the one place where I felt at home, and it seemed my best friend.

"Now what I want you to remember is this—be loyal to your Church, attend regularly the services, for the time will come when you will realize that it means more to you than anything else in the world. We do not have very much time on Sundays to give to religious matters, for there is a lot of studying to do; but I always find an hour in the morning to attend church and that is the best part of the day."

Another young man from the same Church School, who is now one of the "Commanders" at a training camp, writes, "We have two fine chaplains here and they have regular services. My duties and the distance we are from the church prevents my attending Church and Communion as often as I would like, but I go as often as I possibly can".

Service Flag—A beautiful service flag, given to Trinity cathedral by Mr. Thos. D. Merrill, was hung in the cathedral on Sunday, February 3, at the Vesper service. Bishop Morrison made a short address upon the subject of Loyalty, and followed with a short but impressive service of benediction, as the flag was raised into place. There are now twenty-five stars in the field, and the "Roll of Honor", inscribed with the names of those whom the stars represent, is hung at the east side of the west door.

Consecration—St. Paul's church, Duluth, having been freed from the large debt which encumbered it, was formally dedicated on Sunday, February 3, by the Rt. Rev. J. D. Morrison, Bishop of the Diocese. Mr. Thomas S. Wood, representing the vestry, read the Instrument of Donation; the Rev. C. A. Cummings, a former rector, acting as a chaplain for the Bishop, read the Sentence of Consecration; the Rev. W. E. Harmann, as chaplain, carried the Bishop's pastoral staff. The preacher for the day was the Rev. George Craig Stewart, of Evanston, Illinois. The usual choir was supplemented by a six-piece orchestra, the musical portion of the service being especially adapted to the occasion.

The church was well filled in spite of the severely cold weather which prevailed. At the close of the service the rector, the Rev. A. W. Ryan, read a telegram of congratulation on the Consecration of the Church, from Dr. John W. Wood, on behalf of the Board of Missions, and the officers of the Board. The letter also contained an expression of the appreciation of the Board, of the "Progressive policy in carrying on their Missionary Campaign, and undertaking the support of Mr. Nichols, of Japan, as their Missionary".

Change in Diocesan Secretary—The Rev. J. H. Gibbons, the Burton, Covington, Kentucky, rector, Trinity church, and formerly assistant secretary of the diocese, succeeds the Rev. George H. Harris as secretary. The Rev. Mr. Harris, owing to pressure of duties as Dean of Margaret College, and rector of St. John's, Versailles, resigned the secretaryship recently, which position he held for some years while rector of St. Peter's, Paris.

Former Rector at Newport, Bishop Co-adjutor-Elect—The Rev. Robert LeRoy Harris, D.D., Bishop Co-adjutor Elect of the Diocese of Marquette, was rector at Newport, this diocese, from February 18, 1901, to April 11, 1904. He came to us from the Diocese of Ohio, resigning to go to the Diocese of Southern Ohio.

NORTH DAKOTA

Ordination—The ordination of the Rev. Frederick Gunnell to the priesthood was a service of much interest at Gethsemane Cathedral, Fargo, on the third Sunday in Advent. The sermon was preached by the Rev. J. S. Brayfield, of Jamestown, N. D., who also presented the candidate. Mr. Gunnell has been serving as a deacon at Linton, N. D., for the past two or three years and has proven his ability and faithfulness, having built the work up from practically nothing to what promises soon to become a largely self-sustaining mission or parish. To the man who has pluck with common sense and consecration there is always a ready response to this kind of work, for the people of these country communities are hungering for the gospel message, if it is given them in a sane and reasonable way.

Week of Prayer—The week of prayer, January 18-25, asked for by the Commission on Faith and Order, was observed generally by the various communions of Fargo. At a meeting of the Ministerial Association held early in January the matter was taken up and plans made. On January 16 three public meetings were held in three sections of the city to explain to our Christian people the purpose of the movement and to enlist their prayers. Each Church observed the week in its own way and the last evening of the week all of the ministers with representatives from their respective churches met together in the crypt of Gethsemane Cathedral for informal conference and prayer. Such gatherings and prayers must tend to hasten the day when the prayer of the Christ shall be answered—"That they all may be one".

Overpays Apportionment—The Church in North Dakota is rejoicing in the fact that she overpaid her apportionment for missions by about 33⅓ per cent. and that she is one of the three Districts in the Sixth Province reported as not delinquent. We cannot forget that so many dioceses failed to come up to the minimum asked of them. Is not this largely due to lack of initiative and aggressive leadership on the part of bishops and other clergy?

Men Serve Dinner—The annual parish meeting recently held in Gethsemane Cathedral parish was one of the most largely attended and enthusiastic meetings ever held n the parish. It was preceded by a dinner ooked and served entirely by the men; not woman was allowed to have a say in it ntil the time to sit down to the tables. his naturally called out an unusually arge attendance of men. The year's re-orts were most stimulating.

MISSOURI

Preparations for Campaign—It was a reat gathering of men that assembled in t. Peter's parish house in St. Louis the vening of January 31, at the call of the ommittee having in charge the prepara-ons for the big Missionary Campaign hich will be held the last of February. wo hundred laymen sat down to dinner; lso practically all the clergy of the city nd the Bishop and the Bishop Coadjutor. he chief address was made by the Rev. r. R. W. Patton, and he thoroughly con-inced the big laymen of St. Louis that the rrying on of the Church's enterprise is eally and truly big business. Addresses ere also made by Bishop Tuttle and by Ir. Henry G. Hurd, a prominent business an of the city whom his brethren have ppointed to be the chairman of the com-ittee for the campaign. Mr. Hurd has pened an office downtown for the trans-ction of the Church's business along this ne. The success of the campaign in St. ouis is already assured.

uxiliary Meeting—A splendid gathering women of the Auxiliary of the diocese as that which assembled on Friday, Feb-ary 1, in the Church of St. Philip the postle, St. Louis. The Holy Communion as celebrated by Bishop Tuttle, assisted Bishop Johnson, the Rev. E. J. Cleve-nd, rector of St. Philip's, and the Rev. hn S. Bunting, rector of the Ascension. the parish house an arousing address as made by Dr. Patton on the work of e Church among the Negroes. A special dge of $500 was given Dr. Patton for the rk of the American Church Institute r Negroes. After luncheon Dr. Patton dressed the Auxiliary on the topic of the ming Missionary Campaign in which the men have enthusiastically agreed to take eir part.

as New Organ—The congregation of ace parish, Jefferson City, is rejoicing the announcement recently made that e beloved Senior Warden of the parish, dge A. M. Hough, has made the parish memorial gift of a beautiful new pipe gan. The instrument is being built by oller, of Hagerstown, Maryland, and it is pected that it will be installed before ster. Jefferson City is an important base the Church, being the capital of the ate; and under the direction of the pres-rector, the Rev. George L. Barnes, the mmunity is being widely touched by the urch's life.

rving the Community—The Rev. Rufus L. Putney, minister in charge of Trin-church, Kirksville, has recently been ointed chairman of the Four Minute n of Adair County. He has also re-ved appointment as Probation Officer of county. These two positions greatly arge the area of Mr. Putney's useful-s both as a citizen and as a minister of the Gospel. The Bishop Co-adjutor of the diocese in a recent public address said: "Mr. Putney either volunteers or is conscripted for nearly every sort of work that has civic improvement as its object in Kirksville. He is a good example of how a clergyman in rural Missouri can serve a whole community as his parish".

BROOKLYN

Notable Meeting—A notable meeting was that held at St. Ann's church on the evening of February 3, under the auspices of the Colored Committee, of the Long Island branch of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The speakers were the Rt. Rev. Frederick Burgess, D.D., bishop of Long Island; Mr. George Foster Peabody, of New York, and the Rev. Robert W. Patton, D.D., of Atlanta, Ga., representing the Church Institute for Negroes. The topic for the evening was: "The Negro, Democracy and the War."

In the introductory address Bishop Burgess said that making the Negro an integral part of this democracy was all a question of education. Schools, he said, should have been planned for the South, just as they were for the North, but as they were not, education has made its way with the Negro very slowly. "If you give the Negro the opportunity of education, you are doing constructive work for your own country," and "Jesus Christ died not for one race, but for all mankind."

Mr. Peabody said that living in the South in the midst of war, as a boy, he had seen how prejudices had arisen on both sides, and that to the victors came a sense of power which intensified these prejudices. "Now the nation says this war must be a democratic war, and the Negro man finally comes into his own. The draft is putting 100,000 of them into the army, which shows what the United States thinks of the Negro as a man, and it has been truly said no one suspects the black man of being a German spy."

Dr. Patton, strong and forceful as always, showed that the Anglo-Saxon has not lived up to his responsibility for the Negro; that we ought not to talk of the Negro problem any more than the Anglo-Saxon problem, and reminded us that we ourselves have come of a most blood-thirsty race. "The problem", he said, "is that of making an incompetent man a competent one". He spoke as he always does most highly and affectionately of the Negro, who, in spite of all the injustice done him, has been loyal and affectionate. To liken him to a faithful dog is slander. Among the better people in the South he is loved, as he always was.

He gave some startling figures, saying that since 1788 we have spent for the Mexican war, the War of the Rebellion, our institutions, schools, every expense that can be thought of, twenty-seven billions of dollars. Since last April on this war twenty-one billions! "We are being hurled out of our selfishness. It is a glorious day for us."

"Give the Negro the right leadership; say to him, O my brother, I have forgotten thee: thou wast lost and art found'. The Negro is now asking for religion with education, and we are going to pay for it if we don't educate him right".

The Rev. Mr. Oldham, rector of the Church, added his appeal and expressed his joy at having come to a parish where he found a strong missionary spirit.

The offering was for the "Church Institute for Negroes". MARY E. SMYTH.

RHODE ISLAND

Impressive Service—An impressive service was held at St. Stephen's church, Providence, Rhode Island, on Sunday afternoon, January 27, when St. Vincent's Guild for Young Men and St. Stephen's Guild of Servers observed their anniversaries. The rector, the Rev. Dr. George McC. Fiske, was assisted by the curates, the Rev. C. E. Jones and the Rev. C. J. Harriman. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Frank Gavin, S.S.J.E. At the close of the services the Guilds had a reunion supper.

Bible Lectures—The Providence Biblical Institute, of which Bishop Perry is president, announces a second course of four lectures this Winter, to be delivered on Monday afternoons, beginning February 11, at Brown University, by the Rev. Prof. John James Martin, Ph.D., of Bangor Theological Seminary, on "The Bible Message and the Olbigation of the Christian Church in the Immediate Crisis".

War Offerings—Rhode Island exceeded all calculations in the offerings of the parishes for the War Commission of the Church on the appointed Sunday, January 27. Grace church, Providence, gave over $5,000, and St. John's church, Providence, $3,326, thereby almost trebling the amount apportioned to them. St. Stephen's church, Providence, gave $1,900, and in so doing gave half as much again as asked for, as was the case also with other parishes, including the Church of the Epiphany, Providence; the Church of the Messiah, Providence; Trinity church, Newport, and St. Michael's church, Bristol. The diocese was apportioned $15,000, and the returns from thirty-three parishes assure $17,635. It is safe to estimate that when the remaining thirty-one parishes are heard from the total sum will be $20,000.

J. M. HOBBS.

EASTON

The Rev. Mr. Coale Dies—On January 31 the Rev. William Alexander Coale, rector emeritus of St. Stephen's parish, North Sassafras, Maryland, passed into life eternal. He was attended to the end by his wife Elizabeth, his eldest son William and wife, and his rector, the Rev. Edmund Burk, Ph.D. Mr. Coale enjoyed a unique experience in his ministry, having been baptized, confirmed, ordained to the diaconate and priesthood, served as assistant and afterwards as rector in the same church, St. Luke's, Baltimore. He was confirmed and ordained by Bishop Whittingham and served his diaconate 1868-9 as assistant to Dr. Rankin at St. Luke's. In 1869 he was called to the rectorship of St. Michael's, Geneseo, New York, where he served with wonderful success until 1890, when he was called to succeed Dr. Rankin at St. Luke's, Baltimore. In 1900 he was called to North Sassafras parish, where he served faithfully until 1916, when failing health demanded his resignation, and he was elected rector emeritus. He is survived by his wife Elizabeth Freeman and four sons. He was laid to rest Monday, February 4, in St. Stephen's Cemetery, Farleville, the services being held in St. Stephen's chapel, Cecilton.

A Historical Celebration—St. Paul's church, Centreville, the Rev. J. D. Cummins, rector, observed St. Paul's day in a unique manner. A large congregation attended the Holy Communion at 11 o'clock. A large display of the various activities of the parish was given in the evening at the parish house with numerous tableaux of the history of the parish followed by a buffet luncheon. The vestry presented an elaborate display which was greatly appreciated, showing the results of their work during the past year.

Fuel Conservation—The fuel problem has seriously affected even the rural churches of the diocese and nearly all of them have omitted all evening services. The number of Lenten services is being curtailed considerably owing to the fuel situation. Many parishes are concentrating on a Saturday afternoon Lenten service only.

Personal—The Rev. James A. Brown, who has served in this diocese for six years at Old Wye and Spring Hill parishes, at his own request has retired from the active ministry.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

Parish Patriotism—St. John's church, Bedford City, has only 154 communicants, but has sent twenty-seven men for service in the Army and Navy. There is hardly a parish with a larger percentage of its young men in the service. The rector, the Rev. T. Carter Page, dedicated a handsome silk flag on Sunday, January 27, a gift of Mrs. John M. Smith. It has gold fringed cord, mahogany pole, surmounted by a brass eagle. This beautiful design of the National Colors will stand in St. John's chancel.

Progress—The Rev. Thomas F. Opie has made most remarkable progress in the work in the pretty and growing town of Pulaski during the few months he has been in charge of Christ church. The Bishop Coadjutor of the diocese visited this parish on the 27th, Septuagesima Sunday, confirming a class of ten. The Bishop preached a timely sermon for these days of anxiety and unrest from the text, "I will lift up mine eyes to the Hills from whence cometh my help". The Sunday school has taken on new life, grown to such an extent that three new classes had to be formed. Also a Junior Brotherhood of sixteen members has been organized which gives promise for good and valuable service. A new organ has been bought for this church to fill a long-felt need and is to be installed this month. Mr. Opie is a man of energy and leadership and is so recognized by the people of Pulaski, who have made him chairman of a relief committee for the town and also elected him member of the Red Cross Home Service Committee, which is to look after the dependents of the men in the Service.

English Church News

Still the Hereford Question—There is no getting away from the question of Dr. Henson's appointment as Bishop of Hereford, however much one may want to do so. It has stirred the whole Church to its depths. It is not a mere "Church papers discussion". Wherever one goes the lay-folk are talking about it quite as much as the clergy. Americans who have appreciated Dr. Henson's sermons at St. Margaret's, Westminster, are doubtless asking what is the matter with him. The answer has already been indicated in these notes—an unsuitable personality for the office of a bishop. There is a second objection, that he is unsound in the Faith, and a third, that he is an obstructionist in Church reform, preferring the rule of Parliament to any central Church legislature. None of these objections is likely to impress the layman who admires the brave man and the hard hitter.

A rather unworthy attempt has been made to prove that the opposition is really based on Dr. Henson's friendship with nonconformists; but this is to confuse the issue —all our leaders show the same friendliness, though they do not take his unconventional way of doing it.

What Will Hereford Do?—Hereford itself seems to be more concerned with the personal disqualifications than with the heretical charge, as I have already indicated. No hope was entertained that the Hereford Chapter would refuse to obey the mandate for the election. It was not permissible to vote against it; all that the opponents could do was to stay away, or to decline to vote, if present. Out of twenty-eight members only fifteen voted in favor, so it is evident that at the start Dr. Henson has secured only a little more than half of the body which, owing to the appointments of the late bishop, might be supposed to be most favorably inclined to him. It is very unlikely that anything approaching this proportion of the parochial clergy will welcome him. It would be open to Dr. Henson to show them how mistaken they are in him. He has shown considerable versatility in the past; he might try to turn into a model bishop. He did, after all, join in the Times correspondence, but not to answer any charges. He wrote to thank the writers of the innumerable letters of congratulations which he had received from so many different quarters. This may well be, but it will not alter the fact that he will have to face a body of clergy in his new diocese who will interpret their vow of canonical obedience in a way which will recall some of his own attitudes. He is the last man to be in a position to protest against the intrusion of a more orthodox bishop for, say, the administering of confirmation.

Meantime it is announced that the election of Dr. Henson will be confirmed in the usual manner at the Church of St. Mary-le-Bon, Cheapside, London, on January 23, and that the consecration will be on February 2. At the legal confirmation of a bishop's election, objections can still be heard, but of a very limited range. The late Mr. Kensit tried it in the case of Dr. Gore, and invoked the Court of King's Bench; the only result being to delay the consecration for a short time. Protests are increasing daily—the London clergy are appealing to their bishop to take no part in the consecration, and Dr. Woce, dean of Canterbury, has changed his views and joined in the protest (he is a strong evangelical) but all will be of no avail. Hereford will have to make the best of it.

Enter the Bishop of Oxford—But the issue is much wider than the fate of Hereford. The Bishop of Oxford (Dr. Gore) has intervened in a manner which is without precedent, and the question is now one as to the future of the Bishop of Oxford and other bishops who will side with him. Which is as much as saying that the future of the whole Church of England is now involved. For Dr. Gore did not write a letter of disapproval for publication in the Times, as others have done. He has sent a strongly worded letter of protest to the Archbishop of Canterbury himself, appealing to him to refuse consecration. He says nothing on the point of Dr. Henson's past acts of defiance of authority, but concentrates on the charge of his unsoundness in the Faith. His published statements, Dr. Gore asserts, are at least incompatible with a resolution of the Upper House of the Province of Canterbury, passed in 1905, and with a similar resolution of the Lambeth Conference in 1908. Both of these resolutions have been recently reaffirmed by the House of Bishops. He maintains that if Dr. Henson is consecrated the bishops are committed (if not individually, then at least corporately) to the position that a man may be admitted to any order of the ministry who does not unfeignedly believe in the miracles of the Creed. Secondly, the nation will treat with suspicion "all solemn public assertions of the clergy in the matter of religion". And, thirdly, all officers of the Church will be given an effective, if not legitimate, excuse for treating their solemn declarations on other subjects as "scraps of paper". Discipline will become more and more difficult, and the authority of the episcopate will be undermined.

The "Church Times" Suggestion—Commenting on Dr. Gore's protest, the Church Times says that it has cleared the position. The writer of the leading article evidently does not expect the protest to be of any avail, and he can only appeal to Dr. Henson himself not to initiate a long period of strife, but to consult the peace of the Church rather than his own interest, and "withdraw from a position in which he ought never to have been placed".

"Bridge Building"—When so much discussion is threatened it is pleasant to turn to the subject of union. The aged Bishop Browne, formerly Bishop of Bristol, has come out with a new suggestion of union between our Church and non-conformity. In a long article contributed to the Times he describes the most needed operation as that of the ancient pontifex—"bridge building". He wants some interim steps to be taken, which will not tamper with the Act of Uniformity. There is impatience

The Greater Lent

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

In order to make Lent greater we must shorten it. We must do this ourselves and do it now. We cannot wait for an Ecumenical Council to alter the calendar. It is true that it was shorter in the early days of its observance, and that the idea of the forty days, associated in a literal manner with the wilderness, was a later invention. But Christendom is not at present likely to revise the whole calendar scheme. The observance is too important and too full of helpful opportunities to lapse into perfunctoriness and emptiness just because it is too long. The chance it offers is the opportunity for an intensive period of concentration and spiritual refreshment. For this purpose two weeks is a reasonable space of time. The natural division is provided for us in Passion Week and Holy Week. This period can be made a wonderful time of preparation for Easter. It has progress and culmination. This ought to be the Greater Lent—set off by itself—a time of revival, of multiplied services, and carefully planned devotions. In this period minister and people together can enter into significant and inspiring observance. The first four weeks of the present Lent can then be treated in an entirely different manner. It becomes the period of the Lesser Lent, the second Pre-Lent in the total scheme. It might conceivably be used for some plan of instruction in preparation for the real Lent; and the real Lent will then be the more truly kept.

In order to make Lent greater, we must also vitalize it. The shortening of it will help us in this task of vitalizing. It is in process of being killed by stupid conventionalities. We have too often, as things are ordered now, six weeks of unnecessary and unattended services. We have, year after year, the repeated and unwelcome routine of courses of addresses, of Friday night visiting preachers, of lectures on topics of doubtful value by lecturers of still more doubtful authority. The faithful few dutifully attend, as the result of their minister's urging. But a time of inspiration and refreshment and spiritual uplift it is not. And if Lent is not that, it is nothing. Fashions change a little. Six "star preachers" give place to six star sermons by the same preacher. But the conventionality spreads and persists. We are in danger of throwing away a great chance. We ought to study and plan to use it greatly. The first step is to win the Greater Lent by shortening Lent.

Likes The Churchman

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

I wish to compliment the Editor and all his co-workers on the wonderful number of your paper as of January 26, 1918. I have been a reader of Church papers both within and without the Episcopal Church for over three score years, away back to the days of "The Banner of the Cross", and no single copy of any or all said papers has in any respect to be looked upon as in the class of this late number of your paper. The three main papers, "Dr. Dowling's Sermon", "Religious Conditions in the Middle West", by the Rev. Mr. Atwater, and "The Holy Communion", by Dr. Slattery, is each one of them worthy of the highest praise, and would brighten up any paper and make it worthy of thought, if one had found nothing else in any particular number. I have not had such a feast of good things for many a day.

But this is not all. There are: "Prohibition and the Drug Habit", "About Those Prayers for Church Unity", "Minister Morally and Mentally Unfit", and "War Songs". Pardon me if I take some exception to the latter as to this "land of ours". We sing one or more of them each Sunday in Trinity cathedral, Omaha, and I fail to discover in "America" or "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" any trace of "The Wolf" in the words or in the voices of the people.

If the future numbers of your paper are to continue along this way, I shall look forward to each week's copy with a pleasure and desire I have never had in past years.

The United States Government ought to see to it that Dr. Dowling's sermon is read in our secular papers, as an address to every soldier and sailor of this country.

Not Bishop Jones' Enemy

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

I have read the letter of the Rev. Maxwell W. Rice in your January 26 edition. I have a very high regard for Mr. Rice and regret that he has seen fit to designate those who have differed from Bishop Jones as "His Enemies".

There is one prime point involved in this matter, i. e., this Nation is at war and every loyal American citizen is called upon to support the Nation, and with the hundreds of thousands of our boys facing certain death or serious injury in Europe, it is no time for a bishop of the Church or any one else to preach pacifism and so hinder the effective organization of a democracy as is the United States against a world foe.

The allusion by Mr. Rice to the late and revered Bishop Spalding, than whom a more magnificent and sincere man has never lived, is entirely beside the point.

Further, I wish to say that Mr. George L. Paine of New Haven, Connecticut, when he states in his letter, also published by you, that "Even the militarists and anti-socialists of Utah might survive an Episcopal Interregnum for a few months", simply does not know his premises in this issue.

Speaking for myself, I am not an enemy of Bishop Jones and never expect to be, but I recognize the duty of the Church in this crisis, and this applies to Bishop Jones as well. To think of his returning to the Episcopate of Utah is foolish.

Church Temperance Society

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

The Rev. Thomas L. Cole writes in your issue of second, instant: "I would like to ask, Mr. Editor, how a society established upon such a basis justifies itself morally in conducting a campaign for national prohibition". The C. T. S. is not "conducting a campaign for national prohibition"; credit or blame for that campaign is largely, if not wholly, due to the Anti-Saloon League, and the C. T. S. has only lately thrown its influence into that scale; but I do not see that it has left its basis of union and co-operation in perfectly equal terms for the promotion of temperance between those who use temperately and those who abstain entirely from intoxicating drinks as "beverages", by its advocacy of that measure. Mr. Cole's last sentence is not clear, but if he means that the Episcopal Church "stands behind", in the sense of approving, "the Constitutional prohibition amendment", I am very glad to be told that such is the case; though when he says that this is "a result of the attitude of the C. T. S." he gives the society more credit than is due it.

Warming Ourselves at the Fire

To the Editor of THE CHURCHMAN:

Our clergy would do well to read articles in a few recent numbers of the Atlantic Monthly. They are illuminating and carry conviction with instantaneous power. They go far to justify the legend of the publication, Lincoln's immortal words at Gettysburg, "as God gives us to see the right".

André Cheradame's articles in November and December issues of 1917, the Phillips article on "The Decline of the Berliner" in January number of 1918, and now Joseph H. Odell's article on "Peter Sat by the Fire Warming Himself", in the February number of this year, are all well worth reading and pondering. Some of us found it difficult when advised by our chief magistrate to maintain strict neutrality, to obey; a few of us found this impossible. Confronting calamity and monstrosity we had to speak out. At times we felt lonely, but time has justified our unafraid honesty.

Now that our country is at war our brethren, who for three years willingly went muzzled, are glad of the conscientious opportunity to speak, and are doing so with might and power.

I am not of the number who would remind Peter, now that he is bold and outspoken, of his former disposition to warm his shins by the fire when mobs outside were clamoring for Christ's crucifixion. I regret from the bottom of my heart that some Anglican bishop or primate could not have spoken as boldly and fearlessly during the last three calamitous years as, for example, did Cardinal Mercier of Belgium.

He labors best for peace who boldly rebukes vice. The attitude of those who wanted their brethren to keep their mouths shut when the world was going wrong is not a pleasant one to review. Some of our brethren so persistently kept their mouths muzzled that now they cannot get them properly open. This is sad, but the condition calls for sympathy. Fortunately there are not many such. Utah has one. He is young. Having earnestly advocated the cause of non-resistance, he is evidently unable to switch about suddenly and become a warrior for truth and righteousness.

We cannot insist upon a literal interpretation of the Sermon on the Mount, and at the same time explain rationally Christ's driving with whip and lash the traffickers out of the temple.

Utah deserves more sympathy than censure. That he has tetanus is sad. How he came to get it, how following the footsteps of his elders and superiors he caught it, make me sadder.

We ministers mean well, but do always demean ourselves so well. Witness the recent utterances of those whom the New York Times, in the light of Pershing's report to the Secretary of War on the moral condition of our Army abroad calls "canting bigots".

I sometimes wonder if national approval and support most generous of the Young Men's Christian Association activities may not suggest a criticism of Church and clerical attitude toward world wickedness and war waged against it.

With Utah as with others of the clergy, a safe rule would be hate the sin and love the sinner. The truth is we have all of us been warming ourselves at the fire, regardless, or let us say not sufficiently regardful, of what was going on outside. Christianity that is not moved to indignation and opposition by what has occurred in the world during the last three years, and going on now, is not sufficiently attractive to win adherents. A church not openly patriotic and actively sympathetic with America's attitude and aims in this War is a menace and a drag.

A clergyman more influenced by the desire to retain pew-holders, and secure candidates for confirmation, than he is boldly to speak the truth and openly denounce villainy is misrepresenting, however unconsciously, the teaching of Christ and the purpose of His Church.

That the laity are leading the clergy, and not the clergy the laity, in this time of tremendous test gives some of us painful concern and deepest distress.

It is too late to punish a junior bishop for inability to change his mind overnight. Better forget it, or if not this, direct all our energies to his conversion.

You cannot cure lockjaw by decapitation.

Custodians of the U. O.

To the Editor of The Churchman:

At a meeting of the Womans' Auxiliary during the recent Synod of the Province of Sewanee there were matters brought up and passed upon which seem to us of general interest throughout the Church. Such, for instance, are the resolutions concerning the United Offering. The first was to the effect that all officers of the United Offering in the province be called custodians instead of treasurers and that all the other provinces be invited to do the same,—thus establishing unity in this particular at least, and thereby avoiding the extra words of explanation and the unnecessary confusion of titles which now occurs. At present, in some dioceses, one reads in the Auxiliary report of the diocesan treasurer and the diocesan U. O. treasurer, the parish treasurer and the parish U. O. treasurer. As a matter of fact, the latter is a misnomer, for a treasurer collects and expends and a custodian receives and safeguards.

This absurd state of affairs was forcibly brought to my attention several years ago, when I was passing the Summer in a small village and organized a Woman's Auxiliary in the little church and found when trying to explain the United Offering that I could not tell them whether in their diocese they would be under a custodian or a United Offering treasurer. They perhaps had little faith in anything else I had told them, feeling very likely that my ignorance was really spread over the entire subject. Miss Lindly told the Auxiliary when asked that the Church Missions House in answering a communication used whichever title was signed by the writer.

The other resolution was also one of great interest to me. It was, to request the program committee for the next Triennial to arrange for at least two meetings solely for the United Offering officers. Those of us who were at the United Offering meeting in St. Louis remember it probably as a most empty half hour, and we had expected so much. As a rule there is only one U. O. officer in each delegation of five. The other delegates are certain they are tremendously interested in it. Possibly they are, but how much work do they do for it and how much do they really know about it? They are satisfied they know enough to legislate on it—but do they? They can always carry any vote they wish, for they stand four to one.

There would seem to be no doubt that the U. O. workers should have a time and place allotted them on the program, where they can discuss matters helpful or discouraging, their different methods and their successes or failures, and be able to bring any legislation they think best up to the main body of the Auxiliary. Surely what would be recommended by the women who had worked hard on the offering for three years, giving their best thought and labor to it, would be received by the assembly as at least worthy of courteous attention, which the lone custodian does not always receive for herself.

During the last five or six years I have corresponded with a number of custodians whom I was anxious to meet in St. Louis, but to my great disappointment I failed to find them. I didn't know them by sight and the delegates were rarely in their seats except just in time for the meeting to begin. To try and hunt a person then would have only created confusion. The custodians' meeting would at least give us the pleasure of getting acquainted if it accomplished nothing more. But in addition to that there is the comfort and assistance such a gathering of women, animated by one aim, could be to each other, particularly to one as far from the centre of things as myself.

Camp Lee Men

To the Editor of The Churchman:

If the clergy can arrange to visit their men at Camp Lee—which I am sure they will greatly appreciate—I shall be glad to have them communicate with me in order that I may arrange for their lodging in Petersburg, and help them get in touch with their men.

If they can be here on a Sunday or Wednesday evening I shall be glad to have them preach at St. Paul's. There is an informal reception to the soldiers in the parish house on Sunday and Wednesday evenings, and this will give them a good opportunity to meet their men and their friends, if they will notify me of their coming long enough in advance for me to send a special invitation to their men in camp.

When writing the clergy should tell me the names and companies of the men they want to see. E. P. Dandridge.

A Brotherhood Secretary

To the Editor of The Churchman:

May I be permitted the use of your columns to write an appreciation of a Churchman who has recently left a village to engage in the Brotherhood of St. Andrew's work among the soldiers at Camp Pike, Arkansas. As our village does not boast of an Episcopal church, Glenn Albert Kenderdine has given of his best in time, money and influence to the Congregational church of this place. A man of scholarly attainments and wide sympathies, his services were invaluable. Ever a Churchman, he revealed that broadness of mind and generosity of spirit that enable men to work in any part of Christ's Household. He was much loved in midst and will be much missed. But as a Church and community we surrender him gladly for that larger field of service in which his own beloved Communion is engaged during these crucial times. A man of wide experience in the political arena, he goes to his new field of labor richly endowed for the new tasks that await him. A prominent Democrat in State politics, Mr. Kenderdine was honored by his party six years ago with the nomination for Lieutenant-Governor of the State of Iowa. For a number of years he was professor of law at Drake University and has been signally honored by that institution. As a gentleman and a Christian his kindly and gracious influence has been for the advancement of the Kingdom of our dear Lord. May rich blessings attend him, and may our Heavenly Father be pleased to use him yet further for still more glorious service is our prayer.

Archdeacon Sniffen

To the Editor of The Churchman:

Last Tuesday the parish church of Stockbridge, Massachusetts, was crowded with clergy and lay people, gathered for the burial service of one of the most loyal and lovable of priests.

It is hard indeed for the Church on earth to lose such a worker as Archdeacon Sniffen; it is hard for the people of Western Massachusetts, who gave him such honor and affection as their staid reticence extends to few; but I think it is especially hard for the clergy of the diocese to lose such a dear friend as Charles James Sniffen was.

Mr. Sniffen began his work as diocesan missionary shortly after I began my ministry in the diocese and we were associated constantly in our work. His care for the small places, his love for the plain people was great. His loyalty to the clergy was splendid. How he would stand up for them in denying ugly talks and answering harsh criticisms!

Many, many times his coming into my rectory brought sunshine and Divine blessing. God grant that now he may know how much good he has done, and God grant that his pure manly spirit may have rest and sweet refreshment in Paradise.

Some Religious Books

A DEFENCE OF IDEALISM. By May Sinclair. 335 pages. Macmillan Company. $2.00.

THE true idealist carries himself with a certain air of happiness, his step is sprightly. This book while very serious, earnestly logical, and penetrating in its questioning, has a charming sprightliness of style. The book is first brilliant then fair, then argumentative, then clear. The gifted author always finds a satisfactory way out of entanglements.

The author recognizes the pressing for reality that marks each modern school of philosophy and argues that we know the appearances of Spirit much better than we know Spirit itself. Samuel Butler and Bertrand Russel are much in evidence while M. Bergson, Mr. Wm. James, Mr. McTaggart, Mr. Whitehead, Mr. F. W. Myers, Sir Oliver Lodge and Mrs. Stuart Moore (Evelyn Underhill) and others, notably Mr. McDougall, are each summoned to justify the faith that is in them. Monism, and pluralism, the old realism and the new idealism, vitalism, pan psychism and personal identity, mysticism and the "saints tragedy" are surveyed, weighed and measured and tagged. The case for idealistic monism is both constructively and critically presented. "The New Idealism leaves the door open to our vision of Goodness, Beauty and Truth, eternal and real."

A CHALLENGE TO THE CHURCH. By William Temple. Published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

THIS was written at the request of the Consultative Committee appointed by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York and published for the National Mission in England. It gives with careful detail the origin of the Mission, its specific character and the proposed scope of its message of repentance and hope. As we might expect from its author, there is an analysis of all the forces and agencies connected with such a great movement as the National Mission. Of particular interest to American Churchmen will be the detailed relations of other movements, mostly secular, to this of the Church. There is much, of course, that will apply to both sides of the ocean. The last chapter, "Needs for the Future", has a plea in it the Church here is already hearing and answering where it can. In such a time of crisis it is for the Church to work as never before to "establish justice between nations, between capital and labor and between men and women."

THE MASTER'S WAY. A study in the Synoptic Gospels. By Charles Reynolds Brown, D.D., LL.D. The Pilgrim Press. $1.75 net.

WHAT Dean Brown publishes challenges the thoughtful consideration of those interested in kindred themes. As head of the School of Religion at Yale University, he is in a unique position both as to some present-day needs and to certain sources from which to draw material to answer them.

He wrote this volume, he says in his preface, "for laymen who are teaching in Sunday Schools or leading Bible Study groups in city and college Christian Associations or conducting lay services in Missions or Chapels".

We are sure it will be of value to many others who, having read the Gospels, need some further elucidation especially of the text. Dr. Brown has skilfully combined the historical narrative with homely comment and scholarly textual interpretation. The comments have an extremely human touch and make most excellent reading. In addition, the book will serve as a ready reference on the outstanding events of the Gospel history. It cannot but help some from a devotional point of view.

BEFORE THE MORNING WATCH. By the Rev. E. A. Iremonger. New York: Longmans, Green & Company.

THIS is a book of meditations on the 130th Psalm. There is an introduction which is appreciative of the book and its author by the Bishop of London, who especially recommends these meditations for Lenten reading. The treatment of the Psalm is stimulating and suggestive. This is the psalm of the sick. And the author of this volume realizes that the whole world today is sick at heart, but he does not intrude its symptoms upon us.

He would lead us through the way of penitence to new health and strength. He would inspire us to a new hope in Him "Who is plenteous in redemption; and Who shall redeem Israel from all his sins".

RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE

THE VALIDITY OF RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE. By George A. Barrow, Ph.D., Harvard. Sherman, French & Company. $1.50.

MR. BRITTLING should read this book for it aims at the concrete and the real as does Mr. Brittling, but the methods —well, they make a difference. Religious experience is one thing, its validity is quite another and requires a distinct critique. "The problem is not the scientific question of fact but the philosophical question of meaning." Dr. Barrow in this preliminary study of the philosophy of religion carries the reader beyond "textual criticism" to the "higher criticism" of religious experience. He tests the validity of such experience "as distinct from all other experiences". Religious consciousness always makes possible the problem of validity. Men must enquire what is religious experience? What is the validity of its indications? Can the genesis of a revelation of God be traced in our experience? What are the tests of validity? How are these tests established? What results do they offer?

The book presents no theology, it follows no apriori method but adheres to the analysis of facts. Dr. Barrow stays on the ground. He defines the science of religion, narrows its field, and makes it more practical by offering a valid method of study based on man's concrete experiences that offers us the assurances of God and of the reality of the religious life.

Many men would take "more stock" in religion if they could find a way to confidence in their religious experiences. This book offers admirable service in thinking things through. Dr. Barrow has the courage to pioneer and the engineering ability to build a good road for others.

THE HUMAN ELEMENT IN THE MAKING OF A CHRISTIAN. Studies in Personal Evangelism. By Bertha Condé. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.

IT is invaluable for the Christian worker who wants to serve the Saviour by bringing others to Him, to be able to begin with the individual as he finds him, and capitalize his search for reality, or his habitual approach to problems of conduct or his trust in certain principals or persons, or his attitude towards difficulty or failures; in fact, to understand how to meet a person's life experiences. Bertha Condé offers chapters on such subjects each followed by a Biblical study. Some guiding principals such as mental reactions, the oneness of body, mind and spirit, release of spiritual energy are also studied. "Socializing My Faith," "Motives That Test", "Essential Convictions" and "Preparation for Service" are preliminary chapters. The book is a clever, earnest study of the human approach to Jesus Christ and His answer to the outgoings of the human spirit.

ENGLISH RELIGION

DEFECTS IN ENGLISH RELIGION. By John Neville Figgis, D.D. The Young Churchman Company. Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

EVERY volume by Dr. Figgis commands attention and furnishes food for reflection. These sermons on Some Defects in English Religion are no exception to that rule. They are plain-spoken and are an interesting indictment of some phases of English Church life. The defects that he dwells upon are, sentimentalism, legalism, cowardice, complacency. Each of these accusations Dr. Figgis presses home to his hearers in his usual penetrating phrases. "Law, then, of some sort there must be in the Church. Otherwise it would not be a Church, but a fortuitous concourse of pietistic atoms."

One is glad, however, to see that in these days when we are rather overwhelmed with criticisms of the Church, and accusations against her, he sounds at the end a hopeful note.

"I trust that I have not seemed to you unduly pessimistic, for I do not believe in what is called the failure of the Church of England. I think there are wonderful hopes for the future."

THE BEST MAN

THE BEST MAN I KNOW. By William DeWitt Hyde. Macmillan Company. 50c.

"THE Best Man I Know is a composite of the best qualities of many men." "Since these best qualities are Christian I call him the Christian Man." These characteristics are either the mystical roots that run down into the rich soil of that will for the good of all which is the will of God, or else practical fruits borne on the branches of that same universal good-will.

When the reader has followed Dr. Hyde's descriptions of these roots and fruits he sees not an abstract dogmatic thing but a fitly formed flesh and blood man called Christian whose qualities are harmonized by that one spirit, the source of all true manhood.

The book is lucid, bracing and warm with the spirit of reality.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS

THE DEVOTIONAL LIFE OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKER. By Charles W. Brewbaker, Ph.D. (General Secretary for Sunday Schools among the United Brethren). Fleming H. Revell Company. 50c net.
PERSONAL APPEALS TO SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS. By Oscar L. Joseph. Fleming H. Revell Company. $1.00 net.

THESE two volumes are so akin mention may be made of them together. The first is a plea for a deeper devotional life on the part of the Sunday school teacher. A call for personal piety, the kind that makes itself felt in the lives of the scholars under her control. The teacher is urged to see the vital necessity of using all the "fudamentals" of spiritual culture to adequately interpret in terms of personal experience the presence of the living Christ.

The second volume, Personal Appeals to Sunday School Workers, is a series of appeals to the various leaders in the Church's work of religious education, including, and correctly so, fathers and mothers, urging them to fulfil their obligations to this most important department of religious life. No one escapes the appeal, from superintendent to sexton, from father to the public school superintendent. Cast in the form of letters each "worker" is appealed to in the terms of his own problem and the discussion centers around the share he has in making the most of the moral and spiritual opportunity the Sunday school offers in all its departments. The author is everlastingly right when he declares the Sunday school is no longer "a juvenile institution but a department of religious education". As a volume of suggestions and inspirations it will not fail of its purpose if it can only be put into the hands of the particular persons for whom it is intended.

A BOOK ON AFRICA

AFRICAN MISSIONARY HEROES AND HEROINES. By H. K. W. Kumm. Published by the Macmillan Company. With maps. Price, $1.25. Six lectures given before the College of Missions, Indianapolis, Indiana.

ANY author who calls attention to the history of Christian missions in Africa puts us under obligation to read carefully what he offers. Those have been strong characters, both men and women, who have so heroically and bravely stood for the Cross and its teaching, from Perpetua to Livingstone. They make all the more apparent the claims of that huge continent. The present-day Christian consciousness cannot escape the thrilling appeal the lives of these "people of vision" who helped so much to advance the civilization of this "continent of the future". The suggestive summary of the unusual richness of Africa, given in the introduction, its extraordinary size, its natural wealth, its great variety of peoples, will pay if carefully read and make all the more interesting the well-known stories of the heroes and heroines that follow. Dr. Kumm has no illusions concerning the power of the Crescent in Africa. Americans, especially the Christian youth of America, need to know of these knights of the ancient line, who made the nobility of missions and the missionary enterprise epidemic. It may be they will see what a great opportunity there is just now "for noble service and superb heroism" in the contest to reach pagan Africa before the Crescent dominates too completely the land of contradictions which it is. Viewed in the light of the immensity of the task before the whole Christian Church the work in Liberia carried on by Board of Missions seems pitifully small.

THE LIFE AFTER DEATH

THE ADVENTURE OF DEATH. By Robert MacKenna, M.A., M.D. New York: Putnam's. $1.00.

BE thankful that this author is a religious man and maintains a spirit of reverence. Be thankful that he is a learned physician who has ministered to many of the heroic soldiers of the Allies as they made the great adventure. He will give to many readers a new view of death.

"Death is not painful; as a rule the most timid traveler divests himself of all fear when he approaches the portals. Death comes as a matter of course and is the quiet ending of that process of decay that begins at birth. Death is one of life's greatest blessings, it enriches life, sanctifies love, liberates the personality and purifies justice."

The ten essays are written in a style fitting to their beautiful theme, and in this hour when every home feels that the mystery of death is near, we are thankful that a religious physician has given us this comforting and reassuring message.

The man who dies most gladly is not he who holds life most lightly but he who holds life most highly. To him death gives meaning to his life both behind him and before him.

Dr. MacKenna's wide knowledge of literature, his personal temper, his attitude toward men and their experiences make him a charming essayist.

THERE IS NO DEATH. SEEING GOD. Two small volumes by the Venerable Basil Wilberforce, D.D. Published by Dodd, Mead & Company.

THESE two books are part of "The Purple Series", containing volumes of devotion and meditation. They are all written by clergy of the Anglican Church. As might well be expected from Archdeacon Wilberforce, his share as published in these two collections has been done in scholarly fashion with his usual spiritual treatment of profound themes. They are written in the form of sermons. They will not appeal to popular taste for they presuppose a congregation trained in and familiar with theological conceptions quite above the average. For devotional use in the practice of meditation they contain many stimulating and thought-provoking passages. To those who seek to be versed in soul culture Dr. Wilberforce's contribution to the Purple Series will add new material.

THE VICTORIOUS FAITH. By Horatio W. Dresser, Ph.D. Harper & Brothers. Price, $1.00 net.

CAN we eulogize faith when the world has gone mad? Can one still hold to the principle of brotherly love when thousands have been slain on the battlefields of Europe? Can we talk of God's mercy, plead for righteousness; can our belief in God and man withstand the present-day tests? These are the frank, searching questions Dr. Dresser plainly states in this new book and as frankly tries to answer. He calls it a book of moral ideals in War Time. He desires it to be of some inspirational help to faith, so that men may hold fast to the eternal truths, in times of peace and of war.

There can be no question but that the hour is propitious in which to gather up the human lessons of the war and to learn their bearings on the things of the spirit.

PEACE HOPES

THE PROBLEM OF HUMAN PEACE. By Malcolm Quin. E. P. Dutton & Company. Price, $3.00 net.

A STUDY of the problem of peace from the standpoint of a scientific Catholicism. This Catholicism, "the religion of man in his highest spheres of development, following after his noblest ideals", has in it for Mr. Quin a positive and permanent content of goodness, beauty and truth which, scientifically understood, may carry man on in his pursuit of his own perfection and as a consequence attain a Human Peace world-wide and continuous.

Such a Catholicism, recalling the history of the world for the past 3,000 years, would naturally seek for a profound and lasting change in the mind of man. It would involve a sort of international spiritual providence, the voice and guardian of an individual humanity, capable of giving counsels of inspiration and guidance throughout the world and of breathing forth influences of reconciliation and co-operation in every country and in every sphere of the life of man. Such a work cannot be the work of the politician, but (rather interestingly) it is the natural task of the "Catholic Church", with the Pope at its head, risen out of a sectarian exclusiveness into a right realization of its own universality, boldly freeing itself from the trammels of nationality, class and party and understanding its doctrines and its human mission in the light of science and the fully developed modern mind.

In view of the recent peace efforts upon the part of the Vatican, this philosophic treatise on the subject makes it timely reading. The author's explanation of the expression "the Catholic Church" is rather interesting. He frankly states he means the Church of Rome—"its doctrine, its worship, its institution, including of course the Papacy", and yet in addition, "all other Christian Churches, in proportion as they actually contain within themselves Catholicism and wield its force"!

With this as a background, on the one hand the author discusses the relation of war to spiritual and political life, industrial imperialism and human peace; and on the other, the peculiar and particular mission of Catholicism to bring this peace to pass as also Catholicism's relation to imperialism and the great republic of peace of the future. The term "republic" is used rather than "democracy" because the author finds the former more truly representative of that for which scientific Catholicism must necessarily strive, viz., "the same thing as the living social Catholic Church"!

We cannot help give voice to the conviction that this dream of a "Catholic Church, the international Church, the Church of the Papacy, the Church of the Republic, the Church of Human Perfection, positive and many sided, the Church of the people" a vision so far off in any sense of realization, that few men now will be willing to listen to its siren appeal.

1 both sides of our religious separation. is, on our side, "vital to retain to the termost everything relating to the valid- of Holy Orders". On the other hand e separated bodies have their own or- nization and carefully trained ministry. one of their ministers desires to take oly Orders he has to break off from his ngregation and wait until such time as can be prepared for the diaconate. Now hy should not it be possible, asks Dr. rowne, for the bishop of the diocese to ecognize" such a minister, without ad- itting him to Holy Orders? A declara- on that he believed himself called by the oly Ghost to the ministry, that he be- ved the truths of the Nicene Creed (an teresting point, by the way, in view of the enson controversy) and the concurrence the authorities of his own communion, ght to be sufficient for his recognition as a ocesan worker under the leadership of the shop. He could be invited as a brother diocesan gatherings, and to preach occa- nally in our churches. Should he after- rds desire to proceed to Holy Orders, he uld prepare while still continuing his min- ry. The probability would be that he uld take his congregation with him, and nain as their minister. "I ask myself," ncludes Dr. Browne, "what might be the ult of twenty years of quite, orderly, dge-building of some such character as s? And I answer that question with an- ner: "What will be the result of leaving ngs as they are for twenty years?"

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

DR. DOWLING did not give the title "To Love Greatly Is to Live Cheaply" to his last Saturday Night Sermon. The title of his Love Sunday pastoral should have read "To Love Greatly Is to Live Greatly." But the printer hooverized it.

The Rev. F. J. Foakes Jackson, D.D., is a clergyman of the Church of England now on the faculty of Union Seminary, New York City. He was at Jesus College, Cambridge, England, before coming to this country, and prominent in the life of the University. He has written a number of books on Church history, has contributed articles to Hastings' "Dictionary of Religion and Ethics", and written for many religious periodicals. The two papers on the "Spirit of the Reformation" which we publish in this and the next issue, were read at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine last Autumn.

The Rev. John P. Peters, D.D., Ph.D., Sc.D., rector since 1893 of St. Michael's church, New York City, contributes a series of four articles originally read as a single paper before "The Club" of New York City. This organization is a group of some forty or fifty clergymen of the diocese of New York and the neighboring dioceses, who meet once a month for discussion. The paper on "Training of the Clergy, Reminiscences and Suggestions" was so enthusiastically received by the members of The Club that they ordered it printed. After it has appeared serially in "The Churchman", it will therefore be issued in pamphlet form.

The Rev. Edwin Augustine White, D.C.L., read a most suggestive paper on "What shall we do with our Synods?" at the recent meeting of the Synod of New York and New Jersey. The first half of this paper appeared two weeks ago; the second half appears this week. Dr. White is chairman of the Committee on Canons of General Convention and the author of several books on canon law.

Heart of the Jungle Tales. Suggestions for teachers: The Pygmies—Describe the camp life of the Pygmies. In what way does their life differ from the everyday life of the other African boys and girls? Describe their appearance. What food do they eat? How do they get it? What do they exchange with other tribes? Why is it that we know so little about them? Why did Oham wish to go to Be's camp? How did he know the way? When did Oham learn the Word of God? Describe the boy's journey and visit at the camp. What effect had his talk upon the Pygmies?

Harriette H. Brooks is a contributor living in Worcester, Massachusetts.

The Rev. Jesse Halsey, who sends from Moscow "A Snap-Shot from Russia", is pastor of the Seventh Presbyterian church, Cincinnati. He sailed from San Francisco in September with the first Y. M. C. A. contingent to go to Russia, where he was placed in charge of the supplies department of the Y. in that country. The Bolshevik General has ordered all the secretaries out of the camps, and it is probable that the Y. men are now on their way to France. In a note sent with his article, Mr. Halsey says: "I was so fortunate as to stand within ten feet of the patriarch during parts of the ceremony, thanks to the American embassy. There were only 500 admitted to the church besides the high clergy. A recent "revolution (we have them every week here) had closed the Kremlin to most people. I stood with the 'bishops and other clergy' and saw everything. It was four hours long, but was like going back to Constantinople in the days of Constantine. The music is tremendous, even in the smallest churches—and there are nearly 300 in Moscow alone. . . . I have been through one battle, a week long, but got no scratches".

For four years Mr. Halsey was with Dr. Grenfell on the coast of Labrador, where the Doctor dubbed him "the saint in overalls", owing to the unclerical uniform he wore on six days of the week while installing all the heating and lighting systems of Dr. Grenfell's hospitals.

Obituary

THE REV. HENRY W. WINKLEY

From the rectory of Calvary Church in Danvers, Massachusetts, on February 4, 1918, just as the bright light of morning was flashing o'er the earth, there passed into life eternal the rare spirit of the Rev. Henry W. Winkley, a self-sacrificing and efficient worker in the Master's field, a helpful friend and valued advisor both in parochial and secular affairs and a scientist of more than local influence and reputation.

He was the son of the Rev. J. Frank and Abby C. Winkley, both of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, and both of an old colonial stock of fighters and preachers. From that source came his intense Americanism and his heroic Christianity.

He graduated from Harvard in 1881, and from the Episcopal Theological School three years later. He was fifty-nine years of age and had been rector of Calvary Church for the past decade.

From early manhood he turned the clergyman's proverbial blue Mondays into red letter days by devoting that time to the mental refreshment that came from his scientific researches. At first it was play; later, intense work but always broadening and inspiring. In a short time he became an authority on conchology and had a worldwide exchange correspondence that helped to enrich the collections at Harvard University, The Smithsonian Institute and others. Then his active mind turned to the history of architecture, vegetable physiology and kindred lines. He made his own lantern slides and in lecture courses—usually before the high schools—he gave the community the benefits of his research. All this added to fullness of the stature of the man and to the virility and sweetness of the Christianity he both practiced and preached—for above all he was a Christian gentleman.

And so when the crucial test came and the hold on life and life's affairs relaxed, and the tired body yielded to the ravages of disease, even then the effulgent spirit shone forth in all its pristine strength reflecting the wondrous character of the soul as he smilingly bade farewell to the dear ones about him and patiently waited, ready to answer "adsum" to the final roll call on the other shore.

"Once, in thy father's arms, a new-born child,
Thou didst but weep, while all around thee smiled:
So live that, sinking to thy last long sleep,
Thou mayest smile, while all around thee weep".

REV. HENRY MARTYN SHERMAN

Rev. Henry Martyn Sherman was born on the twenty-sixth day of June, 1838. In his boyhood his parents moved to Westport, where he attended the Westport Academy under the famous principal Nehemiah Adams. Later he was a student in and graduate of Berkeley Divinity School. He was ordained deacon by Bishop John Williams of Connecticut in 1864 and priest in 1865. His entire ministry has been spent in the diocese of Connecticut. He became missionary and then rector of Calvary church, Colchester, where he built a church. He was also chaplain in the famous Oramel Whittlesey Music Vale Seminary, near that place. In 1870 he became rector of Trinity church, Tarryville, where he built a handsome brown-stone church. He became rector of Trinity church Torrington, in 1876, in which place he became archdeacon of Litchfield, holding that office until 1890, when he entered upon the rectorship of St. Paul's church, Bridgeport, and later was archdeacon of Fairfield. He represented the diocese of Connecticut in the General Convention of 1886. He was a member of the standing committee of the diocese from 1892 to 1898, and its secretary for the larger portion of that time. He was also for many years an examining chaplain of the diocese. During his ministry he was twice elected general missionary of the Diocese of Massachusetts but each time declined that important office.

In Masonry he attained the Knight Templar degree, and several times was grand chaplain of different branches of the order. He was also an active member of several fraternal orders.

Owing to ill health he resigned St. Paul's parish in 1903 and retired from the active work of the ministry at that time. He was instrumental in building other churches and rectories in parishes and missions with which he was connected.

In 1868 he was married to Maria Lord, daughter of John D. Baker, who died in 1... There were two daughters of this marriage, Margaret Lydia, and Mary Benson, wife of Joseph Meeks. There are three grandchildren, Carl Louis, Sherman Joseph, and Louisa Benson Meeks. In 1899 he was married to Mary Eliza, daughter of William H. Perry. Her death occurred in 1913.

The Rev. Mr. Sherman died at his home, 1... Harriet Street, Bridgeport, on February 4, 19...

Obituary

HENRY M. LOVERING
RESOLUTION

Henry M. Lovering, our senior warden, was called to a higher life on January 21, after a long and trying illness, which he bore with true Christian fortitude and meek submission to his Heavenly Father's will.

His faithful service to this parish covered a remarkable, unbroken period of fifty-four years. He was elected vestryman in 1864, junior warden in 1886 and senior warden in 1906, which latter office he held until his death. During a large part of this period he was treasurer of the parish, in which office he inaugurated an improved system and performed its duties with promptness and precision. For many of these years he represented his parish in our Diocesan Convention, and was several times its deputy to the General Convention.

He honored his Church and the Church honored him. His unselfish devotion to the temporal and spiritual welfare of this parish, coupled with his great executive ability, and his absolute sincerity of purpose, have been of immeasurable value; only those who have been associated with him can appreciate his unwavering loyalty through sunshine and shadow, his loving service, and the graces of his Christian character.

Mourning our loss, we give thanks for his example.

May light perpetual shine upon him.

WM. H. BENT,
Committee.

REAL ESTATE

For the first time in thirty years, I have spent most of the present Winter in the North. I have looked down from snowy heights upon the Hudson; and have walked Fifth Avenue the coldest morning New York has ever known—on an errand of love and honor—like Sir Galahad:—

"His strength was as the strength of ten,
Because his heart was pure."

In returning South, these experiences confirm one that for the weak, and probably for all persons, when practicable, it is better to have a home in a milder climate.

A LAY SERMON

By Dr. Cabot

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep."

I wish to speak on form. Form of words, of thought, in muscular movement, in the State and Church.

There are few words less popular nowadays than those associated with the word "form". We hate formalities, we don't care for ceremonies, and we dislike these things because form seems to us restraint, when we want freedom. It seems to us convention, a false outside when there is no truth inside. And then it seems something cut and dried and dead when we want life.

I want to speak of form as craftsmanship, as conservation, as a bit of relative fiction and as the threshold of originality. Form as craftsmanship: we know it in all good technique. In an athletic sense it is the opposite of what is slack, or slumping, or slipshod, or it is the opposite of what is wasteful, uncontrolled, sprawling. It is the opposite of what is shapeless, amorphous. We don't hear from the athlete the complaint that he does not care for formalities and therefore does not want form in his crew, in his tennis. He does not complain against old-fashioned form in this respect; he wants perfection of form.

And then we want form as conservation. In the national conservation movement one of the most striking things is that we want to stop those who would spoil the shape of the forest. We want to stop those who let energies run to waste, for form is always that which prevents energies from running to waste. In the human body the form of the heart and the blood-vessels, beautiful as a tree, is what prevents the blood from spilling out and running to waste. In the wood of the tree, form is the opposite of that which happens when it burns to ashes. It is the opposite of that which is nervous and run down.

Whatever our aversion to form, there is one form which all of us, even the most amorphous of us, have to carry with us, and that is the human body. We don't really find ourselves with a human body. It is something which has been built up, built up to conserve energy and to balance strains. It is something changed and not the same thing always. The stiffer parts are absent in infancy. We gradually acquire a skeleton and a backbone, which enable us to resist and give us form. We resist thereby the breaking down processes in our lives and the breaking down processes in nature.

Form as conservation holds the past. It holds all that we give—a form of words, a technique, an art, a religious rite. It is a knot to hold against strains. It holds the world's increasing store and prevents the disaster that each generation or each college class would have to start over again afresh, from the beginning. A wound tends to let the blood out drop by drop. Form tends to restrain things within their natural limits.

There is an old story, the source of which I have been unable to trace, of an Englishman in some remote part of India where there were no other white men. He was visited by a friend who came across the country after traveling many days. When the friend arrived at about dinner time, he found the Englishman sitting at the table alone, clothed in a full dress suit, and he said: "For whom do you dress? Why all of this form and all of this ceremony"? And the Englishman said, essentially: "If it were not for this form and for these details, I should go to pieces, lose my morale. I should not be able to stand the strain." That story has always seemed to me significant, significant of the value of simple form.

Shall we never break form? Surely, whenever we think we do right to do so. But the men whom I do not see in church are not always ready to put up other and better form. Whenever I see them they are doing something less desirable than going to church, idling about and without proper restraint. And the men who want to break marriage and have liberal, unrestrained view on this matter—they do not set up any new forms. What they start is skulking down the back streets, literally and figuratively.

We have to carry the burden of civilization, and in carrying that we must carry something that binds us. We must carry it in good form and with a stiff upper lip. The man who complains and the complaints that are thrown out are elements which in-rease the strain on the others, for that man s letting go of his end. By form we hold p our end of civilization. We prevent vaste, as I have said. We conserve the vorld's best yet. We further achieve a cer- ain relative bit of originality, or perfec- ion.

There ought to be in every life some real ne hundred per cent. success and some fail- re. But success is what I have to speak f. There ought to be some point of real fficiency from which you make your ex- eriments. We don't say that the musician hall come about sixty or seventy per cent. ight. We say he shall be absolutely in ine. We don't say that the surgeon should ut the wrong artery only now and then; e must always cut right. We don't say hat the physician shall prescribe a wrong nd poisonous dose now and then; he must e one hundred per cent. right. So in the tenographic schools; the stenographic ex- mination is one which no one passes who oes not get one hundred per cent. There ught to be some test in our lives which e don't pass unless we get one hundred er cent.

But form does not destroy all freedom. : is an area of relative firmness and sta- ility, it is the point from which you take f on your leap to something original. You eed the firm, the stable, the static to leap om, and you will take off always in the ime proportion if you break the record. or just a little bit of originality we have start with form. But you can create othing out of form; when you create, you ust create, as did God, when the world as formless and void.

he Clericus—The February meeting of e Clericus was held at the parish house of :. Michael and All Angels church. The eaker was Bishop Burleson of South Da- ota, who gave the clergy much valuable formation as to his work amongst the Indians in his jurisdiction and stirred up a lively discussion of some of the points made. The Rev. Philip Cook organized the clergy into groups to visit and minister at the base hospitals at Fort McHenry and Camp Meade, where there is a great work waiting to be done.

Shrove Tuesday Observance—As usual Bishop Murray gathered the clergy on Shrove Tuesday in preparation for the observance of Lent. Quiet hours were spent at the diocesan house, the devotions being led by the bishop and the addresses to the clergy being made by the Rev. Philip Cook. These proved most helpful and inspiring. The bishop as usual entertained the clergy at luncheon. This annual gathering of the clergy for purely devotional purposes is always one of the notable events of the year.

Social Service Commission Active—The Social Service Commission of the diocese is actively exerting itself to help on certain reforms for which a vigorous agitation is being carried on this winter. It has cordially commended the mayor of Baltimore for his efforts to relieve the suffering caused by the coal shortage and is urging the abolition of race track gambling in Maryland and the amendment of the State laws as to child labor, school attendance, hours of work for women and boiler inspection.

Anniversary of Men's Guild—Instead of its annual banquet, the Men's Guild of the Church of the Advent decided to hold a patriotic meeting this year. The parish hall was decorated with the national colors and the Church's service flag, containing twenty-five stars, was given the place of honor. Bishop Murray was present, with the rector and rector emeritus of Grace church, and the vicar of the Church of the Advent. Addresses were made by Dr. Henry Barton Jacobs, John F. Ferguson, president of the Baltimore Federation of Labor; the Rev. C. L. Atwater, vicar of the Church, and Captain Eric Hemmerde, who told of the enormous task of transporting 13,000,000 of men to the various battle fronts which has been accomplished by the British Empire.

The Clericus—The January meeting of the Baltimore Clericus was held at the Baltimore Club. The appointed essayist was the Rev. W. A. Crawford-Frost, who took as his subject "The War and Democracy" and handled it in an original and trenchant manner calculated to arouse interest and discussion.

The Rev. Custis P. Jones, a retired clergyman of Maryland, died recently at the age of seventy-five years. He was a man of literary tastes and wrote much for the Church papers, and was a descendant of the Virginia Custises.

The Rev. Edward D. Johnson, rector of St. Anne's church, Annapolis, is a patient at the Union Protestant Infirmary in Baltimore, recovering from an operation. He is expected to resume work about the first of February.

The Rev. Robert A. Mayo, rector of Christ church, West River, has been acting as assistant to the Legal Advisory Board to Registrants in Anne Arundel County, having been a lawyer before ordination.

St. Paul's church, Baltimore, has lost one of its most useful members by the death of Mrs. Campbell Mortimer, a sister of Mr. Henry Holt of New York City. She was a woman of marked strength of character and was for many years identified with all that is best in the life of the city and a helper in every worthy cause.

The Rev. W. Weir Gillis, rector of St. Thomas' church, Hancock, has been placed in charge also of the churches at Clear Spring and Indian Spring.

The Spirit That Denies

"THE devil, as Goethe represents him, is the spirit that denies. Mr. Paul Elmer More, certainly one of the most penetrating moralists of our time, says that this is clean kam. The spirit that denies, he declares, is God. I do not recall any single utterance from living lips that has impressed me as more profoundly illuminating." So writes Mr. Stuart P. Sherman in his introduction to On Contemporary Literature. Those who have followed in recent years Mr. Sherman's papers in criticism in the Nation and are familiar with the Shelburne Essays will perceive the wealth of meaning gathered into the quotation with which we begin this editorial.

Mr. Sherman loathes, with all the loathing of a critic, sensitive to form both in morals and letters, the loose philosophy that has been dripping from the pens of writers like Mr. Wells, George Moore and Theodore Dreiser. Most busy, healthy-minded Americans do not read Mr. Dreiser. There are some novels of Mr. Wells that one wishes one hadn't read (this before the pious days of Mr. Britling). But credulous Christians, not persuaded by their Bibles, have sometimes been rather proud of approaching with open minds the new morality which Mr. Wells was so brilliantly commercializing before the War diverted his attention to the meaning of sacrifice. They have listened to his passionate smashing of all the old fogy notions of sex decency, the marriage vow and moral restraint. They were almost persuaded that Mr. Wells as the prophet of the new morality was also the prophet of twentieth century freedom.

There are some questions that so far as Christians are concerned are closed questions, not because faith shuts the mind to reason and bars discussion, but because Christians ought to be spared the diversion of repeating certain old experiments in morals. Some things are for the Christian proved once and for ever to be worth while and right. The Christian life is a life of continual experiment, but an experiment in the discipline of unselfishness and holiness. Its whole realm of freedom lies within that romantic region of chivalrous adventure. Every experiment that the Christian chooses to make in the uncharted country of self-indulgence is for him treason and disloyalty. Naturalists like Mr. Wells and his clan have repeatedly questioned whether certain inhibitions which Christianity sets up against the free and easy life are reasonable and profitable. It has been the surprising folly of our time that so many people with a Christian background in their lives have seriously listened to these men as if they were dealing with an open question, a question left open to men professing Christian convictions.

All the moral energy we possess ought to be directed to winning one after another the victories which Christ asks of us. From first to last they are victories over self. The moment a man pauses in the fight to ask whether the battle is worth the cost, he is denying his Lord. It is as dangerous a hesitancy as would be the soldier's lingering over the command to go over the top. Christianity does not put chastity, and the sacrifice of one's personal comfort and carnal impulses for the sake of the family welfare, among the open questions. It stations the Cross squarely in the home and State. The Cross proclaims the law of sacrifice. The convinced Christian doesn't ask "How much am I expected to give up for my ideal?" He may tremble and sweat blood under the crucifixion of his burden, he may lift his eyes to God, pleading that the cross be made lighter, but he never asks whether unselfishness and decency are worth what they cost. His only problem is to wrest from God courage and light for the conflict.

There is an insidious emphasis running through a good deal of the advanced social teaching of our day. It is reflected in the problem novel and the problem play. People are asking how much a man or woman should be expected to pay for the Christian standards of life. They are measuring in terms of human pleasure and pain the worth and validity of an ideal. The Cross has one unhesitating answer to these questions. It is not necessary to pay anything. We can have our release if we want it, but the more we are willing to pay, the finer the gift of life. It is the atoning deeds of discipline and self-denial that save the family and the home just as they save the nation. Wherever we see family life tingling with courage and loyalty, somebody there, we may be sure, is paying large for a large vision. The deeds and hours that ring like a silver bell in the memory and give a man self-respect are the deeds of beauty which we have offered with our very heart's blood to God. Ask the Christian mother, whose back is bent beneath the burden of keeping intact and clean her ideal of a home, whether her heartache and self-denial pay. We bow our heads in reverence before such spiritual beauty. Beside such Christian freedom, what a ragged, unclean thing the new freedom propounded by our prophets in fiction is. Pitiable is the home and the nation that leaves its sons and daughters to doubt whether honor, chastity and chivalrous sacrifice are worth what they cost. God is the spirit who denies.

Form

"WHAT form is in art, conventions are in life. * * * No art that is not planned in form is worth consideration, and no life that is not planned in conventions can ever be satisfactory. * * * The full beauty of an activity is never brought out until it is subjected to discipline and strict ordering and nice balancing. A life without petty artificiality would be the life of a tiger in the forest. * * * Laws and rules, forms and ceremonies are good in themselves, from a merely aesthetic point of view, apart from their social value and necessity." These are not the words of a preacher but of a novelist, Mr. Arnold Bennett. They express what every teacher of organized religion has many a time tried to say. They were never more needed, perhaps, than in those undisciplined years immediately preceding the War; for those were years when men, chafing under discipline, were exalting a manner of life that was in happy accord with their inclinations.

In America Mr. Roosevelt sounded a clarion note of protest against the easy-going philosophy. He preached the strenuous life, the life of discipline. He bade men keep in fighting trim. He was sometimes taken to mean militarism, but he clearly showed what he meant, for in every line of that virile philosophy there was protest against the loose and flabby doctrine that men were put into the world for easy living and privileged seclusion from struggle. His doctrine of the fighting trim was not unlike St. Paul's fighting the good fight.

Christians respond electrically to such teaching. The high thoughts that rise in the heart when we hear the call to sacrifice reveal how truly Christianity has created new instincts. Those instincts run counter to naturalism and to every species of self-indulgence. Men trained in Christianity crave the discipline of self-denial.

Self-denial is an unhappy word unless it be hastily linked to its high motive. When Christians use it, it need not have the ascetic implication of lacerating the flesh merely as a blessed exercise; though William James has taught us that something may be said for hardship for hardship's sake. Self-denial is the joyous password to freedom. What we give up may be fragmentary good; it may be a vicious evil; sometimes it is a very precious possession. But from trifles to real heroism self-denial is the supreme investment of life.

There is romanticism in such adventure. Its call to loyalty thrills the heart and makes the will tingle. The last three years of the world's life has put more romance in the doctrine of sacrifice than had ever before been enlisted in that cause; but the War cannot do automatically what needs to be done if the world is to bend its back beneath the responsibilities of life. How truly the soldier's training enforces the lesson which Christianity has made ultimate! No army fit to stand before the enemy ever relied for its morale upon the great emotions of war. The romanticism of dying for one's country is not enough to make a sure implement of victory out of raw recruits. Day by day through long hours of what may seem unreasonable self-denials the soldier gets his training in obedience. In a letter recently received from the front, a young soldier unaccustomed to a life of discipline caught by analogy the Christian idea of a disciplined life. He said in substance: "When we get home, we soldiers, we shall, I expect, become better Churchmen. We will go into the thing loyally and do our bit." He has said it all.

The first step toward religious reconstruction after the War will, we believe, be this elementary Christian act of social discipline. We shall despise the gospel of the formless life, which our loose moralists and dramatists have been preaching to us ad nauseam. We shall see how unmanly such a life is. We shall perceive in the white light of consecration to what slavery it led. And our first reaction will be a trying to play the game, to do team work, to put aside our sentimentalizing over "self-realization", and "living our own life" and reaching out for sensations.

Most people are healthy-minded. They have "fight" in them, they have no sluggard's wish to avoid the stern issues of life. They have always fought loyally for this vision. But there is poor team play. We waste our will power on a piecemeal, unorganized life. What these countless thousands of fine-intentioned men and women need is an organized life, the life of Christian conventions. Is it too ambitious a dream to think that in the near future such men and women will say to the Church of Christ: "Here I am. Train me, use me for the bringing into being of the beautiful thing that we all have nearest our hearts. Such an event would not be the coming back of the prodigal son to the home he left. It would mean the creation of a Church idea never yet realized on earth, a Church in which gifted and dull, strong and weak, can work together in the freedom of Christian obedience. This act of loyalty will recreate the Church of God, and the thousands of keen-souled men and women who today are serving Christ in separate groups outside the Church will march on with Him together. Our common life will then take on form.

The Routine

THE way to begin the disciplined life is to begin. We have done enough dreaming, protesting and prophesying. Some time we must take the first step. That first step will be the hardest. For many a man it will be like the recruit's first day in camp. Much that seems trivial and meaningless when measured with the vague dreams we have of service will have to be gone through in sheer obedience. Later we shall understand to what freedom it leads. But we must begin. The people who want to make the Church over must make it over from the inside. Protest will not accomplish the aim. Let them enter the army of Christ and fill in the quotas. If the form is too cramped for the vision they have, then let them expand that form by their pulsing energy till it shall fit the need. But they, too, must first learn the lesson that Mr. Arnold Bennett enforced by his definition of art which has been quoted above. They must accept the discipline of conventions. This will be a new experience for some of our finest spirits; for they have not all of them learned that before we can do original work we must learn that craftsmanship is the "threshold of originality". To that craftsmanship belongs the discipline of prayer, of worship and of helps to spiritual and bodily freedom, tested by long usage. Men who discover God as the companion of their daily work have found Him in the training school of systematic worship.

Why not in this Lent of 1918 let the call go forth far and wide for all the well-wishers of good to come together again into the Church's training school of life.*

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

Cecil Spring-Rice

"Soldier of England, perfect, gentle knight,
The soul of Sidney welcomes you tonight."
—Alfred Noyes.

WHILE Germany's ambassador to America was dragging his own honor and that of his country in the slime, an English gentleman, with the chivalrous instincts of his race, was quietly performing in Washington the duties of his office. He was the ambassador of a people who is accustomed to require of its diplomatic corps no task from which a gentleman would shrink. During difficult days when diplomacy was suffering at the hands of Germany stains upon its good name, which will not easily be erased, Cecil Spring-Rice taught, by the high example of his office, that in war as in peace England fights with honor.

A Magnificent Offering

IT looks as though the War Commission would receive the half million for which it has asked. The returns are not all in, but they are encouraging. Grace church, New York, has kept up its fine record. Its offering of $49,473.72 is the largest gift any parish in the country has made for the war work of the Church. It will be remembered that in the Pension Fund Grace church topped the list with the splendid sum of $400,617.48.

Tennessee Again Disgraced

OUR morning papers bring us this: "Estill Springs, Tennessee, February 12.—Jim McIlherron, a Negro, who shot and killed two white men here last Friday, was burned at the stake here tonight after a confession had been forced from him by application of red-hot irons." Gentlemen of Tennessee, do you think that your commonwealth is fitted to make the world safe for democracy? Are the Christian churches of Tennessee denouncing these atrocities that are advertised throughout the world to the shame and dishonor of our Nation? We ask for information.

A Soldier on Loving Our Enemies

ONE of our chaplains in France writes: "I liked your editorial on 'Loving Our Enemies'. I can stand officers, though they are college men, who get angry at me because I wanted to have a Christmas Communion for the German prisoners. I can just stand the funny but ghastly hatred so many of our men have for these driven sheep of German prisoners who look at you like a wounded dog when you show a spark of fellow-feeling—who when our funerals pass by stand at attention and salute with a fine reverence, but when I found two of our chaplains who believed we ought to preach hate of the Germans or we'd never develop good fighters, I ————. We have seven or eight thousand Germans here who would break your heart. If they were in the trenches in front of me, I'd shoot at them to kill, but when I see them in a camp where they must know all the loneliness I do and more, when they break their necks to do anything you want, and when you break the rules, as I always do, to speak to them and give them a pack of cigarettes, they click their heels together and come to attention like a steel rod with a look of stupefaction and gratitude that will haunt you to your dying day—how you can hate them gets my goat."

*We have come across an old number of the Harvard Alumni Bulletin containing an address made in Appleton Chapel by Professor Cabot. The Churchman publishes that address in full in this issue with the permission of the Harvard Bulletin, because it seems to us with wonderful simplicity and beauty to set forth a fundamental emphasis of organized religion.

A young doctor now with the English writes: "We have just gone over the top. They are bringing in the German prisoners. When I see these half-starved, homesick, frightened boys, some of them not more than seventeen years old, looking so utterly wretched, I lose all the hate I ever had for the Germans, but I hate the Kaiser and his crew worse than ever."

The Y. M. C. A. on Card Playing

THE vigor with which the Y. M. C. A. has taken up War work has made thousands of Americans, who contributed generously to the fifty-million-dollar fund, wonder whether that organization had in the course of years lost some of its smug attributes. The criticism of Y. M. C. A. Army work published in the New York Times, February 17, regarding the attitude of Army huts towards smoking and card playing makes one wonder whether the rarefied moral atmosphere of the hospitality these huts offer to our soldiers may not be needlessly offensive. When Christians of every name dug into their pockets to help the Y. M. C. A. war work, they had no intention, most of them, of endowing a brand of morals that looked askance at cards and smoking. If an Episcopalian accepts the hospitality of the Y. M. C. A. he does not wish to be compelled to know whether the secretaries approve either of whist or cigars. That is his own business. If the Y. M. C. A. rules were made under the old-fashioned Baptist or Methodist ideas of moral rectitude, they ought to have been changed before the Y. M. C. A. presented its organization to do war work for all the churches. We are not interested in what those who control the moral standards of the Y. M. C. A. think about card playing, and our soldiers ought not to be subjected to the annoyance of being told.

The answer of the Y. M. C. A. is "Those are our rules". The reply of the American people who are financing the Y. M. C. A. is "You had better change your rules".

Church Finance

THAT is a splendid suggestion which has originated at the Church Missions House, an account of which appears in the first news page. The finances of the Church have dragged like a dead weight for years on Board secretaries, rectors and bishops. And yet every diocese, organization and board has muddled along without co-ordination and without success. The country's splendid response to the diverse war relief calls has demonstrated once and for all that money is available when people recognize the need. The Church Pension Fund has shown us that Church people are ready to give when the object of their offering is definite and concrete. A single budget for the central organizations of the Church will show our people exactly what is expected of them and inspire confidence. Cincinnati has with great success raised a single budget for all the city charities. Some of our parishes have tried similar experiments with good results. There is every reason to believe that the plan as suggested by the Board of Missions' committee would come near solving the vexed question of Church finance.

Peace by Diplomacy

ENGLAND, except in pacifist circles, does not indulge the hopes that are cherished in some quarters in America that peace can be won by diplomacy. England and France, who up to the present moment have been offering the supreme sacrifice for the defense of the world's liberty, believe that militarism can only be overthrown by robbing it of victory. Mr. Lloyd George and Mr. Balfour conclude, from what they have learned of the Teutonic mind, that so long as Berlin can boast of a military victory autocracy is secure in its hold over the German people. The verdict of history seems to point that way.

Trying to force a wedge between the Teutonic allies is a keen diplomatic game, provided it doesn't arouse false hopes at home. We think that part of Mr. Wilson's last noble speech before Congress, which will prove most helpful to the cause of peace, is his stern assurance to the enemy that America is being organized to win the war and that we shall never turn back till our purpose is accomplished.

France speaks through her deeds; England is always awkward in the diplomacy of words; but these two nations who have thus far paid the cost of the war in blood and suffering are setting their teeth to see the grim business through. We hope that America's diplomatic peace wedges will not do more damage behind the Western Front than in Austria and Berlin. There is a little too much boasting in America that we are furnishing all the statesmanship of the War. That may be true. But England and France have thus far furnished the implements that have kept Prussia from conquering the world.

Felicitations

ON March 1 the Rev. Selden P. Delany, D.D., assumes the editorship of The American Church Monthly. The Monthly is just a year old; the experiment begun under the joint editorship of a group of those interested has so far justified itself as to warrant the appointment of a regular editor. THE CHURCHMAN extends cordial felicitations to our contemporary upon its happy choice of an editor.

Social Service and Courtesy

EVERY issue of The Survey brings to THE CHURCHMAN office valuable material which we should like to share with those who perhaps have not the privilege of reading that invaluable paper. In the issue of February 2, Professor Arthur J. Todd has a very illuminating article: The Scientific Spirit and Social Work. It abounds with good suggestion. The passage on courtesy we quote:

The persistent giving of good advice is subtly degenerative to one's moral nature. Good people must beware of misinterpreting the maxim about man's extremity being God's opportunity. Man's extremity never means the doctor's or the preacher's or the social worker's opportunity for bossing and humiliating. On the other hand, if one escapes the Scylla of nagging, it is easy to fall into the Charybdis of complacency; then you have a sentimental Good Fellow, masculine gender; Lady Bountiful, feminine gender.

The scientific spirit does away with obtrusive personality; it pours a healthy astringent upon one's ego. It broadens our sense of personality until we get the idea firmly fixed that we are merely representing the best thought of the community and are not exploiting our own vanity upon the poor and needy. This is a very subtle temptation and can only be met by rigorous scientific self-immolation. Another hazard grows out of nervous strain and the air of patronage: this is the tendency to measure one's courtesy and good manners by social ranks. Discourtesy is no longer a good business asset. Even railroad ticket agents are being trained to say, Thank you. But in the older relief type of charity a certain kind of waspishness and thinly veiled contempt still survives in places. I have never forgiven a prominent Boston charity worker for snapping her fingers in the face of an applicant for aid in San Francisco during those strenuous rehabilitation days after the disaster of 1906. I do not know whether the man's case was worthy or not; but I do know that no real scientist would so forget the common decencies. I have before me a postcard written to a poor woman by the milk and ice association of an Eastern city. It disdains all friendly salutations and reads simply: "If you do not report at regular Mothers Meeting Friday or Saturday, July 23 or 24, at 10 a. m., at Blank Building, your milk will be stopped." It ends likewise abruptly without even the dry courtesies of a business letter. Does social service mean such forgetting of ordinary manners?

St. Francis of Assisi, patron of relief workers, saw the value of courtesy. "Know, beloved Brother," he said, "that Courtesy is one of the essential qualities of God, Who maketh His sun to shine and His rain to fall upon the just and upon the unjust, through Courtesy; and Courtesy is also the sister of Charity, which puts out Hatred and preserves Love alive."

MODERN PICTURES FROM THE OLD BOOK

A Lenten Series on Jesus' Parables

By THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

The Young Man Who Went Wrong

Scene First: Leaving the Old Home

"And he said, A certain man had two sons: And the younger of them said to his father, Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. And he divided unto them his living.

"And not many days after, the younger son, gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country."—St. Luke xv-11, 12, 13.

LORD BYRON declared that there were two unalterable tests of literary worth: that that which is written shall please, and please permanently. There is probably no bit of literature in existence, which for so many centuries, has had such an immediate and perennial interest to all classes, as this story. And I think the reason of it is that it is more than a parable. It is history. It has happened; it is happening every day.

The street preacher, seeking to reach the motley group on the street corner, simply has to begin in a quiet tone of voice, "A certain man had two sons", and at once the crowd is hushed and attentive. We all seem to recognize this instinctively. The clergyman who has not delivered a sermon on the Prodigal Son would be a curiosity.

Dwight L. Moody, when he was conducting that remarkable work in the Moody Tabernacle in Chicago, was accustomed to invite various ministers of different communions to speak. But he tells us that he was soon compelled for their benefit, as well as that of the congregation, to post a notice over the pulpit, No more preaching on the Prodigal Son.

But, provided it is not presented too frequently, the most cultivated assembly in the United States will be as keen as the street-corner crowd to listen to this parable and to its exposition. If it is ever dull it is because the speaker is dull; for a man cannot make attractive, even such a story as this, if, with little or careless preparation, with no special object in view, no great central theme in his mind, he simply takes a whole chapter, and wanders aimlessly from paragraph to paragraph, because he knows that if he is persecuted in one verse he can flee into another. An expository discourse is the most useful of any, and the hardest successfully to prepare.

I shall seek not to make such a mistake. I shall divide this "Pearl of the Parables" as it has been termed, this "Gospel within the Gospel", into three Saturday Night Sermons, and shall present one each fortnight during the Lenten Season. The first will be that of tonight, Leaving the Old Home; and the second, In the Far Country; and the last, Home.

These verses illustrate the gradual development of a man's sin. We might almost think that St. James had this parable in mind when he wrote, "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted of evil, neither tempteth He any man: but every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin: and sin when it is finished, bringeth forth death."

The prodigal was a prodigal in heart before he was a prodigal in fact. He did not go away immediately. "Not many days after." Little by little the thought crept upon him and he harbored it. He came to feel that if he was to have liberty, he must be independent of his father; and that is the basis of all our sin. When a man begins to doubt that his Father's way is the best for him, let him look out. He is facing toward the far country.

It is very different when one is discontented with himself. That is the first step in progress, and the second step and the third and every step. Every truly great man, in proportion to his greatness, as he grows older, grows humbler. Soon after his conversion, St. Paul spoke of himself as "the least of the apostles". Years later he wrote, "I am not worthy to be called an apostle". But toward the end, when he was almost ready to go home, he said, "I am the chief of sinners". Like ripening wheat, the riper he grew the lower he bent.

But not so with this young man. For him there was only one assurance of liberty; to get away from his father. O how many a man makes that mistake! How many a man fancies that liberty consists in getting away from God. He forgets that each one of us in life is walking along the edge of a precipice. It is the Christian who can say, "I will walk at liberty—for I keep inside the fence"; or to use the exact expression of Scripture, "I will walk at liberty, for I keep Thy statutes". The supreme fact which is so often forgotten is that the fence which shuts us out shuts us in. He wanted to get away from his father, and he could not make the distance great enough. The more the distance, the greater the liberty. "He took his journey into a far country."

A fortnight ago, in commenting on that wonderful thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, I tried to show how to love greatly is to live greatly. We are what we love, and what we love will determine what we shall be. And this parable illustrates the principle. The young man did not love his father's presence. He wanted to get away from him. He loved his father's portion. "Give me the portion of goods which falleth to me." And as he loved, he lived. And in the next Saturday Night Sermon we shall see how he lived, and discover that his life followed his love.

And here again is the voice of Scripture: "My son, give me thine heart." That strikes at the citadel. God knows that if He has your heart, He has you. When in the reign of the Protestant Queen Elizabeth a law was promulgated in England commanding all the people to go to church, the Roman Catholics sent to Rome to learn the Pope's pleasure. And he sent back the message, "Tell the Catholics of England to give me their hearts and the Queen may have all the rest". You live as you love. The essence of sin is a desire to be independent of God.. And the essence of holiness is in the prayer,

"May Thy will, not mine be done;
May my will and Thine be one."

"Give me the portion of goods which falleth to me." And the father gave it. God will not drive you into sin, but He will not keep you back if you are determined to go. That is the most awful fact in our lives; that we are endowed with absolute freedom of will; that if we so determine, we can choose the path which leads to death and no one will hinder. In one form or another, we can generally get what we want if we want it earnestly enough, but woe to any of us if we want what we ought not to want. "They lusted exceedingly in the wilderness", it is said of the rebellious Israelites, "and tempted God in the desert; and He gave them their request, but sent leanness into their souls".

"And not many days after, the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country." The day came, though once he never would have believed it could, when, from the last height which commanded a view of the old home, he cast back a prodigal's glance. He saw the mother wiping her eyes; the father holding out his trembling hands for him to come back. Perhaps for a moment he faltered, but too long had he cherished the evil desire in his heart. And so, dashing the tear from his cheek, he strode down behind the hill which shut out the village home, and was gone.

Farewell to those early days of innocence, when as a frank and open-faced boy he was the joy of the household. Farewell to the blessed hour of prayer and holy song. Farewell to purity. Farewell to peace. He has turned his face toward the far country.

For lay-readers or others who may wish to adopt or adapt this Saturday Night Sermon for use in public or household worship, Dr. Dowling suggests the following hymns:

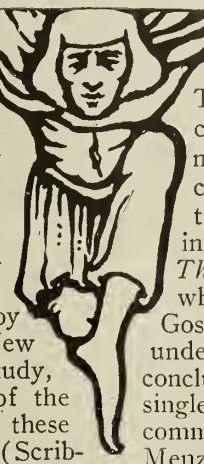
501 "A charge to keep I have."

599 "Hark! my soul! it is the Lord."

612 "O the bitter shame and sorrow."

Lenten Reading

By the Very Rev. George Hodges, D.D.



THE selection of profitable reading for Lent is assisted this year by two printed programs. One is prepared by Dr. Gardner of our General Board of Religious Education, the other by Mr. Mott of the Student Volunteer Conference. They agree in their purpose to bring to the interpretation of our present life the precepts and principles of Jesus Christ.

Dr. Gardner's program, which may be had by writing to the Board at 289 Fourth Avenue, New York City, proposes as a subject for Lenten study, "The Temporal and the Eternal in the Light of the World War". Among the suggested books are these four on the Life Everlasting: The Christian Hope (Scribners) by Dr. Brown of the Union Seminary, Life Beyond Life (Longmans) by Dr. Slattery, The Life of the World to Come (Macmillan) by Dr. H. B. Swete, divinity professor in the University of Cambridge, and Immortality (Macmillan), a group of essays by university men in England, edited by B. H. Streeter. To these might well be added The Destiny of Man (Houghton, Mifflin) by John Fiske, The Hope of Immortality (Crowell) by Charles F. Dole, and The Assurance of Immortality by H. E. Fosdick.

Other books in this list deal more directly with the religious questions to which the War demands answers, old or new: The Challenge of the Present Crisis (Association Press) by Dr. Fosdick, The War and the Soul (Dodd, Mead) by Dr. Campbell, The High Call (Dutton) by Dr. Stires, and two books which come from the actual experience of men fighting in the trenches: A Student in Arms (Dutton) by Donald Hankey, and Carry On (Lane) by Coningsby Dawson. In these two books the finest spirit of the Christian soldier finds expression. Another like book, revealing the hearts of young men who have given their lives for France, is War and the Spirit of Youth (Atlantic Monthly Company).

Mr. Mott's program, which may be had by writing to the Student Volunteer Movement at 25 Madison avenue, New York City, proposes three subjects: "The Life and Teachings of Jesus Christ", "The Need of These Principles in the World Today", and "The Need of These Principles in the Inter-racial and Social Life of North America Today". Taking these in reverse order, the books recommended for study of the third topic are Negro Life in the South by W. D. Weatherford, Christianizing Community Life by Ward and Edwards, and The Social Principles of Jesus by Walter Rauschenbusch. These and the other books of this program are either published by the Association Press or may be obtained from them. Everything that Professor Rauschenbusch writes is stimulating to both thought and action. An excellent Lenten course on the social situation might be made by adding his other books, Christianity and the Social Crisis, Christianizing the Social Order, and his latest, A Theology for the Social Gospel.

It is in the suggestions for the first topic that the most vital principles of Christianity are brought to the solution of our present problems. Studies about Jesus is described as "a consideration of Jesus' revolutionary standards for the New Age". The writer is Dean Bosworth of Oberlin College, a competent scholar of unusual spiritual insight. The Jesus of History is described as "a remarkably fresh picture of Jesus against the background of His actual life conditions, suggesting inescapable modern implications". Mr. Glover is the writer whose Life and Letters in the Fourth Century and The Conflict of Religions in the Early Roman Empire have already shown his ability to interpret historical situations.

These two little books, one of which costs 50 cents and the other $1.00, might be made the beginning of a course of Lenten reading which should centre about the life of Christ, considered in relation to our immediate problems. Professor Kent, in his admirable historical Bible, has a volume on The Life and Teaching of Jesus (Scribners) in which he presents a great part of the text of the Gospels with illuminative comment. He brings to an understanding of these biographies the conservative conclusions of modern scholarship. The text of a single gospel, St. Mark, is given with accompanying comment in The Earliest Gospel (Macmillan) by Allan Menzies, shining in every page with new light on familiar passages. Dr. Hill, who teaches Biblical Literature in Vassar College, has just published The Life of Christ (Revell), in a form resulting from his long experience—a clear, devout, liberal conservative book. The Lord of All Good Life (Longmans) is by Donald Hankey. The subtitle is "a study of the greatness of Jesus and the weakness of His Church". Readers of this young hero and martyr will expect to find in these pages an impelling enthusiasm, much unconventional and, on the whole, wise criticism of ecclesiastical conditions, and a strong emphasis on essential religion. Back to Christ (Longmans) is by Bishop Fiske of Central New York. He discusses "the wonder of His life, the romance of His religion, forgotten truths of His teaching, and some practical applications of His gospel", with unfailing clarity and directness of thought and speech.

After any of these books, or after all of them, if the reader has time for so many, may well be read The Mount of Vision (Longmans) by Bishop Brent. "At the close of the memorable service in St. Paul's cathedral on America Day, April 20, 1917", says the writer, "while the words of the Battle Hymn of the Republic were still ringing in our ears, the Bishop of London asked me to write a book for his people for Lent of the following year." This is the book, "thought out", Bishop Brent says, "during journeys by land and sea, the preliminary draft having been sketched while traveling on horseback over the mountains of Luzon. These very words are being penned at a rest house in a remote cañon to the accompaniment of the music of the little rivers that run among the hills." The refreshment of the swift streams is in these pages, and the world of good and evil is here seen as from the high summits.

But suppose the Lenten reader says as he looks over the titles of these books, "The War is what I would avoid. I am weary of the thought of it. My days are filled with it, and I am already reading about nothing else. I am looking for the shadow of a great rock in a land which is scorched, even at this distance, with the flames of war." For there are such. Mr. Odell, who in the current number of the Atlantic Monthly abuses Simon Peter as he stands by the fire and warms himself, and who says that that is what we are all doing, all of us clergy, attending to our own comfort while the world-tragedy is going on beside us—Mr. Odell is mistaken in inferring that all the preachers are as mild and passive as those of his own acquaintance. There are churches from which some people stay away because when they go they hear nothing but the din of war. For such persons it may be well to prescribe a gentle course in mysticism. This will take them not only out of this bad world, but out of all worlds whatsoever, into regions which are beyond space and time, from which they may return with that quietness and confidence to which Mr. Odell so (Continued on page 263)

The Faith of Washington*

By THE HON. JAMES M. BECK

THE New York Society of the Sons of the Revolution has asked me, in the absence of its president, whose attendance is prevented by illness, in its behalf to present to the rector and vestry of this church these flags to commemorate the fact that within these four walls the "noblest man that ever lived in the tide of times" here found aid and comfort from the God of Nations. This venerable church, so justly famous in the annals of our historic city, has in its "treasury of the saints" many precious memories, but possibly none of such patriotic interest as that which we seek to commemorate by our gift. To this church came George Washington on the eve of the disastrous campaign of Long Island to implore by prayer the aid of the Almighty in the almost impossible task of defending the cause of the Colonies.

Here again he came after his inauguration as President of the United States, and here each Sunday, when this historic city was the capital of the Nation, George Washington regularly attended divine worship. With him such attendance was not a mere form of convention. He was a retiring, diffident, modest man, who rarely expressed opinions even in public matters, and who would have been little disposed to reveal the inner thoughts of his soul for mere display or effect. Thus, during the Constitutional Convention, George Washington spoke only once, although it was in session for nearly four months; but his religious faith was shown on this, as it was on subsequent occasions, and, having regard to the diffidence of his nature, it may well be believed that these expressions were not a matter of idle ceremony, but represented profound convictions.

Thus on the eve of the assembling of the Constitutional Convention, when few of the delegates had gathered in Philadelphia, and there was gravest doubt as to whether this last attempt at national unity would be successful, Washington solemnly said to men about him:

"It is too probable that no plan we propose will be adopted. Perhaps another dreadful conflict is to be sustained. If to please the people we offer what we ourselves disapprove, how can we afterwards defend our work? Let us raise a standard to which the wise and honest can repair. The event is in the hand of God."

Even before he left his home at Mount Vernon to take the oath of office as President of the United States, when his fellow-citizens of Alexandria bade him God-speed, Washington again emphasized his religious convictions by saying:

"All that now remains for me is to commit myself and you to the care of that beneficent Being who, on a former occasion, happily brought us together after a long and distressing separation. Perhaps the same gracious Providence will again indulge me."

When we turn to his first inaugural address, we are again struck with the solemn religious note that marked it. He was obliged to commence a government which had neither an army nor a navy, and lacked either credit or departmental organization. Under these circumstances, it would have been natural if he had made his inaugural address a series of recommendations to Congress as to what should be done to set the wheels of the government into operation. Instead of these recommendations, we find that the first inaugural, one of the noblest state documents of our history, began and ended with what was virtually a prayer to God. In beginning this inaugural, he said:

"It would be peculiarly improper to omit in this first official act my fervent supplication to that Almighty Being, who rules over the Universe, who presides in the councils of nations, and whose providential aid can supply every human defect, that His Benediction may consecrate to the liberties and happiness of the people of the United States a government instituted by themselves for these essential purposes, and may enable every instrument employed in its administration to execute with success the functions allotted to his charge. No people can be bound to acknowledge and adore the Invisible Hand which conducts the affairs of men more than those of the United States. Every step by which they have advanced to the character of an independent nation seems to have been distinguished by some token of providential agency."

He suggested that this recognition of divine aid was a "due return of pious gratitude along with an humble anticipation of the future blessings which the past seems to presage". He added that these reflections "enforced themselves too much on my mind to be suppressed", and added that a "new and free government could not more auspiciously commence".

Then followed some minor suggestions, among others his statement of an unwillingness to accept any compensation for his public services; and finally, as he was about to leave the balcony from which he was addressing the people, he again solemnly returned to the religious note, which he had sounded in his first words to his countrymen as their new President. He said:

"I shall take my present leave but not without resorting once more to the Benign Parent of the human race in humble supplication, that since he has been pleased to favor the American people in forming the government, so His Divine blessing may be equally conspicuous in the enlarged views, the temperate consultations and the wise measures on which the success of the government must depend."

Thus the first official act of our Government, being Washington's inaugural address, began with a prayer and ended with a benediction.

On the conclusion of this inaugural his first act was to come to this historic chapel, and there to prostrate himself before his God in the church of his father.

We can, by imagination, see him now in that pew, clad in a brown velvet suit with his steel-hilted sword by his side, and his benignant head crowned with gray hairs. What his thoughts then were, as he took in hand the helm of the new Republic, we cannot know; but we can readily believe, that as he had confessed his faith openly in the eyes of his countrymen, so again in the quiet recesses of that pew he newly invoked the aid of that God of Nations whose "powerful aid he constantly recognized".

When we picture him in imagination seated within this church from Sunday to Sunday, we again recall the lines with which Longfellow prefaces his noble translation of Dante's Divine Comedy, when he pictures the laborer, pausing amid dust and heat, and laying his burden down, and entering some old world cathedral.

We are living in the darkest hour that civilization has known for many centuries. The times are more portentous than any since Luther nailed his theses upon the door of the Wittenberg cathedral. No one can tell what any twenty-four hours may bring forth. Civilization is trembling in the balance, and if we were to have regard solely to the deductions of reason, the prospects of the conclusive victory for the cause of justice and humanity would seem dark. The night is black, and only the stars of hope seem still to shine in the firmament.

We can, therefore, derive comfort and inspiration from the example of Washington. The task set for this country and her Allies is not as difficult as that which confronted the infant colonies in their almost impossible struggle with the greatest empire in the world. The difficulties of co-ordinating the Allies into an efficient unit is not greater than the difficulty of uniting thirteen discordant commonwealths into an efficient republic. We can take new heart when we recall those dark days of Washington's time, and our hopes may well be stimulated, if we follow this example by conforming the mere deductions of our finite reason to his simple faith in the beneficent justice of God.

The Practice of Faith

By THE REV. R. J. CAMPBELL

ONE of the most significant features of our time is the development both within and without the Church of numerous cults and fraternities of a quasi-mystical character. This was specially marked before the War, and the tendency may have received a cold douche by the horrid reversion to a barbarous type which the War betokens; but it has only been checked, it has not been killed, and to a considerable extent is still flourishing, as many indications show. We have already adverted to spiritualism as perhaps the most notable of the movements in question and typical of them all. It has its votaries among some of the most devout of churchgoers, and it also includes many who repudiate Christianity as a religion and deny the divinity of our Lord. To classify spiritualism as a religion in itself is a misnomer; there is no necessary connection between belief in intercourse with discarnate beings and any particular form of faith. As stated in a previous article, we may admit the genuineness of spiritualistic phenomena without thereby identifying ourselves with a non-Christian or anti-Christian creed. Spiritualism is probably the only one of the cults referred to above which has really gained by the War, and it is easy to understand why. Thousands of aching, hungry hearts, bereaved of their dearest and best, turn avidly to anything that promises assurance that death is not master after all, that love and memory survive his impact, and that communication is possible betwixt hither and yonder, souls still in the flesh reaching out and clasping souls temporarily sundered from them by the thin veil of sense.

Before the War it was different. Not Spiritualism but Christian Science was then in the ascendant; and here again the facts are susceptible of a reasonable explanation. People were not troubling then so much about the world to come as about the worries and troubles of this. They wanted to escape from disease, poverty, inability to succeed in life, vicious propensities—in fine, of all the ordinary causes of suffering and sadness. This was the dominant craving of a restless, overburdened, neurotic age, an age of rush and struggle, of wear and tear, of anxiety and dread. More than in any previous age our troubles were troubles of the nervous system and due mainly to the strain under which we were living and the pace we were obliged to keep up in our daily activities. The nemesis of artificiality had overtaken us, and the very complexity of our industrial civilization was forcing us to seek relief and rest. So, as William James has it in his "Varieties of Religious Experience", the gospel of healthy-mindedness arose in many different forms of which Christian Science was the chief but not the pioneer. Christian Science gained more adherents than the others because it was the most uncompromisingly confident in the application of its principles, and it certainly produced results and is producing them still. If we hear less of it than we used to do it is because the shock of the War has brought home to the people's minds the inevitable limitations of all optimistic systems of belief and practice; they see that there is more suffering than ever in the world, more overt wickedness, more blatant menace of evil, and they feel that somehow the mere persistent assertion of the opposite has failed to justify itself in the presence of hard and terrible facts.

On the other hand the question is worth asking, What was it that gave Christian Science, faith healing, mental therapeutics, and a whole host of similar doctrines, societies, and organizations the wonderful vogue that they undoubtedly had a few years ago and to a lesser degree still possess? It was not for nothing that in every part of the western world circles should thus spring up for the inculcation of a happier and sweeter mode of thinking, feeling, and acting, not to speak of other and more tangible benefits given and received. We may put the answer into a single sentence: it was due to the re-emphasis put upon the power of faith to overcome all ills. There was a note wanting in conventional Christianity—more than one for that matter—and this new uprising of the soul in man supplied it. We had almost ceased to speak of faith as being of any value in the practical affairs of life; we hoped rather than believed, we aspired rather than claimed what was divinely ours. We reduced faith to a religious virtue only—that is, we exercised it in the acceptance of certain propositions about God, sin, salvation, and the like—and even then very lukewarmly—but we hardly dared to apply it to everything that entered into our experience as so freely illustrated in the New Testament. We were not a joyous race, or if we were it was only in proportion as we joined in the secular love of pleasure and excitement supremely characteristic of our time; joy in religion was all but dead. Perhaps we are less joyous than ever now; to many joy may even seem out of place in view of the world's awful woe; perhaps the frivolity of the music hall and the comic opera may be regarded by some as the only alternative to utter depression and despair, though to indulge in it be like a dance with death. It does not follow that they are right. What was and is wrong with us is the loss of triumphant faith, faith immediately related to everything with which we have to do, faith that counts nothing too hard for the Lord and waits moment by moment on His bounty and love.

The Church ought never to have needed outside organizations to come into being to remind her of this and to show her afresh what such faith could do. The root principle of all modes of the gospel of healthy-mindedness is simply an invincible confidence that God is the never-failing supply of every good that His children may need; we have to take it from His hands, and faith is our taking power; that is all, but it works revolutions in the conduct of life. The weak become strong, the weary and heavy laden find rest in the midst of toil and effort, the depressed and anxious and afraid learn the secret of inner tranquillity and peace. There is no sorrow that will not yield to it or at least become transformed and ennobled by its power so that it is no longer sorrow unillumined by hope. And these changes in the inner man have their parallel and expression in the things of outer man also. Doors open at the touch of faith, friends appear when they are needed, untoward circumstances wear a new aspect or vanish away; the sting is plucked out of everything that threatens the soul's well-being. These are not theories only but facts abundantly attested by experience. Faith and fear are mutually exclusive; when one is in the other is out, and when fear goes it takes most other ills with it.

A Prayer for Our Enemies

By THE REV. SAMUEL McCOMB, D.D.

O GOD, to Whom all nations are dear, accomplishing Thy will in divers ways; help us, we pray Thee, to love our enemies and to do good to them that hate us. Have mercy upon them, even as we ask mercy for ourselves. Grant to them and to us an enlightened mind, a zeal for justice and a sincere desire to set aside all pride and vain ambition that they and we may unite in creating a new and better order wherein as brethren reconciled, through Thy Son, we may rejoice in the beauty of righteousness and peace. Turn their hearts to Thee; forgive the wrongs that men have suffered at their hands; quicken their consciences with a vision of the true destiny to which Thou hast called them in fellowship with all the peoples of the earth. So move upon their wills and ours that all hatred and malice may die and that the spirit of love may be born anew. All which we ask in the name of Him Who is the Brother and Saviour of all, Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord.—Amen.

On Training the Clergy—II

By THE REV. JOHN P. PETERS, Ph. D., D. D., Sc. D.

MY own training for the ministry was not obtained in a divinity school of the Church. In those days the General Theological Seminary was a house of darkness, and although my father was a graduate and at one time a trustee, and the dean a very dear friend of my father and myself, we both of us felt that it was undesirable for me to go there. Moreover, I desired to pursue special studies in linguistics, and the one place in this country where I could most nearly obtain what I desired was my alma mater, Yale. We therefore decided that I should continue my studies at Yale, with a view to taking the degree of doctor of philosophy, and at the same time pursue in the best way I could such theological studies as would enable me to pass the examinations for ordination required by canon. I entered the Congregational Divinity School in New Haven as a special student, rooming in the building, and attending such courses as I desired. In point of fact I did follow the whole course in the Divinity School and took most, if not all, of the examinations, although I could not take the school degree of B.D., because under the University law I could not take two degrees at the same time, and I preferred the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. I found that the amount of intellectual and scholarly work required of me to complete the course in the Divinity School was insignificant. I was able, while taking good rank in the school, to pursue all the extra studies necessary for my canonicals, to take the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, to teach for my living, and to do much voluntary, practical, religious work, running a large mission Sunday school and chaplaining the unchaplained State Hospital.

Our professors in the Divinity School ranked high in comparison with other divinity schools, and some of them certainly were very distinguished scholars. For the most part I did not think highly of their instruction in the class room, and I felt that the reason for this was the lack of scholarly response on the part of the students. The interest of the latter was not intellectual but religious, and their time was largely taken up with practical work. Almost as soon as they entered the seminary they began to do some sort of religious work in Sunday schools and missions, partly for the experience, or because of religious zeal, and partly to earn money. Beginning with their second year they began to preach, as they could get appointments in small churches all over the State, certain professors acting as employment agencies for this purpose. What appealed to them most in the Divinity School was such lectures as those of Henry Ward Beecher and Phillips Brooks on preaching, and the weekly gatherings in the chapel, when students read the Scriptures, preached sermons to one another, and discussed and argued about subjects which seemed to them of practical importance for their ministry.

At the outset I must confess that I frankly looked down on my fellow students. After my college experience they seemed to me rather an uncouth set, with very narrow interests and little intellectuality (the same was equally true of the Law and Medical Schools), and I was somewhat ashamed of my connection with them. I learned to change my mind in the latter regard, and on the religious and practical side I gained a great deal from my association with them; but on the intellectual side I obtained relatively little advantage from my divinity course. Had it not been for my relation to the University work I should have gone into the ministry without real scholarly training, one-sided, narrow in my views and in my interests, shut-in and secluded from the larger forces in the life of the world. But while the students in the Divinity School were especially concerned with the practical and religious aspects of ministerial life they received very little training or direction in those matters from or through the class room. The department of pastoral theology was a farce, so far as the work of the professor in that department was concerned. We did, however, have great lectures on preaching on a special foundation, as already stated, and we had the above-mentioned weekly gatherings for preaching and discussion, at which all the professors were present and took part.

Since that time conditions have greatly changed, I am aware, in Yale as elsewhere; and yet, from my experience with curates, I fancy that theological education is still open to some at least of the criticisms which, looking back over my own experience, I am compelled to make of the training which I and my fellow students received in what was then an unusually well equipped divinity school.

I may add that my experience as a professor in the Philadelphia Divinity School, now ancient history, showed me very much the same conditions existing in that smaller and less well equipped institution, only there I saw them from the professor's, not the student's, standpoint. I think that we professors at Philadelphia were a fairly scholarly lot of men, and we meant to do the very best work we knew how. Indeed, I am inclined to think we stressed the scholarly and intellectual side possibly too much, at least I did; but I could not require from my students there the same standards of scholarship which I had required as an instructor in Yale, or as I expected from my students in the University of Pennsylvania. There were a few men from whose scholarly work I derived great satisfaction, and there were a number of men without much previous scholarship to base on who tried their level best to come up to the standards I set. But on the whole the interest of the students was in practical religion rather than in intellectual development and scholarly attainment; and, on our side, to set up such intellectual standards as would eliminate the poor scholars would have been to lose for the Church very valuable material. It seemed better to set a lower intellectual standard and graduate those men into the ministry.

I have said that the interest of students was chiefly on the practical and religious side, but it should be added that the former was partly from compulsion. The necessity of earning money to carry them through their theological education compelled them to accept work in parishes and missions here and there, which often made a great drain on their time, their strength, and their interest. In the school itself we did practically nothing on the side of training them for the administration of a parish, or for the care of souls. We could not even give any real guidance to the men who went out to work in parishes here and there. They were left to their own resources or to such help as they might obtain from the not too numerous clergymen who thought of their interests and not merely of the work they could get out of them. The little that we did do in practical lines was in the shape of lectures and of sermon writing in the department of homiletics.

In the last twenty-four years there have been enormous changes, partly in the idea of ministerial work, partly in educational theory and practice, and the conditions and requirements of today differ considerably from those of a quarter of a century ago. We are in all things at the present moment in a state of change, and that particularly true in the educational field. We are trying experiments in every part, from the kindergarten up to the highest vocational training. We plant one day to pull up the next. We do not know whither we are going, for we cannot yet evaluate the experiments which we have been making.

This comes out incidentally in the article to which I have referred on American, English and Dutch Theological Education by Kirsopp Lake, in the October (1911) number of the Harvard Theological Review, one of the most suggestive articles in the educational field which I have read for many a long day. To deal properly with the theory and practice of theological education, Lake has to begin with the education of the boy, and there he points out incidentally a fact of which we are becoming increasingly aware, that the American child works less than the children of other nations. He has less schooling and less training. Both his school hours and his school terms horter. With our attempts to make study attractive, to nake it a play, we have tended to substitute desserts for olid food. That this is now being felt is plain from the vay in which Summer schools and Summer camps and ll sorts of Summer training are being introduced to pre- ent the child from losing altogether those long months f our inordinate vacations. Similarly in the matter of he daily routine I find in my experience, even among he plain people, that the children are attending all sorts f classes and lessons outside of school hours, by which o a certain extent the lack of schooling in the schools is eing made up. What will evolve ultimately I do not now. I am not a pessimist regarding present conditions, ut I realize that we are in a very experimental state. This is pre-eminently true in the matter of the religious ducation of the children, about which many are inclined o be very nervous. It is only one phenomenon in a arger field. It may be added in passing that for the proper raining for the ministry, as for any other vocation, we eed, first of all, to find the right system of schooling for ur children; and if we are going to have congregations or the clergy to work among when trained, we especially eed to find some way of imparting religious education to he young.

Passing on to the colleges, Dr. Lake points out that ur original system was the English system, on which in he last quarter of the last century, influenced by the train- ng which so many of us received in German universities, ve superimposed the German system. England, as he ays, has the school and college. The English student ursues his general education through school and college p to a relatively late period in his life, leaving little place nd little time for special vocational training. The Dutch nd the Germans on the other hand have their schools, the ymnasium and the realschule, for general training, and rom these schools they pass directly, without the inter- ediary of the college, to their vocational training in the niversities, coming out complete, so to speak, at the same ime that the Englishman takes, and the American used to ake, his college degree. Realizing the need and the value f the German university we superimposed that on the ollege. It has not yet settled into place, but he believes hat it will do so. It seems in fact to be working out omewhat along the lines which I advocated with much nthusiasm a number of years ago, a combination of col- ege and university by which general education shall con- inue roughly through what is at present the sophomore ear, and vocational or university work commence with he junior year.

Dr. Lake points out that the greater attention given o vocational training of all sorts in Holland and Germany s in striking evidence in the field of theology. In Eng- nd a man after obtaining his college degree, at the age t which the Dutch or German student is half way hrough the university, may read theology for a year at he University, which does not seem to be generally ooked upon with favor, or he may go to some one of the mall divinity schools in the different dioceses, where, as Dr. Lake puts it, the teaching is "frankly denominational nd unscientific". "Third-rate theology is taught by sec- nd-rate men to ill-educated hearers, and pupils and eachers between them achieve a certainty of statement which is in inverse ratio to their understanding of the acts." He speaks from personal experience, having him- elf attended Cuddeston, which he says is one of the best f these schools. The Dutch student acquires his theology t a State university, to which are attached also certain rofessors appointed by the different Churches to repre- ent their particular tenets; but theological study there is urely intellectual, training the students as scientific heologians only. "The American system", he thinks, "is he best of the three, or might become so if it were better worked". "Both Dutch and American are incomparably etter than the English product so far as scientific the- logy is concerned, though the average of general culture nd power of expression is higher with the English sys- em than with either the Dutch or the American, and for he general efficiency of the clergy this is a large compen- ation for their intellectual handicap." The important oint is, however, that though the American and Dutch ystems are successful in making scientific students and teachers, they are no better than the English for the suc- cessful making of ministers.

The most interesting part of Dr. Lake's paper to me and that for which I have particularly quoted it, is what he has to say about the practical side of the training for the ministry:

"Preaching or teaching is not everything; there is another side to the professional work of a minister. The great strength of the Roman Catholic Church is that it makes an effort to deal with those who are spiritually sick in the only way in which sickness can be dealt with suc- cessfully—by taking each case separately as an individual problem. I do not mean to suggest that the Catholic method of the confessional is desirable or that the theory of sin and absolution with which it is bound up is capable of intelligent defense, but merely that it gives the Catholic the enormous advantage of taking each case of spiritual sickness separately, while the Protestant tries to deal with all cases en masse in the pulpit. For in any case the treat- ment of these cases must be one of the true concerns of any Christian Church, and neither in England, in Holland, nor in America is there any sufficient attempt made to teach men how to fulfil these duties, which are becoming far better understood by doctors, lawyers and social workers than they are by ministers.

"Exactly how instruction in this matter ought to be given I do not know; but I can see plainly that the lecture room is not the right place, even though a university ought to undertake its organization. It seems to me that we ought to follow the example of doctors. The medical profession gives some of its instruction in the lecture room; but the most important part of it is given in the wards of a hospital. To my mind the most complete analogy to the wards of a hospital is the prison and the penitentiary. It is to these places that spiritual sickness, when long enough neglected, inevitably comes, just as dis- ease in the last resource comes to the surgeon. But the medical student is taught by the surgeon how in many cases this tragedy might have been prevented or mitigated, and men are urged to consult doctors in order to prevent the spready of disease. Would it not be possible for the future minister to be educated on some such lines as the doctor? Show to him and let him study the worst cases of spiritual disease, in order that he may recognize the symp- toms and learn the remedy before it has gone so far in other cases. The work need not be confined to prisons or penitentiaries, for every parish provides some analogues to those who are under medical treatment, and every minister has experience of those who are spiritually sick. But to do this theological schools need the co-operation of ministers. At the present time, from the point of view of education, many of our students are wasting their time and forming bad intellectual habits by 'supplying' pulpits while they are still at the school. The only excuse for the practice is that they need the money; but this is no justification. They ought rather to be attached to large and flourishing churches not as a means of adding to their incomes but as part of their education. It is true that they would often be more hindrance than help to the ministers of the parishes to which they went; but our alumni are very loyal, and we count on their help. Just as practising physicians and surgeons constantly give up some of their time to teaching in the hospitals in our great great medical centres, ought we not to demand from our older ministers that they should contribute to our teaching and allow our students to come and learn from them some of the prac- tical problems which have to be faced by those who are physicians of souls?"

A Prayer for Deaconesses

O GOD our Father, by Whose providence we have been set apart as deaconesses of Thy Church, grant us Thy grace that in singleness of purpose and with a willing mind we may faithfully fulfil our vocation, to the praise of Thy glory and the benefit of those we serve. May Thy Holy Spirit so strengthen our wills and gladden our hearts that neither temptation nor faithless fears shall have power to daunt us, until our work is done and we may await with joy the coming of our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Spirit of the Reformation—II

By THE REV. F. J. FOAKES JACKSON, D.D.

What Protestantism Means To Us

WHAT is Protestantism? The word was applied first to the party of the German princes who protested against Rome at the diet at Augsburg in 1530. For a long time it meant the followers of Luther; gradually it came to mean all those who protested against the claims of the Roman see. Is it the denial of Catholicism? No, a thousand times no. The Protestants acknowledge their belief in the Holy Catholic Church. All they deny is that the term Catholic can be exclusively applied to an organization which exists for the main purpose of serving the interests of a centralized body of clergy in one city in the world. Catholicism to us means world-wide diffusion, not world-wide subjection. We regard all men equal in the sight of God, not all reduced to equality in subservience to the Roman Curia. Are we severed from the Roman communion because our creed is not theirs? It is the same. Because our orders are said to be invalid? The Greek Church has orders so undoubtedly valid that even Rome dare not question them, and is cut off as thoroughly as we are. There are Anglicans who hold views very similar to the Romans on the Eucharist, devotion to the Virgin, prayers for the dead and the like. And what is the attitude of Rome to them? If anything, a trifle more bitter than towards the majority of our communions. It is not too much to say that if the Episcopal Church in this country were to adopt every Roman practice and yet to refuse unqualified submission to the Papacy it would be regarded by them as heretical, schismatic and Protestant.

Till, therefore, the Church to which we belong places itself unreservedly in the hands of the Roman hierarchy, till its clergy take their orders unhesitatingly from Rome, till its laity place themselves under the direction of Roman priests and act, vote and educate their children on lines prescribed by them, nothing they can do can make their Church other than the Protestant Episcopal Church. Not that they cease thereby to be Catholics: for Roman is not a synonym for Catholic, nor is Protestant its antithesis.

You can have unity with Rome tomorrow if you wish it; just as you can have peace with Germany. The price is possibly some hollow concessions for a time, but ultimately complete submission. Till you are ready to pay this you must remain Protestant, fighting on the side of the Allies.

But can the allied Churches themselves, the Greeks, the Russians, the different communions around us, be brought to some sort of unity? Certainly not to any sort of uniformity, nor does it appear desirable. But for a unity of mind we should all strive; and, I confess, I rejoice at the signs of harmony between the once divided Protestant churches in America. The War is drawing them marvelously together. Yes, and the Romans themselves see that in the contest with the temptations to which our young soldiers are exposed all must co-operate. But before we discuss great schemes of bringing all churches together let us see how, in our Church, parties may cease their disputes and work together. Let us take the three and call them Catholic, Evangelical and Modern. I submit that they have all a right to co-exist in our communion, that none have a right to unchurch the other, and that it would be a sad day indeed for our Church that anyone of them disappeared.

The Reformation in England passed through three stages and we are its heirs. Under Henry VIII. the breach with the papacy was made but the whole ancient belief and ceremonial was retained. Here was a Protestant church in so far as the most unhesitating rejection of the papal claim is concerned, its continuity absolutely unbroken. It is of value to us because it showed once and for all that true Catholicism can exist in the West as well as in the East apart from the Papacy. And this idea has never perished in our communion. The best example is Archbishop Laud, who died for the Church on the scaffold in 1645. Whilst he fought with all his might for the Catholic ideal and the unbroken continuity of the English Church he was not only the most redoubtable enemy of the Papacy and labored unceasingly against its machinations; but he devoted his energy to bringing about a reconciliation between the Evangelicals and Lutherans on the continent in the interests of his and their common Protestantism. We have no right whatever to stigmatize ritual, a high doctrine of the Lord's Supper, confession, or indeed any practice sanctioned by antiquity and observed by the great Churches outside the Roman communion as Roman. Laud was no Romanist nor are the so-called high Churchmen who remain loyally with us and are opposed to submission to the authority of the pope —as long as they are genuinely anti-papal they are Protestant.

Later the Church of England was under the influence of Swiss reformers with their simplicity of service, their dread of the Roman doctrine of transubstantiation and of all sorts of formalism in religion. They too have left their successors, but are these going to commit themselves to the suicidal policy of driving good and earnest men out of the Church where they stand opposed to Rome into the arms of the Papacy? If so, they will simply be sacrificing the interests of Protestantism to the ambitions of Rome. They made the fatal mistake once when they allowed the papal cause to be strengthened by the genius of Newman, when they drove him by their clamour out of the pale of the Anglican Church; the sort of mistake which may be forgiven once but cannot be repeated with impunity. Let this, I pray, show by their forbearance that they can maintain the unity of the body to which we belong.

At the end of the seventeenth century the Reformation in England began to recognize the duty of toleration and a new party appeared, of men, learned, moderate, not overzealous, but anxious to recognize as Christians all who acknowledge Christ. These Latitudinarians are the parents of the so-called Broad Church or Modernist party. They have never been numerous and never popular. To this day they are regarded with distrust. But in throwing them over, in calling upon them to leave the Church, in refusing to listen to them, in relegating them to obscurity and ignoring their labors we are in danger of proving untrue to the very elements of true Protestantism. Luther was no Modernist, but he recognized the value of a scholarly investigation of Christian principles. And those who refuse to listen to scholars and investigators are allies of the extreme ultra-montane party of the Roman Church. It was scholarship and free investigation which made the Reformation possible, by breaking down the foundation on which the ancient abuses rested. It was not ignorant zeal which killed the sale of indulgences but the learning of a university professor. I claim no monopoly of learning for the Modernist, but those who study and reflect deeply must offend popular prejudice when they announce the results of their lucubrations. All I ask is to bear with them and help them with your encouragement, for woe to the Protestant cause when it links itself with a degraded form of Romanism in declaring that pious ignorance is the mother of all true religion.

When we Churchmen have recognized the need of unity among ourselves we may apply ourselves to a wider sphere. We are Protestants with an unbroken connection with all the glories of the Church of the past. The saints of the middle ages do not belong to Rome alone, but to us also. Anselm and Thomas Aquinas, Francis and Clare the great minds and hearts of the past are ours also. It is not for us to despise or upbraid those who do not realize that they too can share in these privileges. The and many more are their heritage. Our duty is, while protesting to the last against papal abuse, to unfold the banner of the Catholic faith in the hopes that when the see it other Protestants may rally round it also and we may welcome them as fellow soldiers and comrades.

At the present crisis it has been laid to the charge of Luther that he is in a measure responsible for the crimes of our German enemy, his frantic ambition and his ruthless method of cruelty to gain his end. Against this I wish to utter a protest. The fact is that the Rome which Luther denounced finds its complete analogy in the Prussia whose power we are determined to destroy. Both have sought to exploit the human race for their own private benefit. The object of both has been to impose a Kultur or ideal of life upon unwilling nations in order that they may force them to submit to their dictation. Both have played with consummate skill upon mankind as on an instrument, touching the notes of fear and greed, hope, jealousy, resentment and patriotism. Both have tried to make piety serve their respective ends, have employed spies in every land; have inflamed class against class, people against their rulers, fostered reaction here and sedition there in order to bring mankind under their control. Remember that the Rome of Luther's day was infinitely more evil than it has been since his time and that the veneer of Christianity on the Church in 1517 was nearly as thin as that on the Prussian court in 1917. And ask yourselves whether the spirit of Luther when he made his protest is not akin to that of all true sons of America where they have arisen in their might to pronounce the doom on the secular papacy which the Emperor William desires to set up on earth with what he blasphemously describes as The Help of God.

Church Usage

By PASTOR IN URBE

II—At Morning Prayer

PROBABLY everyone who reads this page will have noticed long ago that the General Confession and other parts of the Church Service which are meant to be said by the minister and people together, are phrased by the use of capital letters. For the dignity and beauty of the Service it is exceedingly important that by pauses before these capital letters, the whole congregation should be kept together. I remember in my boyhood an old judge with a sonorous voice who always kept a word or two behind the others, so that no one who did not know what was being said could possibly have discovered it by the confused rumble and bumble of the otherwise reverent congregation. Occasionally an old clergyman who goes a-visiting can produce in a congregation the same weird effect. But such individualism is now rare. In any case it is seemly that all the people strive to keep together, that the unity of the spirit may be evident. To this end it is wise, in a parish where several clergymen are in the chancel, that the rector when present should always lead in these parts of the Service; thus the "gait" will be one to which the whole congregation is accustomed.

People are shocked when any of the Service is gabbled; they become dispirited when it drags. There is a becoming deliberation which is easily discovered; this is accomplished chiefly by real pauses between the phrases, never by the drawling of words. The Lord's Prayer especially needs these distinct pauses, because no other prayer is so fraught as this with sacred meaning.

In reading the Psalter the minister and the people should pause at the colon in each verse. This produces a certain rhythm, and also serves to keep the people together. The Psalms when read in this way may gain a dignity which is close to music. To stand in a pew next a person who rushes to the end with vacant-minded haste is all that is necessary to create a resolution to keep steady pace with the whole congregation. If the men of the choir are trained to observe the colon, the congregation will follow their firm leadership, and the result will be edifying.

How far should one join in the singing of the canticles and hymns? If there is a good choir it helps most people if there can be a clear distinction what is intended for the choristers alone and what is intended for all. It certainly never helps anyone to have a person in the pews trying to join the choristers in the singing of an elaborate Te Deum or in an anthem. When a voice is quite harsh and untuneful its owner ought to have unselfishness enough to keep silence even in hymns which are intended for the whole congregation. The difficulty is that, as George Eliot once said, if it could speak, there would be two opinions about a cracked bell. When one is in doubt, one should seek candid advice, and so run no risk of making Church worship forlorn for sensitive ears. It is truly beautiful to hear a great congregation sing an old hymn; it is hideous to hear a guttural or rasping voice insisting that it have its part above the melody.

It helps the congregation if the clergyman does not insert the special prayers among the prayers after the Creed, but reserves them to be said at the close of the Service. If we are intent we cannot safely have long periods of unbroken prayer: the mind will wander, and real prayer will fade into mere words. Prayers for soldiers, for the sick, for the afflicted, all gain if they are kept by themselves apart from the general petitions of Morning Prayer.

In one Church which I know it is the custom at Morning Prayer for the rector to remain in the sanctuary after the choristers have withdrawn, as they sing the recessional hymn. The special prayers having been said after the offertory, the recessional hymn follows, and then after the last note has been sung in the distance, the rector says the benediction over the kneeling congregation; so the congregation at length departs with the word of blessing the final thought in their minds and hearts. Meantime an assistant minister has dismissed the choristers with a similar blessing. For both groups the Service ends not in a shout of song but in the authoritative word of peace.

Lenten Reading

vehemently objects, but which their troubled souls desire.

Such a series of readings may start with The Light Within (Longmans) by Dr. Slattery. Here the ascent begins gradually, and we still feel the earth beneath our feet. Then Practical Mysticism (Dutton) and The Mystic Way (Dutton) both by Evelyn Underhill. Here, indeed, are saints and sacraments, but as in a vision. "Life imminent and life transcendent, the Temporal and the Eternal order here comes together; are discovered as the complementary expressions of a Reality which is one. The divine seed within the world, the divine spark within the soul, has been brought forth from its hiddenness. By the resistless alchemy of a courageous and self-giving love it has subdued to its purpose, changed to its very substance, the recalcitrant stuff of the material world. That material world in its wholeness is now seen as the Body of Reality: Eternal Life shines clear through the changeful, perishable life of things." Or, if one prefers, here are saints without sacraments, in Studies in Mystical Religion (Macmillan) and Spiritual Reformers of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries (Macmillan), both by Rufus Jones, himself a Quaker and one of the sanest of our modern saints. Here by a different road, and in different company, one may climb to the same heights and get the same celestial view from the summit. Out of these books the men and women who can endure the climb will come back into "this sorry scheme of things" as the apostles came down from the Mount of the Transfiguration to the healing service which waited for their strengthened hands in the plain below.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

ARCHBISHOP OF YORK WILL SOON ARRIVE IN NEW YORK

Says He Wishes His Visit to Be Largely of a Civil Nature

NEW YORK CITY.—It is veiled in mystery just when the Archbishop of York arrives in New York. It is one of the things the public has learned not to expect the censor to pass. So although his "first appearance" will be in the cathedral pulpit on Sunday morning, March 3, it is understood that he will arrive "some time" during the last week in February.

The Archbishop of York comes to the United States as the guest of the War Commission. He was originally invited by the rector of Trinity parish, the Rev. Dr. Manning, to visit this country as Trinity's guest and to preach for a week in Lent and on Good Friday. This invitation he had accepted before the War Commission plan was made. He comes with the cordial interest of the English Government. He himself says: "I am very desirous of making my visit as largely as possible of a civil nature".

His first public appearance is on Sunday, March 3, when he will be the preacher at the 11 o'clock service at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine here. In the afternoon, at 3.30, he will preach at Trinity church. During that week he will visit Camp Upton, will be the guest of the Pilgrim Society at a dinner on Tuesday evening, will preach at vespers at the General Theological Seminary, will speak at a joint meeting of the Church Mission of Help and the G. F. S. at Synod House, will be the guest of the Chamber of Commerce at luncheon on Thursday, and that same evening will speak at a great Citizens' Patriotic Meeting at Carnegie Hall. On this occasion Governor Whitman will welcome the Archbishop, and the Hon. Elihu Root will speak. Throughout this week His Grace will preach daily at noon in Trinity church.

On Friday His Grace goes to Providence, where there will be a citizens' meeting, a luncheon with the Governor, etc. March 9-12 is spent in Boston under the guidance of Bishop Lawrence. There will be a sermon at the cathedral, a citizens' meeting, a visit to Harvard, etc. On Wednesday, March 13, His Grace will visit Yale University. Thursday is scheduled as a "day of rest". Evidently the War Commission values the Archbishop's health and happiness.

On the 15th the Archbishop goes to Cleveland where he will be entertained by the Chamber of Commerce, and where there will be a citizens' meeting. From the 17th to the 19th he will be in Chicago. The most interesting date on his schedule while there is his address as formal speaker at the Convocation of the University of Chicago. Then comes St. Louis, for the 20th and 21st; Cincinnati for the 22d; another breathing space, and then Philadelphia for the 24th to the 27th.

His Grace will preach the Passion Service at Trinity church, New York, on Good Friday. An informal gathering at St. Thomas' church, when the clergy of the city will have opportunity to meet him, is scheduled for the afternoon of Maundy Thursday. On Easter His Grace will preach in the cathedral at Washington, and will remain at the capital until the 2d of April. Baltimore will welcome him on the 3d. On the 4th he will be the guest of the Church Club in Pittsburgh. Thence he goes to Ottawa, where he will be guest of the Duke of Devonshire at Government House.
